At The Avalon Theatre

The Avalon Theatre, Thief River Falls, has two great show programs on for the week end and Monday.

On Saturday evening Major Bowes' Amateurs Unit No. 12 on Tour will be there on the Stage in person. All new. All different.

This unit will give you a real stage show which you should not miss seeing.

Also there will be a good picture "Desert Gold". This is a Zane Grey story and will be a dandy show in connection with the stage performance the same evening. Matinee in the afternoon, Saturday.

On Sunday and Monday, Clark Gable and Jeanette McDonald will give you a real thrill in the Historical Picture, "San Francisco". This film shows the earthquake at Frisco in 1905 and the picture is as real as if they had been there to take pictures of it.

Two matinees on Sunday at 2:30 and 4:30.

Annual School Meeting

The Annual School meeting of Dist. No. 35 will be held in the Holt School House at 8 o'clock p. m. on July 21, 1935 for the purpose of electing 3 directors and any other business that may properly come before the meeting. The following directors terms expire. O. H. Nohre, Sam Lorentson and H. O. Hanson.

G. Sanoden, Clerk.

Hartley Peterson is busy paintingand decorating the interior of the Lutheran parsonage. He will also paint the outside of the church and parsonage.

Boy Scouts Had Outing

The local Boy Scout Troop No. 112 left here last Saturday morning for a three day outing at Lake Bemidji and Lake Itasca. Melvin Bottem took them on their trip in the canvas covered truck of the Engen Transfer.

They enjoyed swimming, fishing, and boating on the lake and camping at the Diadond Point park in Bemidji. On Sunday afternoon they went to Itasca State park where they were guests at the Minnesota Historical Pageant.

They also saw the the Norwegian Boy Scout Troop from Oslo, Norway who were touring the United States an who were guests of honor at the Pageant that day.

The outing was a success in every way and much credit is due the Scoutmaster, Hartley Peterson and his assistants, Stilaf Andersnn and Joe Moline, who took time off during this busy season to escort the scout troop and make their first outing possible.

They returned home Monday evening feeling fine and happy over the wonderful time they had been treated to on this trip.

The leaders of the troop and the boy scouts extend their heartfelt thanks to all those who kindly donated cash money towards the expense of this trip.

The Viking Diamond ball team cameover here on Tuesday evening and had a dandy game with the local team. The score was 4 and 4 when it got too dark to play off the tie.

Mrs. Victor Johnson entered a hospital at Thief River Falls on Wednesday to receive treatment for chest trouble.

Word has been received here that Mrs. R. A. Holmgren of Glyndon, Minn., won a new Lincoln car at a drawing held by the American Legion at Fargo on the Fourth of July.

Sportsmens Club Meeting

The Holt Sportsmen Club will have a meeting here at Holt on Monday evening, July, 20. Mr. Trost of Warren is expected to be here to outline the program for the Northwestern Association of Conservation Clubs to be held at Red Lake Falls on Monday evening, July 27th at 8 p. m.

All the sportsmen here are urged to be present at the meeting next Monday evening so that delegates to this meeting can be elected.

Something has to be done in regard to our hunting seasons up here and this will be a good time to get such work under way. Come and hear what can be done.

Those who have not already done so are urged to send in their game reports to H. J. Olson, Viking or bring them along to the meeting at Holt as he must have them for the meeting at Red Lake Falls.

Notification July 23

Heat Wave Still On Here

The past week has been almost too much for most of the people here. The farmers have been trying to put up hay but have had to put it off during the day and work a few hours in the morning and evening.

While mowing hay on Saturday. Leo Horien lost a nice four year old horse when he became sun struck and dropped in the field. Several other farmers also report loss of horses in the extreme heat. Monday evening the heat wave was broken here for a short time when this community was treated to a good shower of rain. This did not relieve the situation very much as the heat set right in again after the rain.

Some farmers claim that most crops ase already shot and even the hay will be poor. Late seeded flax they say is getting hit the hardest and will not amount to much this fall.

$1,391,099,397 in '35 Farm Imports

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Agricultural imports during 1935, which saw grains and meats, as well as their by-products and substitutes, multiply again and again under Roosevelt easy trade policies, were estimated here to have reached a total value of $1,391,099,397.

Imports of one item alone—cottonseed oil, a lard substitute—out of a long list, denied opportunity for self support to 403,197 rural persons, by displacing the production of 3,692,000 acres of American farm land. A total of 33,463,336 acres were displaced by all the imports together, with a total of 1,741,000 rural persons denied the opportunity of self-support.

Computing Land Displacements.

The displacement of land is computed from the acreage which would have been necessary to produce the amount of each item imported, if it had been produced in America, rather than by the coolie or peasant labor of foreign countries.

For instance, during 1935, there were imported into the United States 43,242,298 bushels of corn, according to the United States department of commerce. By dividing that total by the American 10 year average yield per acre, it can be shown that the corn imports would have required 1,814,000 acres for their production in this country.

Effect of Pork Imports.

Such estimates of the effect of other items of import are equally revealing. Imports of 5,297,335 pounds of pork, hams and bacon during 1935 displaced the production of 68,070 acres of American farm land. The 27,438,870 bushels of wheat imported could have been produced on 2,220,000 acres here, taking some 61,626 rural inhabitants off the relief rolls.

No Politics in Relief

In Mamaroneck, New York, a relief canvas showed that 24 out of 27 executive or supervisory jobs were held by Democrats. But—Republican voters out-number th Democrats 3 to 1.

U. S. Is Far in Red as 1936 Fiscal Year Closes

WASHINGTON, D. C.—This was the record of the Roosevelt administration as the fiscal year 1936 came to a close June 30:

Spending of 8 billion 793 million dollars during the fiscal year, more than two dollars for every one taken in.

A budget bureau estimate of expenditures of $8,272,554,370 during the new fiscal year, without any alibi such as the veteran's bonus or invalidation of processing taxes.

A federal debt that would be 38 billion 600 million were it not for expert juggling of the figures by the New Deal treasury department, which does not include in its estimate a total of $4,688,733,645 in government guaranteed bonds. Reason given for the omission of the bonds is that some day they will all be repaid, a conclusion which is at least arbitrary.

Local 4-H Club News

The Holt 4-H met at Sunnyside School on Friday evening, July 10th with 23 members and approximately 24 visitors present

Marlan Augustine, Orris Johnson, Marian Larson and Marilyn Oakey were chosen to make arrangements for the 4-H picnic and tour.

It was decided to exchange programs with the Wildwood and Honor Bright clubs. Angeline Ausustine, Lawrence Ring and Doris Larson were chosen as members of the progam committee for these events.

Lunch was served and an enjoyable time had by everyone.

The local mixed kittenball team which won the game played against Grygla at the meeting of the Eastern Council, was scheduled to take part in the county tourament. They did not play, however, because of lack of competitiors. There was only one other mixed team, one from eth North Star 4-H club, and they decided to forfeit the game to Holt. One look was enough.

This team plans to play various games during the summer.

The 4-H enjoyed a picnic dinner at noon. Everybody enjoyed it but it was a trifle warm.

Dance At Holt Sat. Night

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Johnson and family, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Johnson and family, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Fredrickson and family of Thief River Falls, Mr. Albert Fredrickson and Miss Beaulah Bennes were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ole Larson Sunday.

Annual Telephone Meeting

The Annual Meeting of the Farmers' and Village Switchboard Co will be held at Holt, Minn., July 18, 1936, at 8 p. m.

Hartley Peterson, Sec'y.

Many Attended Pageant

Several people from here attended the Historical Pageant at Itasca State park on Sunday. They had a wonderful program for the people but the heat was so bad that most of them had to be on the move in order to keep from roasting in the sun. There is not much shade at the pageant grounds and one has to keep in the shade when the thermometer hits the 100 mark. Most of the people spent their time going and coming from the good flowing wells where they got drinking water.

LANDON DOES IT AGAIN!

Topeka, Kas.—Gov. Alf M. Landon has balanced his budget again! When Kansas closed its fiscal year June 30, there was on hand a cash balance of approximately $1,250,000, according to the estimate of A. R. Jones, state accountant. This is nearly a quarter of a million dollars more than the cash balance at the close of the 1935 fiscal year.

MINNESOTA NEWS

St. Paul—Minnesota was allotted $8,964,375 for work relief projects when WPA parceled out a fourth of the new $1,425,000 relief appropriation among the states.

Sleepy Eye—Charged with selling unregistered profit-sharing securities in violation of the Minnesota blue sky law, Robert Charon and Joseph Salavan of Chicago were under arrest here.

St. Cloud—Close to 20,000 witnessed the annual air show sponsored by the St. Cloud Junior Chamber of Commerce at the A. G. Whitney Memorial airport. Fifty airplanes participated in the stunts, racing, and other events on the program.

St. Paul—Payment of direct relief to veterans receiving bonuses was declared to be an administrative matter to be decided on the merits of each individual ase, in an opinion from state Attorney General Harry H. Peerson. It is not a legal question, he said.

Winona—Weekly barge line service to and from Winona to the Twin Cities and St. Louis by the Federal Barge lines, operated by the Inland Waterways corporation, now is in effect. A towboat from St. Louis stops at the Winona port each Thursday, and from St. Paul each Wednesday.

Moose Lake—Preliminary work on the new state hospital for the insane here will be started as soon as official word of approval of a $981,670 WPA grant has been received, state board of control members said. The new hospital will be a $2,181,670 project if federal funds are furnished.

St. Paul—Award of a contract for manufacture of 740,000 motor vehicle license plates for 1937 to the Gopher Stamp and Die Company of St. Paul at $74,000, was announced by Phil Sundby, state purchasing commissioner. The St. Paul company also had the contract last year for 730,000 plates at a cost of $66,000.

St. Paul—Minnesota general revenue fund is in the best condition in three years, Julius Schmahl, state treasurer, said when he paid off $2,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness leaving the general revenue fund deficit of $3,700,000. A year ago, outstanding certificates of indebtedness issued to provide operating funds in the general revenue account totaled $8,000,000.

Minneapolis — Most newspapers throughout the state are behind the movement to place Bernie Bierman in charge of the All-Star football team which will play the Detroit Lions this fall. You are urged to get your name on a petition at the earliest possible moment to show Bierman your appreciation for the winners he is turning out at the University. See your editor now.

St. Paul—Fewer than five men in American colleges have served agriculture so long as Andrew Boss. None have given more faithful, notable service. Never possessed of a college degree; never absent on sabbatical leave, Dr. Andrew Boss, vice-director of the experiment station and father of scientic farm management, has retired after 47 years' service at University of Minnesota farm.

Duluth—One of the worst caterpillar plagues in northern Minnesota in recent years is at an end, officials of the state division of forestry announced after an inspection trip through the infested area. The insects, known as forest tentless caterpillars, covered a large portion of the extreme northern part of the state, extending roughly from the Itasca park region eastward to Cook county and north into Canada.

Minneapolis—Sightseers who desire to look at the city from the tower of the city hall must leave their cigarets, knives, guns and matches with William Finke, courthouse custodian. Wooden supports of the chimes have been feakened by the name-carving visitors, Finke explained, and it cost the city $5,000 recently to replace them. So, from now on all sightseers will be frisked like customers in a police lineup.

Detroit Lakes—Services paying tribute to the unknown soldier of the World war buried in Arlington cemetery opened the seventeenth annual encampment of the Minnesota Veterans of Foreign Wars. Before a replica of the tomb of the unknown soldier more than 1,000 V. F. W. auxiliary members offered their tribute at services in the high school auditorium. Nearly 10,000 persons attended the encampment.

St. Paul—Immediate placing of 25,000 farmers from the northwest on public works rolls was ordered following a conference in St. Paul of Harry Hopkins, WPA administrator, and federal and state officials from the drouth area. Hopkins said his organizatino would gure on adding that many men over and above the work now being carried on in the drouth area by the WPA, and that the number would vary thereafter, depending on developments.

St. Paul—A $4,750,000 water conservation program through construction of nearly 250 dams is underway in Minnesota under joint sponsorship of the WPA and local and state agencies. The 175 smaller dams are intended to maintain normal levels in smaller lakes for the preservation of fish, fowl and game life. The larger dams aim at flood control, maintenance of a fresh water supply and creation of new lakes. The federal government is contributing $4,000,000 and the state $750,000

Matron's Dress with Vestee

Pattern No. 1907-B

This dress designed with soft capelet sleeves and a contrasting vestee is one of those perennial styles. It is always a pleasure to show by popular request. They're so universally becoming to larger and more mature women, and so adaptable to conventional occasions.

The model shown is a clever street frock which takes into consideration the fitting problem encountered by many women whose tastes incline toward conservative rather than complicated dressmaking. The lines are studied to give slenderness without sacrificing a trim and neat appearance, exemplified in the beautiful pointed up bodice, especially graceful and smart. Sheer cotton, prints and chiffons are delightful for town or country.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1907-B is available for sizes: 34, 6, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50. Size 36 requires 4¾ yards of 39 inch material. Send 15 cents in coins.

Send for the Summer Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

"Pat—" he began, still standing. "I've stumbled on something."

"So I gathered," she observed "And I assume that it has do with your pet murder."

"It has to do with your father."

She smiled.

"I suppose you've discovered that he killed Kelly."

"I've discovered that he called on Kelly that night."

"Wonderful!" Pat mocked. "Who told you that?"

"It was sheer chance," Barry concluded. "I hadn't any idea of implicating your father. But now he is implicated. You must see that."

"At the expense of one equally innocent?"

"What does your father stand to lose by telling the truth? We know now that Kelly was alive when Rogers left the house. I'm just as sure that he was alive when the Judge left. But he must have been killed soon afterward. We've got to find out who killed him."

"Why?"

"Because now we've two men to clear."

"That clears Rogers."

"And puts it up to my father."

"Your father didn't kill Kelly," Barry said. "I know that, and I know why he went to that house."

"Really?"

"He went to protest against filing that Jefferson street decision."

"And then filed it."

"He had to. The pressure was too strong for him. He'd been struggling against it for weeks. In politics, even honest men have to listen to reason sometimes. Your father had to."

"How interesting!"

"In spite of the hullabaloo, he wrote the decision. And, that day, came the bitterest onslaught of all. The Globe made a direct accusation. Your father was frantic. Just before midnight, he telephoned Kelly from the tobacconist's shop, and went straight to Sixteenth street.

"He told Kelly this verdict would ruin him. Might ruin everybody. For more than an hour, he plead and argued. No use. Kelly was adamant. Your father gave up at two o'clock, left Kelly—alive—and filed his decision next morning, before anyone knew that Kelly was no longer alive. That's the truth, isn't it?"

"So plausible that telling it publicly would probably end my father's career."

"And so?"

"And so I think we'd better forget it."

"You mean that, to continue your father's career, you'd let this boy go to the gallows?"

"Of course, I don't."

"There's no chance of that, and you know it."

"There's always a chance."

"We'll face that when we come to it."

"We've got to face it now, Pat."

"Why?" she plead. And then, passionately: "What right have you to demand that we do anything? You don't even know this boy."

"I do."

"Since last—"

That gave her pause.

"Whoever he is, he's got a wife and a baby. I can't risk his life to save you, or myself."

"If he's convicted—" Pat began.

"I won't have him go through that. If the Judge doesn't tell the truth now, I will."

Pat's mouth became a straight, hard line.

"And who'll believe you?" she asked.

"I can prove—"

"Listen, Pat—"

"You listen. I've warned you to stop prying into our affairs. You went right on. And now you—the scum of the earth—"

She was losing her head.

"Now you come into my house with a story vilifying my father and threaten to tell it if we don't. My reply to that is: Go ahead! And, an hour after you do, you'll be arrested for robbing the mails!"

They stood facing each other.

"That letter you opened before Willetts—the letter with the hundred dollar bill — that wasn't addressed to Barry Gilbert, was it?"

"No."

Pat crossed the room.

"I'm sorry," she said, "but you asked for it."

"I did, but I can't take your answer. I can't because—God help me, Pat—I'm in love with you."

She gave no sign of hearing.

"I'm an adventurer," he went on, "and you're a lady. The realest I ever met. That's why you can't do this."

No answer.

"I couldn't," Barry continued, "and I'm a fake gentleman. I wanted to. I wanted to drop the whole business. I told Willetts that after you'd warned me last Friday. And Willetts said, 'That isn't done. A gentleman's got certain responsibilities.' He has. That's a tradition stronger than we are."

Pat turned, at last.

"This is funny," she said. "You—"

"It is funny," he cut her short. "I'd like to behave like a loafer, and I can't. I'm willing to go to jail to save this boy—and I'm the scum of the earth. You're a lady. How about you?"

"If it were only me—" she broke.

"Your father's a gentleman. How about him?"

Before she could reply, the double doors opened.

Judge Hambidge was standing there—erect and soldier-like.

"Mr. Gilbert's right, Pat," he said. "I release you from your promise to me. I can't go through with it. I'm too tired, and full of self-loathing."

He turned squarely to Barry.

"You're right about everything. About my going to Kelly that night, and the reason I went. He let me in himself. We quarreled violently. So violently that he took a revolver out of his desk drawer and kept it in his hand. Then I walked out of the house. But you were wrong about just one thing, Mr. Gilbert. I left the house at two o'clock, but, when I left it, Kelly wasn't alive."

CHAPTER VII

They were a curiously inert little group for a minute or two after the revelation.

It was like a play, Barry thought; curtain down on a climax, and the actors relaxing until it should rise again for the next scene.

Pat turned on him.

"Well, now you know," she said. "You know about us, but remember we know about you, too."

She was herself again; hard and defiant.

Ignoring her, for the moment, Barry asked the Judge, "Do you want to tell me what happened?"

"I wrote my opinion in the Jefferson street proceedings, and then, again as you say, I couldn't go through with it. I'd never done a crooked thing in my life. I don't know how I ever made that speech at the Astor. The instant it was finished, I telephoned Kelly. 'You'd better come down and talk it over,' he said.

"Of course, it would have been fatal for anyone to learn of that meeting. That's why I got out of the taxi at Twenty-third street. As I told you, Kelly admitted me himself. He was drunk, and in a bad temper. 'What's the matter with you?' he asked, when we'd gone into the drawing room. 'White-livered? Here; take a drink, and forget it.'

"There was a bottle on the table, and two glasses. Both of 'em had been used, but he half-filled them, and gave me one. I needed it, but I can't drink Scotch—never could. I told Kelly so, and he blazed out at me. 'You're too good to drink with me—is that it?'

"'No,' I answered; 'that's not it. But I can't hand down that decision. I simply can't, Mr. Kelly. It's rotten, and everyone knows it. I've got the cursed thing in my pocket, and—'

"'And I've got something in my pocket,' he shouted—"

"Father!" Pat intervened.

"For over an hour, I plead and argued. And Kelly kept drinking, and getting uglier. He was a big man, with a bull neck, and huge hands. At last, he said, 'Shut your damned mouth, and get out of here!'

"I said, 'I'm not going.'

"'No?' he sneered, and got up from his chair. He stumbled across the room to a great, old-fashioned desk, and got a revolver. 'Now, beat it,' he yelled, 'and damned quick!'

"'All right,' I said, 'but I won't file that decision.'

"I walked into the hall, and Kelly stood, leaning against the door, with the pistol in his hand, so furious that I half expected him to shoot before I could get my hat. 'You think you can scare me,' he shouted. 'You and The Globe. You think you got something on me. Witnesses. Squealers. Well, I know how to take care of them, by God! Beat it! And, if that decision ain't filed by noon today, I'll—'"

Again, Pat said, "Father!"

"I know," Hambidge interrupted himself.

Pat's admonition had come just in time, Barry thought. The Judge had risen, tense, and so excited that he seemed on the verge of collapse.

"And that was that," Barry calmed him.

"Not quite," Judge Hambidge continued, but in a lower tone. "When I got to the bottom of the steps—the stone steps, I mean—I stood thinking. If I left that way, there was no telling what Kelly might do. 'I've got to go through,' I thought. 'It's ruin either way, but, if I obey orders, ruin only for me. I'd better give in.' I couldn't make up my mind, though. I kept looking back, half decided. And, suddenly, a queer thing happened. The front door swung open."

"I'd shut it carefully," he resumed, "but there it was, wide, almost like an invitation. I walked into the hall. The glass doors to the drawing room were closed, but I could see the light through them. When I put my hand on the knob, the lights went out. I turned the knob, and pushed, but the door wouldn't open. Not latched—it was as if someone was holding it. 'Kelly,' I thought. 'He won't let me in. I've got to act quick now.' Almost in a daze, I wandered up to the avenue. At nine o'clock, I gave the decision to my clerk, and told him to file it immediately. A few hours later, I learned that Kelly was dead. The papers said his body was found stretched across that door to the hall. I knew then it was there when I left the house, and that was why I couldn't open the door."

Pat said, "Are you satisfied?"

"Are you?" Barry asked. "Or would you rather that I tried to find who killed Kelly?"

"What does it matter—" Pat began, hotly.

"I think Mr. Gilbert's answered that question," the Judge interrupted. "We've got to clear young Ridder. At any cost, Pat, we've got to clear him."

"Mr. Gilbert's our friend," her father went on. "He says so, and I believe him."

"What do you want to know, Mr. Gilbert?"

"Five minutes. Maybe, a little more."

"Do you think someone opened it? Someone who, then, went in to Kelly?"

"You mean, the murderer?"

Barry nodded.

"No. That's the last thing he would have done. The door probably didn't latch when I closed it."

"While you were in the house, did you see anyone but Kelly?"

"No. We were shut in together."

"Did you hear anyone?"

"Since you mention it, once I did think I heard the front door close. I may have imagined it, but now I remember Kelly asked, 'Who's that in the hall?' It was about half an hour after we went into the drawing room, and I looked out, but there wasn't anyone."

"He—or she—may have gone into the dining room," Barry said. "Whoever killed Kelly came out of the dining room; I'm certain of that."

"Why?"

"Because the drink Kelly offered you was Scotch whiskey. Was there anything else in the room?"

"If there had been, I'd've asked for it."

"Exactly. And the weapon that crushed Kelly's skull was a cutglass decanter containing rye whiskey.

"In the five minutes you were standing on the pavement," Barry reasoned, "someone came out of that dining room, with that decanter, and struck Kelly. There was no time for a quarrel. That man — or that woman — knew what he—or she—was going to do."

"It's not a criminal's crime, either," Barry answered. "A criminal would have brought the weapon, and it wouldn't've been a cut-glass decanter. A criminal might have worn gloves, to prevent leaving finger-prints. But, since this wasn't a criminal, the fact that there were no finger prints suggests that the murderer just happened to be wearing gloves."

"And men don't often wear gloves on a warm night. Women do. It was a warm night."

"It was very warm," the Judge said.

"You are a shrewd young man," the girl gibed at him. "But your assumptions are ridiculous. Gloves! Anyone might have worn 'em. Anyone might remember the risk of leaving finger-prints, and wipe them off a bottle with a handkerchief. Anyone might've come in through an unlatched door—any time after my father left."

"But," Barry objected, "Kelly was dead then."

"How do you know that? How do we know my father wasn't right when he thought Kelly was keeping him out? All your conjectures lead nowhere, Mr. Gilbert. The only discovery you've made is that father saw Kelly after young Ridder did. And, as I told you that's merely implicating one innocent man instead of another."

"And you—"

"Naturally, it's the second innocent man I care about. Especially since his innocence—of murder—wouldn't keep your disclosures from disgracing him."

National Topics Interpreted

by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Two Platforms

Washington.—As the full meaning of the platforms of the two major party conventions sinks in, certain very definite conclusions cannot be avoided. In each instance, the two old political organizations have moved into virgin territory, entirely new fields.

In the case of the Republicans, their Cleveland convention completely reorganized their party leadership and placed the responsibility in the hands of younger men, casting onto the ash heap along with the old guard leaders, many of the old time conservative ideas.

In the case of the Democrats, their Philadelphia convention virtually created a new party. They went further toward the radical side than they have ever gone before. In no spirit of criticism, it must be said that the Philadelphia convention really gave birth to a New Deal party, as such. The one thing they kept was the Democratic label.

The theme song of the Republican platform was molded out of the fabric that is part and parcel of the younger generation as distinguished from the attitude given birth and promoted and protected by the Penroses, the Lodges, the Smoots and others of that texture. This is to say that the Republican convention, for the first time in many years, has moved its campaign pronouncements out onto something approximating a moral plan, or at least the evidence is they have attempted to do so.

The Democrats, having had ten days between the Republican convention and their own in which to study the Republican document and improve upon it, went considerably beyond their opponents in the language they used. They have made an appeal to the voters of the nation that surely will attract many thousands of voters to the support of Mr. Roosevelt.

On the other hand, the Philadelphia convention proceeded to cast aside many traditions, many principles, which old line Democrats, who love the Jeffersonian theory, regard as their political bible, and they may antagonize that segment of the old party by so doing.

To state the proposition in another way, many observers and political analysts hold that while the Democratic platform contains fewer contradictions than does the Republican pronouncement and that, on the whole, it is a much better written platform, they have leaned so far to the radical side that they are leaving conservative Democrats and old guard Republicans only one place to go—to the Republican candidate. This develops because, in the first instance, the old guard Republicans obviously cannot embrace a Democratic platform which they regard as too liberal and they have no choice but the Republicans. The conservative Democrats will have the choice to make. They can go to the New Deal party or they can remain as old line Democrats and swallow their pride of party affiliation long enough to support the Republican, Governor Landon.

Under Orders

One may look back over the doings at Philadelphia and recognize that the meeting was thoroughly controlled from Washington. That was natural because the party in power obviously has all of the important federal offices filled with its own men. The convention included among its delegates about 64 per cent of federal office holder-delegates.

That explains better than any way I know how the 104-year-old two-thirds rule was so easily abrogated. That rule has been a sore spot in conventions for years. It has many times been the direct cause of bitter convention battles and has bred scores of bitter personal animosities. It was none the less interesting, however, to see the Philadelphia delegates toss out principles of the Democratic party with such utter abandon.

I am convinced that the Democrats have not seen the end of the two-thirds rule yet. There is every indication that it will arise again when the next quadrennial meeting is held. There are plenty of Democrats who believe that the requirement of a vote of two-thirds of all delegates shall be recorded for the man selected as the party's Presidential nominee is a protective measure. But when the convention voted out the two-thirds rule, it took the Democratic party out of the hands of the South.

It seems to me that the Southerners cannot be blamed for desiring to maintain that two-thirds rule. This is their position: through all of the recent elections, the Democratic nominee has begun his campaign with the assurance that 11, 12 or 13 states in the South would give him their electoral vote. He could concentrate, therefore, on the North and the West. The old line southerners have held that since they always supplied from 100 to 140 electoral votes upon which the Democratic nominee could build, they ought to have something to say about his nomination, about the type of man selected. The two-thirds rule gave them a veto power and they have used it many times.

Now, unless the old line Democrats again gain control of the party, the South will no longer be able to sit as the umpire in deciding the type of character of the man who will bear their party label in campaigns.

The question may arise in many minds as to how the rule came to be discarded so easily. Earlier in this report to you, I mentioned that 64 per cent of the delegates to Philadelphia were federal office holders or party leaders selected by the Roosevelt patronage dispensers. The presence of those office holders and party leaders who have been bound to the Roosevelt administration in one way or another constitutes the answer. There were enough of them in the southern delegations to constitute a balance of power on close votes in state delegation caucuses. Hence we witnessed a good many southern states voting to abrogate the two-thirds rule over protests of some of their own numbers.

Quote Jefferson

There is another circumstance about the Philadelphia convention that I believe warrants mention. It may have gone unnoticed generally but just 160 years after Thomas Jefferson drafted the Declaration of Independence, the Philadelphia convention of the Democratic party copied from the immortal Declaration the famous phrase: "We hold these truths to be self-evident."

It was a bold move on the part of the New Dealers to lift that Jeffersonian expression and to place it among the many new theories and new ideals which they advance under the banner of what was the Jeffersonian party. Some observers point out that this action may invite comparison between the political ideals of Thomas Jefferson and Franklin D. Roosevelt because surely there is much more in the Declaration of Independence than the simple expression that certain truths are self-evident.

Talk About Peace

In these days when the world, as well as the American nation, is sorely troubled and disturbed, those Americans who are convinced that isolation may ruin our country, can find little satisfaction either in the Democratic or Republican platforms. This may not seem important until one looks back over the last two decades. Examination of what has happened in that time is sufficient to demonstrate the significance of this isolationist trend by both major political parties.

The Republican plank on foreign affairs has little to say and what it says is chiefly negative. The plank drafted by the Roosevelt administration and adopted by the Philadelphia convention is as nebulous as the milky way. Each platform talks about peace but it is decidedly doubtful that either platform has offered a genuine way to obtain or maintain peace.

It was only natural that the Republicans should restate their opposition to the League of Nations. It was likewise only natural that the Democratic plank on foreign affairs should be full of glittering generalities because it is yet to be remembered that the late Woodrow Wilson has countless followers in the New Deal party who hold the conviction that the League of Nations, with American support, would solve most world problems. It is obvious, therefore, that the Democrats could not commit the party either to League adherence or non-adherence.

Except for the party split over the old Wilsonian policies whose ideals stood as a ghost in the background in the Philadelphia convention, one might have expected more definite declarations from the Philadelphia conclave. For example, the Roosevelt administration has sponsored reciprocal trade agreements. It has broadened American foreign policy in many other ways but some leader in the group that drafted the 1936 platform was smart enough to realize that a declaration on internationalism that was too strong would have brought about a vicious outburst at Philadelphia. In consequence, almost nothing of a tangible character was forthcoming.

Therefore, in summing up, I think it must be concluded that both platforms have been drawn to appeal to Americans as isolationists. Likewise, it occurs to me that the interpretation of their promises and plans and foreign policies by the two contending candidates will be the more interesting as the campaigns proceed.

The Dictator's Job

Dictators have the hardest job in the world, which is to keep on dictating. Sooner or later they are caught in a vicious circle, because people—over a long period—can no more be stopped from thinking than they can be stopped from breathing. A dictatorship tightens and tightens and then either (a) loosens up in order to survive, or (b) breaks down in counter-revolution or counter - dictatorship. In each case the people, to some degree, are thrown back on their capacity for self-government — John Gunther in Cosmopolitan.

BILLY MINK AND BOBBY COON WARN THEIR FRIENDS

BOBBY COON had been so frightened when he had sprung that trap there by the Laughing Brook that probably he would have run clear back to his home in the Green Forest had he not found Billy Mink waiting for him at the old log where they had met earlier in the evening. Billy was grinning.

"What are you running for?" he demanded. "I thought you were not afraid."

Bobby Coon stopped. "It—tried to catch me!" he panted. "It—jumped right at me!"

Billy Mink chuckled. "But I see it didn't catch you," said he. "Didn't I tell you it wouldn't hurt you if you put your paw under it? That kind of a trap is perfectly harmless as long as you do not step in it. I'm glad you sprung it. I sprung the one on the other side of the Laughing Brook the same way. Now, both of those traps are perfectly harmless. They will be until the trapper sets them again.

"Hi, You Fellows!" Called Billy Mink. "Come Over Here!"

"We can go up and down the Laughing Brook through the openings in those little fences with nothing to fear as long as those traps are in plain sight. That trapper will probably come around tomorrow, but for the remainder of tonight there is nothing for us to worry about. Let's go down the Laughing Brook to the Smiling Pool."

The idea of going down to the Smiling Pool was too much for Bobby Coon to resist. So he followed Billy Mink down the bank of the Laughing Brook. When they reached the trap which Bobby had sprung, Billy Mink kicked it aside as he passed. It was plain to see that Billy Mink had known what he was talking about when he said that now that trap was perfectly harmless. Then, without hesitating, Billy slipped through the little opening in that fence the trapper had built. That proved there was nothing to fear there now, so Bobby followed. He had to make the opening big enough to get through, but he did this by pulling up a couple of the sticks.

When they reached the Smiling Pool they saw Little Joe Otter sitting on the Big Rock. Jerry Muskrat was swimming over toward his house.

"Hi, you fellows!" cried Billy Mink. "Come over here. We've something to tell you."

Little Joe Otter dived into the Smiling Pool and he and Jerry Muskrat had a race over to the place where Billy Mink and Bobby Coon were waiting. "What is it you have to tell us?" demanded Little Joe. "I don't believe it's anything important."

"That depends on how you look at it," retorted Billy Mink. "Somebody has been setting traps along the Laughing Brook. I've found three of them, Bobby Coon and I have sprung two of them. We thought we'd just come down here and give you fellows warning." Then Bobby and Billy told Little Joe and Jerry all about those traps.

DOING NOW

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

DIVIDE the week in seven equal parts,
Divide the seven into twenty-four,
And then by sixty, ere the morning starts,
The sixty then by even sixty more—
And yet we think in years, yea, even lives,
When with each second all life re-arrives.

We think in years, who ought to think in these,
Of months to come, of weeks to yet appear,
Delay in days, waste hours, the minute flees,
While ev'ry second life again is here.
We dream tomorrow, plan this afternoon;
It is too late, and now is not too soon.

Live now, do now!—for now is all you own—
Whatever you endeavor, now begin!
Who thinks tomorrow finds tomorrow flown,
The season gone before the seed is in.
They do by doing, and by doing now!

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

GOOD THINGS FOR COMPANY

FOR the busy housewife a meat loaf that may be prepared and served easily is always welcomed and appreciated.

Ham and Veal Loaf.

Mix all the following ingredients and pour into a well-buttered loaf pan: Two cups of cooked, chopped ham, one cup of cooked, chopped veal, three tablespoons of chopped celery, one tablespoon of chopped onion, two tablespoons of chopped pimientos, one teaspoon of salt, one-fourth teaspoon of paprika, two beaten eggs, one cup of soft bread crumbs, one cup of milk and two tablespoons of butter, melted. When well mixed, bake 30 minutes in a moderate oven. Garnish with parsley when serving.

Pear Salad

Use two tablespoons of mayonnaise mixed with one-half cup of celery and one-third of a cup of candied ginger. Arrange eight halves of pears on lettuce and stuff the centers with the above mixture. It may then be topped with mayonnaise.

Mashed Sweet Potatoes.

Take three cups of mashed sweet potatoes, mix with one egg yolk, two tablespoons of butter, one-half teaspoon of salt, one-fourth teaspoon of paprika. Beat well then drop portions on a buttered baking sheet and spread with the stiffly-beaten egg white. Place in a moderate oven to brown. Remove carefully to a hot serving platter and garnish with small pieces of candied pineapple.

U. S. ONLY FIFTH IN WAR COMBAT PLANES

Great Britain Tops World; Germany Makes Strides.

New York.—Although the United States is without peer in speed and efficiency of its commercial airplanes, it ranks fifth among the world powers in the number of combat planes available to the air forces.

Germany shows the most rapid development in combat ships, which classification includes all armed planes, pursuit-fighters, light and heavy bombers, attack, armed scout and observation, armed patrol and transport ships, and all ships in active service.

France Lost in 1935

"The United States, France and Japan lost in the actual numerical strength during 1935," the Aircraft Year Book shows, "but that is not nearly as significant as the fact that in each country technical progress has been rapid.

"France a year ago had many combat planes, but is now devoting a great effort toward modernizing her combat planes. Japan plans to re-equip all squadrons by 1938.

"The United States is still ahead of other nations in technical excellence of its combat planes, but that can be traced solely to the momentum of the past."

With a view toward keeping ahead of other nations in the air, Great Britain is engaged in a mammoth expansion program. Her total combat strength increased from 2,800 planes in 1935 to 3,600 in 1936, with the number including reserves scheduled to reach 4,500 machines by 1937.

Germany Steps Out

Germany, under the Hitler regime, has made great strides with its air force. Early in 1935 only 600 combat planes were available. Through renewed activity, Germany's air fleet was increased during 1935, so that by January of this year approximately 1,600 combat planes were in service. Air Minister Goering plans to have 2,600 ships ready at the end of this year.

Italy is increasing its force from 2,000 pilots, 2,300 planes, and 20,000 personnel in the 1935 regular air force to a proposed 3,500 pilots, 3,000 planes and 33,000 personnel by the end of 1936.

"A fair estimate of Russia's air force," the Yearbook states, "places her combat strength at 4,000 planes by the end of 1936. New bombers, now being delivered to the squadrons, can cruise at 150 miles an hour with 30 soldiers and two tons of bombs, with a cruising range of 1,200 miles."

Beware of Sleepy Auto Drivers, Survey Warning

Los Angeles.—Sleepy automobile drivers cannot see clearly; their notion of perspective is bad, their eye movements slow and their judgment of color erratic.

That was one of the facts developed during studies of the record of the recent 54-hour "open eye" marathon by four University of California students to determine the effects of loss of sleep upon humans.

A considerable percentage of early-morning automobile accidents would be explained by such facts if the preliminary studies of the results are substantiated, according to Drs. Neil Warren and Brant Clark of the university's psychology department.

Students who stayed awake the 54 hours are Fred Thompson, LeBaron Stockford and Frank Friede. Earl Lions, fourth member of the group, was unable to last it out and was sent home before the period ended.

Pastor Confines Talks to Morals Seen in Films

Philadelphia.—When Rev. David Carl Colony, D. D., Protestant Episcopal clergyman, takes the air for his nightly radio sermon, his subject is likely to be Greta Garbo's latest film or the religious moral in a Marx Brothers comedy.

On the theory that 80 per cent of all motion pictures teach a definite moral lesson, Reverend Colony confines his five-minute daily talks to movieland. His method is to review a current film, point out the lesson and trace his premise to a biblical text.

By this procedure, he explains, he hopes to interest some of the 80,000,000 weekly movie-goers in religion, only 10 per cent of whom are said to be regular church attenders.

Camden Claims Oldest Paid Fire Department

Camden, N. J.—Oldtimers here assert that Camden has the oldest paid fire department in the United States. The history dates back to 1869, when the Camden Steam Engine Company No. 1 was formed. These steamers replaced the old hand pumpers of volunteer days, and members of the fire department were paid.

Records reveal that while the firemen were paid, all citizens—men, women and children—were compelled to form bucket brigades when a fire occurred.

Lights of New York

High Hat: The Sixth avenue bus line, late in the evening, gets a heavy correct evening attire trade. It seems that those who seek diversion in the various large hotels in that vicinity choose the busses instead of taxis for home-going, possibly since the fare, no matter how far they travel is only a nickel or, possibly they like company. At any rate, their presence adds a lot of swank to the public vehicles. The drivers, however, instead of rejoicing, are apt to do a bit of grousing when questioned about the matter. It seems that those in soup and fish uniform expect taxi service from the bus line. Naturally, a driver, piloting the bus and its cargo between elevated railway pillars, collecting fares and trying to get to the end of the route before 22 minutes have elapsed, has other things on his mind. So the well dresed make complaints. That some are extremely trivial doesn't ease the feelings of the drivers in the slightest. That being true, they prefer the proletariat which pays its nickels and lets it go at that.

In some of the establishments, there is a preference for caviar, both red and black. In others, cute little sausages on toothpicks are considered quite the thing while at least one mid-town place specializes in miniature hot dogs in miniature rolls. The cocktail bar of one of the hotels sets out such a variety that a hungry patron is able to enjoy a fish course, a meat course and a vegetable course with a bit of cheese as a dessert, the whole being carried about on silver trays by white-clad servitors. And thus is the old-time free lunch duded up to meet modern requirements.

Illusion Turned Into Fact: Fifi D'Orsay, screen and stage star known generally as a French comedienne, has never been any nearer to France than we have been to collecting the French war debt. She was born in Canada and as is Ethel Merman, is a former stenographer. Incidentally, George Givot, the Greek ambassador of the radio, is Jewish. Emile Boreo, portrayer of French roles, is a Russian, while Igor Gorin who sings all those romantic songs won't have anything to do with romance because he holds it would interfere with his career.

May God Bless Her. She and her husband have been married more than 60 years, yet she still looks young. Maybe that is because she is so full of life and so deeply interested in life. Her church, her club, her wide circle of friends take much of her time; nevertheless, she continues to make a home, a real home. Before he was of school age, she taught her oldest son to read, then led him to good books and in later years, encouraged him on when his wings were weak. To her, he owes a great debt. It's her birthday today. Many, many more and all of them happy, mother.

Beauty

In the elevator of a big store she noticed a very attractive poster advertising beauty treatment. Out of curiosity she asked the elevator attendant (a funny little Cockney) where the beauty parlor was.

He turned and gave her a good look, noticed presumably that she did not use make-up at all, and then said, "You don't want ter go there mucking your face about. Why not stay as y'are—plain but 'olesome?" —Troy Times-Record.

Truss It

She had just begun housekeeping, with the laudable intention of paying ready money upon all occasions, and she entered a high-class poulterer's shop to purchase a chicken.

"Trussed, madam?"

"Oh, dear, no," she indignantly replied. "I wish to pay for it now." —Sydney (Australia) Hail.

Lady's Choice

By SCOTT RYALL

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

MARTHA GRAY looked at the two young Union soldiers. "Remember," she reminded them, "I'll marry the one who proves the bravest."

Joe Brady was big and handsome, and a lieutenant. "Fair enough," he said grinning and turned to Andy, "I hope you'll be my best man."

Andy Tait, only a sergeant and just as handsome, grinned, too. "Certainly, Lieutenant. Whom are you going to marry?"

They marched away to the stirring strains of the town band. They endured two years of mud, rain, heat, beans and bullets. Then they came back, each determined to claim the hand of Martha Gray.

Both had been cited for bravery. Both now were captains and both had been wounded. Andy Tait, however, was unfortunate in his scar of war. He hadn't realized a Confederate sniper was hidden in a barn. He had been too interested in quenching his thirst with the clear, cold water of a Virginia well while they were with Grant's forces.

Andy had bent over to catch the cool reflection down the shaft and at that moment he caught a bullet. The wound caused a slight limp. While he walked with some difficulty, he sat down with much inconvenience.

• • • • • • •

The two soldiers were welcomed with a dinner at the town hall from which few were absent.

Martha Gray was there, her face flushed and looking more than ever a prize for the better man. Joe gave them all a round history of his part in the war, after they had polished off a good dinner.

The crowd called on Andy for a speech and he stepped from the corner where he'd been standing in melancholy seclusion.

"I guess, friends," he said haltingly, "I ain't a speech maker. All I can say is, it was quite a war. Thank you."

Joe was hilariously happy. He looked at Martha Gray in the front row and winked broadly. Andy saw the wink too and took the opportunity of reaching Martha's side while Joe was in the midst of an admiring group.

"I couldn't tell them about it," he said, flushing hotly. "Just you, Martha. We're both holding you to your promise."

"Certainly, Andy. The truth is—" she stopped in embarrassment. "Well, I—I don't know what to decide. There doesn't seem any difference between you. You're both brave. But I can't marry you both."

Joe was approaching as she finished. "No need," he boomed heartily, "no need ay-tall. You think I told them all about the war but I ain't said nothing yet! At Gettysburg—"

"Suppose," she said, intensely embarrassed by more than one neighborly ear bent toward them, "both of you boys come to the house this evening.

In the evening Joe wasted no time in coming to the point. He made himself at home and altogether appeared a fine prospect for a husband as he sat by the fire, legs crossed, nursing his wounded shoulder just obviously enough to call for attention.

"At Gettysburg," he said, "we were charging a nest of field artillery. There were bullets flying all around. One of them hit my shoulder. I was so intent on getting that gun emplacement, I didn't notice it."

"I'm so glad," she murmured happily, "that neither of you was seriously wounded. I've wondered and prayed for your return."

Joe expressed his thanks for that and turned to Andy. "Let's see," he said maliciously, "where was it you got your wound, Andy?"

"I guess, Martha," Andy said slowly, "I'd just ruther not talk on it."

Joe smiled victoriously. He leaned back in his chair and seemed generously inclined toward the world. Martha was obviously perplexed. "But, Andy," she objected, "you boys want me to make a choice tonight. How can I? You both were cited for bravery, both made captains, both wounded—"

"—capturing gun emplacement," murmured Joe.

Andy flushed miserably and said harshly, "I didn't do anything worth talking about. Or I can't put it into words. I was in the same battles as Joe and when he was capturing guns, so was I. As for wounds"—he glanced at Joe in the chair comfortably nursing his shoulder— "I don't think they have anything to do with courage."

"You mean I must answer tonight?" she asked, and Joe nodded. "Well, you're both brave and fine soldiers. There is only one difference in the world," she said, and Joe leaned forward gleefully while Andy gave no indication of sensing the fateful decision. "One is a nice boy but he's done little except boast. The other has borne himself modestly all evening, like a gentleman."

She looked at one apologetically. "I'm sorry. But you see it does make a difference. You insisted, Joe, so I'll have to make my choice. If you'll kindly go now. We have some things to talk over — Andy, and I."

Danzig Crisis Worries Nations of Europe

WAR-WORRIED Europe shifted its anxiety from the Italo-Ethiopian sanctions problem to the newer and baffling question of what to do about the Free City of Danzig now seeking to free itself from the bonds of the League of Nations.

Adolf Hitler

The league disposed of the sanctions problem by voting to abolish them, thus to all practical intents and purposes removing Ethiopia from the family of sovereign states. Appearing personally before the league assembly, the refugee emperor, Haile Selassie, made a last moving bid for Ethiopia's freedom.

The "king of kings" denounced France and Great Britain without mentioning their names. To the generally expressed desire to reform the league, he said the weakness was not the league covenant itself, but a lack of international morality. The Negus' request for a loan of $50,000,000 to Ethiopia was voted down. Previously Haile had informed Capt. Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, that he would return to Ethiopia immediately to join his loyal tribesmen and fight for Ethiopian independence.

With Mussolini given satisfaction, the Danzig situation brought into the foreground the figure of Adolf Hitler, chancellor of Nazi Germany. It was a Nazi follower of Hitler, Dr. Arthur Greiser, president of the Danzig senate, who demanded independence for the former German city now surrounded by Polish territory and who denounced the league and Sean Lester, league high commissioner for the port.

Observers were of the opinion that Greiser was acting under orders from Chancellor Hitler. In view of Germany's expansionist program and its rearmament, they feel that Danzig will be the next Nazi objective now that the Rhineland is remilitarized. By the elimination of Commissioner Lester or by the curtailment of his authority over the international affairs of the city, it is believed the Nazi would be in a position to crush the opposition party and pave the way for annexation of Danzig by Germany. In the event of a Nazi putsch on Danzig, it was believed that Britain and France would co-operate in opposing it.

July 4th Celebrations Cost 346 Lives in U. S.

A TOLL of 346 lives was exacted in the celebration of the Fourth of July throughout the United States.

Booming cannon crackers played a comparatively innocent part in the slaughter, for only 11 lives were lost in accidents due to firecrackers.

But if the nation heeded warnings about the danger of fireworks, it forgot the menace of motoring accidents, for 208 people in 36 states were killed as the result of accidents on streets and highways. Ninety persons were drowned in 36 states. Miscellaneous tragedies accounted for 37 additional fatalities in 15 states.

Not since 1931 has the celebration of America's patriotic holiday claimed so many victims. In that year the death total from accidents reached 483.

Roosevelt and Landon Return to Their Desks

THE Presidential candidates of both the Democratic and the Republican parties returned to their desks in their respective capitals following absences.

President Roosevelt came back to Washington after a three-day pilgrimage to Virginia. Included on his program was the dedication of the Shenandoah National park, his Fourth of July address from the portico of Thomas Jefferson's home at Monticello and his visit to Williamsburg, capital of the Old Dominion from 1699 to 1779. In his address at Jefferson's home, the President called on the nation to rekindle the "sacred fire" of "true freedom" which had lighted the "golden age" of American history. He declared the present emergencies require the same leadership as that displayed by the founder of the Democratic party.

Gov. Alf. M. Landon returned to Topeka, Kan., after a vacation in the Colorado mountains, for the reconvening of the state legislature and for the acceptance speech at the Republican notification ceremonies July 23. National significance was attached to the meeting of the Kansas legislature because of the fact that it would have to deal with old-age pensions, unemployment insurance and general social welfare legislation and that an amendment to the state constitution was in prospect. Discussions of the farm problem and conferences with Governor Landon's political advisers were on the program. The Republican standard bearer was not expected to return to Colorado until after the notification ceremonies.

President Roosevelt summoned Democratic National Chairman James A. Farley to Washington for a conference on the political campaign. It was expected that the question of Mr. Farley's retirement from the cabinet about which there has been considerable rumor lately, would be decided. The Democrats have established national headquarters at the Biltmore hotel in New York and it is from here Chairman Farley will direct the campaign.

John Hamilton, national chairman of the Republican party, opened national headquarters in Chicago. He addressed 2,800 banqueters at a dinner in his honor and declared that the reaction of voters in recent days has been disheartening to the Roosevelt administration. Since the Cleveland convention, he said, the Democrats had offered the Republicans the "sincere flattery of imitation."

Pope Pius Orders World Censorship of Movies

A WORLD censorship on movies was ordered by Pope Pius, in an encyclical letter addressed directly to the bishops and archbishops of the Roman Catholic church in the United States.

Pope Pius

The pope also ordered bishops throughout the world to obtain from their communicants annually renewable pledges "to abstain from witnessing bad films." The encyclical of his holiness was addressed to the American bishops because they originally took the lead in movie censorship. He invited bishops of the entire world to follow their example.

To carry out the plan of censorship, the pontiff directed that a permanent national movie reviewing office be established in each country. He urged the exchange of information between the various offices for making the censorship effective. He urged bishops to appeal to Catholics connected with motion picture productions to use their influence in accordance with their faith and ideals.

Labor Leaders Begin Drive for Steel's Unionization

WITH labor organizers spreading throughout the nation's steel mills in a drive to enroll 500,000 workers into one big union, the National Labor Relations Board reopened a fight in the courts to force steel companies to accept the National Labor Relations act as a means of keeping peace.

The board announced it had petitioned the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans in a new effort to enforce the act.

Meanwhile the full resources of the $5,000,000,000 steel industry were marshaled against the unionization drive. Observers pointed out that the situation was fraught with grave possibilities, of industrial warfare. Principal steel companies who have banded together in a militant effort to maintain the open shop warned employees not to be "misled" into affiliation with the Amalgamated Iron, Steel and Tin Workers Union, which forms the basis of organized labor's drive.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and head of the committee for industrial organization, in a radio address broadcast from Chicago entitled "Industrial Democracy in Steel," sought the support not only of union labor, but of the public generally in his crusade.

Breckinridge Long Resigns as Ambassador to Italy

BRECKINRIDGE LONG, American ambassador to Italy, submitted his resignation to President Roosevelt because of illness. The diplomat declared that he hopes to recuperate his health during the summer and to take an active part in the Presidential campaign in the autumn.

Mr. Long's place will be taken by Undersecretary of State William Phillips. He will represent the United States government in Rome in an effort to solve Italo-American problems arising from Mussolini's conquest of Ethiopia.

Mr. Phillips has had a distinguished career in the diplomatic service. He has held posts in Europe, the Far East and Canada and has three times been sub-secretary in the State department.

Walker an' Bartell Have Own Opinions of Squawks, Hexes

IT IS long past midnight at the sign of the Toy Bulldog. The boys who have been cutting up old touches get around to the twin subjects of squawks and alibis. Since this is a prize fight crowd the debate is loud and long. Mickey Walker, who has been listening quietly, now grins and saunters over to the table.

"Maybe there's a time and place for everything," suggests the squat little man who used to ask nothing of giants save that they keep on swinging. "For instance, did I ever tell you about the time I fought Dundee?" He grins again at the memory of the night.

"Well, anyhow, Joe smacks me so hard over one eye that I lose the duke and have to go to the hospital.

"Naturally I'm weighing in with some man-sized beefing because it hurts plenty. All the while, too, I hear a guy on the next table sort of growling, but I don't figure he's got any cause to be sore at me and so I don't pay much attention to him. Instead I just lay there and every time the Doc purls one on the next row I let out another yelp.

Mickey Walker

"All of a sudden the guy on the next table bounces up so's they've got to stop operations on him.

"'Say you,' he says to me. 'You know what I'm in here for. Well somebody bounced a bottle off my conk and I've been stretched out here for almost an hour while they've been digging glassware outta my dandruff. That's what they've been doing. Here I was out for a bit of fun and wasn't harming nobody.

"'—an' you,' he says. 'Getting hit is your racket, ain't it. An' you got paid 10 G's for tonight, didn't you? Well, then, what right've you got to squawk?'"

• • •

"You oughta done it," he says. "You—."

"Yeah," says the shortstop. "But I didn't have time. I was——."

"It makes no difference," the veteran coach abandons such feeble medium as a long finger and spreads both arms in eloquent gesture. "How we gonna win. How we——."

"Well, I got warmed up anyhow, didn't I?" Bartell's life is built on the theory that a good attack is the best defense. So he plainly is out of his element now. Nevertheless he tries gamely to cover up.

Bartell

"You warm up! Huh!" Luque sputters feebly with the English idiom for a moment, relieves himself with rippling Spanish phrases and then returns to the language by which he may be understood. "Three weeks you warm up with me, hey? Three weeks you get hits. You warm up with me today. No. Well, then how you expect to——." He shrugs his shoulders that speak volumes. Then sinks down on the bench overcome by the futility of it all. He becomes as silent as he had been loquacious.

Bartell is not a superstitious lad. He knows that a bat is of considerable more assistance than a rabbit's foot when you are up there cutting for base hits. So he grins at this notion.

The first game starts. Magicians pop up from nowhere to snare hard-hit line drives. The Giants lose that one. The second game starts. A sturdy little fellow continues to slap line drives that should be good for extra bases. They continue to be caught. The Giants lose that one.

When old man Luque comes down the clubhouse steps the next afternoon a blond little fellow is waiting there, ball and glove in hand.

"Hey, Adolf, catch," he calls. "I've been waiting here 10 minutes. How do you expect me to get warmed—."

Conscript the Men

A clergyman in a Midwest town, just before service, was asked to marry a couple. He explained that here wasn't time for the ceremony but said he would perform the ceremony if the couple would be seated and wait till the end of the service, to which they agreed.

At the proper moment the clergyman said: "Will those who wish to be united in the holy bond of matrimony please come forward?"

Whereupon 13 women and one man proceeded to the altar.

THERE is a reason why Louis Meyer won the 500-mile Indianapolis race this year—and why he is the only man ever to win this gruelling race three times. He always used Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires, and never experienced tire trouble of any kind.

Louis Meyer knows tire construction. He also knows that to drive for 500 consecutive miles over this hot brick track, negotiating the dangerous curves 800 times at the record-breaking average speed of 109 miles an hour, requires tires of super strength and greatest blowout protection, as a blowout on any one of the dangerous curves would likely mean instant death. By the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process every cord in the tires on Louis Meyer's car was soaked and coated with liquid rubber, thereby preventing internal friction and heat. This is the secret of the extra strength and reserve safety built into Firestone Tires.

You of course will not drive 109 miles per hour, but at today's higher speeds you do need tires that will give you greatest blowout protection and will stop your car up to 25% quicker. Take no chances! Let your Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store or Firestone Dealer equip your car with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires, the safest tires built. It costs so little to protect lives worth so much!

"Death Ship"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

GET ready for action. Here comes Distinguished Adventurer Hobart N. Deane of New York city, and he's bringing with him a tale so packed with thrills that—well—I didn't know whether I was coming or going when I read it, and I'm betting you won't either.

It took place on a ship called the S. S. Barstow, a gasoline tanker, anchored at Fort McHenry, just outside of Baltimore, Md. You could go through all the harbors of the world looking for that boat today, and never find a trace of her.

She just ain't any more. By the time Hobey Deane got through adventuring with her, there wasn't enough left of her to pick your teeth with. That's the story.

It was February, 1918, along toward the close of the World war. Hobey and his shipmate Al were in the merchant marine in those days, and the Barstow was the ship they were working on at the moment.

Hobey's Adventure Starts With a Boom!

Hobey's adventure started with a big BOOM! Yes, I mean that literally. Six or seven sailors were sitting in the mess room about three o'clock one cold February day, when suddenly there came the sound of a loud explosion. Along with it came a shock that seemed to lift Hobey right out of his clothing. He jumped to his feet and ran to the deck, with the rest of the gang right on his heels.

"We arrived on deck," says Hobey, "in time to see a big gas ventilator from the forward tank land like a rocket in a heap of barreled oil that was piled up on the dock, ashore. At the same time, a sheet of flame several hundred feet high shot out of our forward tank. Thousands of gallons of naphtha were ablaze."

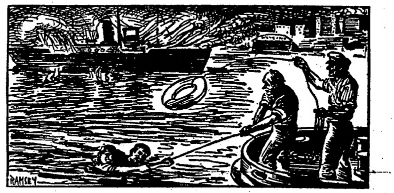
Down on the dock, some of the crew were casting off the ropes. A tug came alongside and began to haul the Barstow out into the bay. About a third of the way out, the tug's captain decided it was too risky for him to stick around any longer, and beat a retreat without taking the trouble to ask the men aboard the Barstow if they wouldn't like a ride back to shore.

Two Heroes Sacrifice Their Lives Courageously.

"There were about twenty of us aboard," says Hobey, "and from all appearances we were in a swell way to be blown to chop suey. We were about to get in when it occurred to us what might happen if the ship drifted in close to land and went up.



The Exhausted Men Finally Reached the Tug.

"The boatswain and his storekeeper, two heroes if I ever saw any, went forward and released the anchor. But on the way back there was another explosion and they were blown to bits. The magazine where we kept the ammunition for our anti-submarine gun had started to go up, and it had taken the boatswain and the storekeeper along with it."

After that, the ship got too hot for comfort. Shells meant for submarines were whizzing from that burning magazine in all directions. The crew made a run for the lifeboat—and just as they reached it, a shell hit it and blew it to splinters. "Believe it or not," says Hobey, "but neither Al nor I were touched by the flying debris. By this time the whole fore and midships were a mass of flame.

Al and Hobey Leave the Floating Bomb.

"It was raining molten metal, chunks of iron and steel and pieces of timber. Al and I and a deck boy made our way back to the stern and, after a conference, decided to jump. We hadn't much time to lose. Even then the ship seemed to be swelling beneath our feet like a giant bomb."

Hobey couldn't swim a stroke, but Al told him to jump, and he'd bring him to shore. The deck boy hesitated until Al assured him he'd be right behind. Then he dove into the icy water. "Al and I waited for him to come to the surface," says Hobey, "but the seconds became minutes, and he didn't show up.

"We never saw him again, and I have never felt so desolate in all my life. But life is sweet, and I realized that no matter how slim my chances were, they were better in the water than on the Barstow. The nearest life preserver was below deck, and by this time, burnt to a crisp. I had to depend on Al."

Tug's Skipper Gambles to Help in Rescue.

Well, sir, Hobey took the plunge. The shock of the cold water numbed him, and he thought he'd never come up. "I didn't much care, either," he says. "But I hit the surface at last, and Al had a hold of me before I knew it. I grabbed his shoulder with one hand and paddled with the other and we set out for a tug that was lying a thousand yards away.

"It seemed we were moving at a snail's pace. We got some distance away from the ship, but I could see the February water wasn't doing Al any good. He was fagged out. My heart and lungs felt as if they were in a steel vise. I was done. All I wanted to do was let go and rest."

Hobey was right. Al WAS fagged. He stopped swimming and began to tread water—shouted to the tug for help. The tug's skipper knew it was dangerous to go any nearer to the burning vessel, but he took a chance. "They came at a good clip," says Hobey, "but it seemed forever before a couple of husky seamen got hold of us and lifted us up onto the deck."

Hobey says he'd like to end his story by saying both he and Al got pneumonia. But they didn't even have a cold the next day. The Barstow, though, didn't do so well. She burned to the water's edge.

Hypnotism Long in Use for Medical Treatments

Psychologists in universities, while investigating the mechanism of the human mind, often employ hypnotism to bring to the surface its hidden workings, while physicians have legitimately used it many times in making cures of certain kinds of cases—such as drug addiction or alcoholism.

Hypnotism is not a mysterious force flashed over hundreds of miles by the power of some dark hypnotic eye, writes Prof. A. H. Estabrook in the Scientific American. A hypnotized person is much like one who walks in his sleep. If you can find such a person and start a conversation without waking him, you are in touch with the sub-conscious mind of one who is already hypnotized. The unconscious mind is in control of the body. In the hypnotic trance, however, the unconscious is also in touch with an operator. This accounts for the curious results obtained, for the unconscious is very open to suggestion and has a remarkable power over the entire body.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Haile's Private Treasury

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—Had it not been a foreign dispatch, a fellow might have thought it referred to one of our own investment councillors, specializing in looking after widows' and orphans' funds, and having a neat line of European securities to dispose of, and prominent in welfare work and uplift movements in his home community—in short, a typical specimen of a sub-variety that seemed to sort of peter out in the years immediately following 1929, some quitting by request, some by indictment and some just vanishing into space, taking with them the clients' remaining cash assets, if any.

Irvin S. Cobb

But this happened to be a cablegram from Geneva stating that, when Emperor Haile and Farewell Selassie hurriedly departed from his capital, he so thoroughly cleaned out the bank of Ethiopia that all the invading Italians found in the vaults was a large throbbing vacuum.

How Mencken Can Write

THIS campaign will liven right up if Henry Mencken, the official human gumboil of the writing craft, takes pen in hand to discuss the men and the issues. You don't have to agree with Hen. You may quarrel with his premises and dispute his conclusions.

But can he make the language pop like a bull-whip! When he gets excited he throbs like a mashed thumb, and cuts loose like an avenging angel. Expressing himself, he always picks words of the right shape and the right color.

Literary Garbage

LET'S admit that southerners of the Col. Carter of Cartersville type were mainly the far-fetched creations of overly-sentimental fictionists. Let's admit the business of painting a largely imaginary aftah-de-wah south was for many years crowded.

But why, in the revolt to debunk this sugary romance, should the land so generously spawn a crop of alleged realists who'd have the rest of the world believe the only part of the south worthy of being written about is almost exclusively peopled by loathsome degenerates of the "Tobacco Road" variety?

If one of these literary garbage collectors will but look about him, he'll find southerners who might make interesting copy and yet, excusing that they leave the sugar out of the corn bread and the lower case "r" out of the language, are pretty much like the run of their fellow Americans elsewhere.

Gas Station Service

AN OPEN letter to the gasoline companies;

Dear gasses—Why must the customer have the windshield wiped—if he doesn't want the windshield wiped?

Maybe he's in a hurry. Maybe he fears the youth with the squirt gun will only mess up the windshield worse than ever. Maybe he's nervous and prefers a blurry outlook so he can't see how many close calls he's going to have from being knocked cold by lady motorists.

Even so, unless he fights like a tiger, he must endure the windshield wiping. I commend the politeness of your attendants, though deploring their frequent habit of apparently going somewhere about a quarter of a mile back of the station to make change. I admire your enterprise and your pumps are indeed works of art. Your highway signs so fill the grateful eye that we don't have to look at comparatively dull things, such as scenery. But my dear gasses, there comes a time when too much service becomes a nuisance.

Heroic First Aid Measures

WHEN those three gallant men were imprisoned in that Moose river mine cave-in up in Canada, facing death in the darkness—one of them you'll remember, did die—and the rescuers finally bored a slender shaft through to their living tomb, almost the first thing sent down from above was some hot coffee with a slug of brandy in it.

Now the Rev. A. A. McLeod has formally protested to the government of Nova Scotia about putting in the brandy.

So I've been sitting here all day trying to make up my mind, if I'd been buried in that freezing, slimy pit, which I'd prefer—to have 'em send along some spiked coffee right away or keep the mixture up on the surface and lower the Rev. A. A. McLeod with a pitcher of ice water.

Cherry Pie Made From Home Canned Cherries Cannot Be Beat

It's Time to Preserve Your Quota of the Delectable Fruit.

By Zella Hale Weyant

If you are lucky enough to have a few cherry trees of your own, or if not as you shop in the market or drive in the country we know you have watched the arrival of the cherries. Something about their bright red color and tart flavor appeals to all of us. They seem to be the "spring tonic" for which we have been waiting.

Cherries belong in the acid group of foods and are very easily canned. They may be canned with or without pits. However, most homemakers prefer to pit them because they lend themselves to a greater variety of ways in which they may be served. And now for a small amount a cherry pitting machine may be purchased. The cherries should be stemmed and washed before pitting so that none of the good juices of the cherries are lost during the pitting process.

Because of their acid content the color and flavor of the canned cherries will be better if they are processed in the hot water bath, and in order to carry the canning procedure through without delay, it is always best to assemble the canning equipment before the work on the fruit is begun. See that all the necessary pans, knives, spoons, to be used in cleaning and preparing the cherries are clean and ready to be used. Have the water bath canner on the stove and enough water in it to cover the jars at least one inch over the top. The water in the canner should be near the boiling point before the jars are placed into it for processing.

Also collect and inspect the jars and caps that are needed for the canning. Be sure the jars are free from nicks, cracks and sharp edges that would prevent a seal. Remember to have a sufficient amount of jars and caps on hand to complete the canning. The two-piece "self-sealing" caps will require a new lid and the screw top caps a new rubber ring. And again we present the simple rules for correct use of each type of jar cap: When using the two-piece "self-sealing" cap, place lid on jar with sealing composition next to the glass and screw the band firmly tight. If using the wire-clamp glass lid jar, place glass lid and rubber ring on jar and put the upper bail in position across the glass lid. If using the zinc top cap, place rubber ring on jar and screw the cap down, then turn back quarter inch. On the jars using the rubber rings, the seal is completed as soon as the jars are removed from the canner. The self-sealing can requires no further adjusting at the end of the processing period, but is simply removed from the canner and set right side up to cool.

The home canning of such fruits as cherries is so easily done that even a novice may be assured of success if proper canning procedure is followed along with these tested recipes:

Cherries (Cold Pack)

Wash, stem, pit if desired. Pack into clean jars to within half inch of the top. Fill to within one and a half inches of the top with a medium sirup (made of two parts water to one part sugar) or if desired a heavier sirup may be used. Process in water bath for 20 minutes.

Cherry Preserves

10 pounds cherries    8 pounds sugar

Wash and pit the cherries. Add the sugar. Boil until the liquid is of the desired consistency. Pour into sterilized jars and seal.

Cherry Conserve

3 cups cherries    3 cups water
2 cups seedless raisins    Sugar

Remove the pits from cherries and cut raisins in pieces. Add water and boil 30 minutes. To each cup pulp add one cup sugar. Cook until thick. Pour into sterilized jars and seal.

CAPTAIN FRANK HAWKS, HOLDER OF MORE AVIATION RECORDS THAN ANY LIVING PILOT, AND HIS YOUNG FRIENDS, JERRY AND JANET, CHARTER MEMBERS OF THE AIR HAWKS CLUB, ARE WINGING THEIR WAY OVER THE BURNING SANDS OF THE GREAT SAHARA DESERT.
THERE IT IS! THERE'S THE OASIS. WE'RE GOING TO LAND FOR WATER, KIDS!
THERE YOU ARE, A REAL CAMEL CARAVAN!
BUT THOSE MEN! THEY LOOK BAD TO ME!
YEAH..AND THEY SEEM KIND OF STARTLED TO SEE US!
CAPTAIN FRANK! I HEARD A MOAN FROM ONE OF THOSE HAMPERS!
GREAT HEAVENS! THESE MUST BE SLAVE-TRADERS! AND THE SLAVES ARE HIDDEN IN THOSE HAMPERS. IT'S A LIVING DEATH FOR THOSE POOR DEVILS!
O-O-H!
SH-H! WE MUST GET OUR WATER, WANDER AROUND SO THEY WON'T SUSPECT US.. THEN FLY TO THE NEAREST POST OF THE FRENCH FOREIGN LEGION. —CAREFUL NOW!
WHAT'LL WE EVER DO?
BUT—THEIR CAUTION IS WASTED! ALREADY THEY ARE SUSPECTED AND THE SLAVE-TRADERS HATCH A DEVILISH PLOT
NA-A- WE CAN'T TOUCH 'EM HERE. THE LEGION'D COME LOOKING FOR 'EM AND SPOIL OUR GAME. WE GOTTA FIX THAT PLANE SO THEY CRASH ACCIDENTAL-LIKE! LISTEN—I GOT IT—
WHEW! I'M GLAD WE'RE SAFE!
ME, TOO. BUT WHAT'S THAT FUNNY RATTLING NOISE? SAY—IT'S STOPPED!
OUR LANDING GEAR'S GONE!
THE SLAVE-TRADERS HAD LOOSENED THE BOLTS OF THE LANDING GEAR, KNOWING THAT THE PLANE'S VIBRATION WOULD SOON SHAKE IT OFF. THEN—A FATAL, ACCIDENTAL CRACK-UP WHEN HAWKS TRIED TO LAND
WE'RE IN A TOUGH SPOT, YOUNGSTERS. ABOUT ONE CHANCE IN 100 I'LL HAVE TO "SKATE" HER IN!
HOORAY! YOU SURE CAN MAKE A PLANE DO TRICKS, CAPTAIN FRANK!
CAPT. HAWKS KNOWS THAT THE SLIGHTEST SLIP MEANS A TRAGIC CRACK-UP. BUT WITH IRON NERVE AND MATCHLESS SKILL, HE SLIDES THE PLANE SAFELY ALONG THE DESERT SANDS IN FRONT OF THE FOREIGN LEGION OUTPOST.
THE FRENCH SOLDIERS'LL GET THOSE SLAVE-TRADERS WON'T THEY, CAPT. FRANK?
YOU BET, JANET! NOW—GET AFTER YOUR POST'S BRAN FLAKES. YOU KNOW I WANT YOU AIR HAWKS TO EAT LOTS OF THEM. THEY'RE SO GOOD FOR YOU!

Hamilton Bares New Deal Fears

Sees 'Victory for America' This Fall, in Speech at Chicago.

CHICAGO, ILL.—John D. M. Hamilton, new chairman of the Republican National committee, opened the Republican Presidential election campaign in the West with a ringing, straightforward declaration of the misdeeds of the Roosevelt administration and its fear of obliteration which the public recognition of these misdeeds has produced.

His speech was delivered at a dinner given him by the Republican Finance committee for Illinois. As he finished upon the note: "There can be only one outcome in November—a victory for America!" the more than 3,000 listeners cheered wildly. It was the largest political dinner in Chicago's history; 1,200 were turned away.

In the early passages of his speech, Hamilton dwelt upon the "phoney" character of the claimed New Deal confidence in re-election, and endorsement of its candidate—confidence he said was unreliable for the very fact that it has been bought with payroll jobs and the taxpayers' money.

Points to Farley's Fears.

Hamilton also cited the futile imitations of the Republican platform advocated by President Roosevelt with respect to the Democratic monopoly plank, the civil service plank and the plank on balancing the budget. He characterized these imitations as sincere flattery.

"There has been a sudden end to the talk that the Republican party would carry only six states in November," Hamilton declared. "On the contrary, the chairman of the Democratic National committee felt obliged to tell the delegates to the Philadelphia convention that confidence was not enough. And in the last few days supporters of the administration have been disheartened by the extraordinary spectacle of their candidate for President so uncertain of carrying his own state that he must draft the aid of a governor, whom he himself placed in office, at the sacrifice of that man's own personal preferences and political future."

Hamilton expressed sympathy for James A. Farley, "jobmaster general of the New Deal," declaring: "He has undertaken to see that his candidates are re-elected in November and quite plainly he doesn't know how it can be done."

The G. O. P. chairman said the administration's claims for its agricultural policy were singularly modest.

Betrayal of Farmer.

"It neglects," he said, "to mention the extraordinary increase in importations of farm products, which are most certainly directly attributable to the Roosevelt administration. It neglects to say that from 1932 to 1935 imports of raw foodstuffs increased 41 per cent and of manufactured foodstuffs 49 per cent. It neglects to state that in that period importations of wheat jumped from three thousand bushels to over twenty-seven million bushels; and imports of corn jumped from 344 thousand bushels to over 43 million bushels; that imports of rice went from 19 to 53 million pounds."

Hamilton predicted that citizens would not be fooled out of realizing the excessive burden of taxes. "They will note the perfectly correct horror with which Mr. Roosevelt views gambling with other people's money, but at the same time they will note he fails to mention the gambling in which irresponsible New Deal officials have indulged, not only with our money, but with money which our children will have to produce."

Safetygrams

By Fred W. Braun
The Safety Man

Contrary to public opinion, more accidents occur in the country and on our open highways than they do in the city. At rural intersections the death rate for accidents exceeded the average for all accidents combined by nearly 20 percent, and was 144 percent greater than the death rate for accidents at street intersections.

The higher speed prevailing on highways accounts for the difference.

It stands to reason that the faster we travel the greater will be our chances for a serious accident.

The outlook, however, is discouraging because of the high speed motors now being manufactured. It is up to all of us to train our minds to decent driving.

Conservation Club Meeting

The members of the Holt Sportsmen club met at the school house here on Monday evening to hear reports and to elect delegates to the Northwestern Minnesota Association of Conservation Clubs to be held at Red Lake Falls on Monday evening, July 27th, at eight o'clock p. m.

Hans Olson of Viking and County Attorney A. A. Trost of Warren were here here on Monday evening to discuss the hunting season situation with members of the local club. Don't fail to attend the meeting at Red Lake Falls and find out what can be done in regards to our duck and deer seasons up in this end of the state.

The Northwestern Minnesota Association of Conservation Clubs was formed a year ago in an effort to coordinate the efforts of the various sportsmen's organizations throughout the Seventh Conservation District as it was felt that only by united efforts could the problems affecting this district be solved.

Mr. Manweiler of the U. S. Forestry Service will be the principal speaker. We also expect to have representatives of the Game and Fish Department of the State of Minnesota present. The organization is governed by a board of Directors, consisting of one member from each of the counties of Lake of the Woods, Roseau, Kittson, Marshall, Pennington, Red Lake and Polk. A report will be made by those directors on the game conditions within their respective counties.

Safetygrams

By Fred W. Braun
The Safety Man

Careful consideration should be given by the State Highway Department in the construction of highways.

There are many items that enter into the safe construction and safe maintenance of highways. The construction department can add considerably to the accident prevention program by building safe highways.

Corners can be made much safer and curves can be materially improved from a safety standpoint by cutting away the banks, trees, and shubbery to make better vision.

These two suggestions are vital in the safety program and in many states this practice is being followed.

Moral Courage Is Key to Character

Chicago, Ill.—The call to moral courage in rebuilding the American dream is the one note to be found in all Gov. Alf M. Landon's addresses and acts, Philip Kinsley writes in the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. Kinsley takes as characteristic of Governor Landon his utterance before a convocation of ministers at Topeka in January, 1933: "In the recent past we worshiped false gods and neglected too much the true and living God, whose precepts have guided mankind through the centuries."

Mr. Kinsley also quotes from an address by the governor in 1935: "For some time—several years in fact—I have been of the opinion that we will not have a real, solid, genuine recovery in this country until we have a moral recovery. And by moral recovery I mean character, integrity, upright honesty and square dealing. There is an old-fashioned phrase that I remember my father and mother using, as a boy. It is somewhat out of date these days, but describes what I mean. It is: 'He is a man of principle.'"

Applied For Drouth Aid

Resolutions seeking to have Marshall County designated as a drouth area by the U. S. Department of Agriculture and be listed with other governmental agencies authorized to give relief to drouth stricken farmers, were adopted at the semi-annual session of the county board of commissioners meeting at Warren last week.

The county commissioner commenced their semi-annual meeting on Monday and were in session there most of the week. Application for tax reduction, old age pension hearings and other matters have kept the board busy. Last Tuesday afternoon the members made a trip through the western part of the county inspecting damages done by the continued heat and drouth.

On Wednesday the session of the board was devoted principally to the hearing of old age pension applications. Adoption of the budget or tax levy for 1937 was also on the schedule of the session. This week the commissioners reconvened as the board of equalization when real estate and personal property tax assessments made by local assessors were reviewed and equalized.

The commissioners also voted an appropriation of $2,000 to carry on the service of the county agricultural extension agent for the coming year. The county cooperates with the federal and state governments in caring for the expense of maintaining the extension division in the county.

"Whereas, Crops in Marshall county have suffered from the continuous drouth and the excessive heat to such an extent that the western central part of the county has sustained a 75 per cent loss, and the eastern part of the county a 50 per cent loss, and if the drouth and heat continue the county will have a total crop failure, and,

"Whereas, Many farmers are now plowing uner their crops because they have been destroyed by drouth and heat, and

"Whereas, The hay crops are very poor by reason of the drouth and excessive heat, and the pastures are depleted;

"Now, Therefore, Be It Resolved, by the Board of County Commissioners of Marshall County, Minnesota, that said Marshall county be placed in the drouth area by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, and that said county be so listed with other governmental agencies authorized to give relief to drouth stricken farmers."

The Resettlement Project

Indications that the Federal Resettlement project with headquarters in Thief River Falls will be expanded beyond its original quota of 125 farms, was stated recently by J. W. Taylor, project manager. The project has options on 116 tracts of land at the present time and that the buying of options on additional tracts will continue until further notice.

Washington headquarters to date have approved approximately fifty purchases, thirty to forty days being required for the process, Mr. Taylor said. The staff of the local office is now acquiring tracts in the Plummer, Oklee, Terrebonne and Red Lake Falls commuities, while about 35 farms have been acquired in the vicinity of Warren, Argyle and Angus.

Hundreds of applications from prospective tenants of the farms are expected to be received during coming months, particularly from those residing in the drouth areas of the Dakotas. Already Mr. Taylor has interviewed a number of delegations from those regions who have called at the local office.

Applications are now being received for the farms, and a representative of the Milwaukee office of the resettlement administration will come to Thief River Falls shortly to conduct interviews. This agent will probably work in cooperation with a local committee, including a member of the county board, to represent the interests of the local community. An attorney will also be named within a few days to assist with the legal details of the project.

The tracts, with a maximum of 160 acres, will be leased to prospective purchasers for a three year period under supervision before being sold. Plans call for the placing of ten to twelve milk cows on each farm, as well as approximately forty sheep when the operator has had experience in sheep raising.

The Annual School Election

The annual school meeting of District No. 35 was held at the school house here on Tuesday evening with only fifteen interested taxpayers present at the meeting.

The annual report of the secretary and treasurer of the district were read and approved. The district ended the year with only $222.00 in the red. This would not have been so had the treasurer received the money due from the county auditor for the June tax settlement. According to reports there will be about $1800 in cash as soon as that arrives here. The board of education also paid off a $1000 bond the past year.

Sam Lorentson, O. H. Nohre and H. O. Hanson, whose terms expired at this time were reelected to serve as directors on the board of education. The first two for three year terms and the last mentioned for a two year term.

Heat - Wind - Rain - Hail

The heat wave that held this part of the state spell-bound the past few weeks was broken on Sunday afternoon when a hard northeast wind came in with a heavy shower of rain and hail.

Several farmers out northeast of Holt were completely wiped out by the hail as far as their crops were concerned.

According to reports there was a heavy hail northeast of Thief River Falls the same afternoon and many farmers lost their crops.

The rest of the week so far has been cool with a light breeze

Mrs. George Fricker and Boy and Mrs. Joe Nelson and baby called on Mrs. Louis Wegge Monday evening.

Mrs. Louis Wegge returned home Monday of last week from Crookston and Larimore, N. D. where she took her granddaughters Dolores and Evelyn Wegge to their home after they spent three weeks here with her.

Four Day Fair Opens

Uncle Ezra and his WLS Barn Dance troupe will open the Pennington County Fair entertainment program at Thief River Falls Tuesday night, July 28. On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday nights the program will feature "Around the Town", a Barnes & Carruthers revue. The afternoon program will consist of horse racing and vaudeville and circus acts. Rebuilding of the old grand stand has greatly increased the seating capacity and it is estimated that 2,500 spectators can now be accomodated. The Pennington County Fair has enjoyed a steady growth in recent years and is now the fourth largest in the state. Adult admissions are only 25c and children under twelve are admitted free.

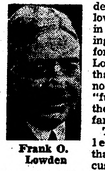
Landon and Lowden Are In Accord on Agriculture

COMPLETE endorsement of the presidential candidacy of Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas was given by former Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois following a conference in Topeka. Following the conference former Governor Lowden announced that he and Governor Landon were in "full accord" on the question of farm relief.



Frank O. Lowden

The Illinois farm leader revealed that he had discussed soil erosion, reciprocal treaties, conservation of farm population, government aid in marketing surplus crops, centralizing of federal power and reduction of federal expenditures with Gov. Landon. Mr. Lowden declared:

"We are in accord on the important agricultural issues. I shall support him and campaign for his election."

Payment of cash federal bounties to soil - conserving farmers through a plan contemplating state administration was one of the farm principles advocated by Mr. Lowden which received the verbal support of Gov. Landon following the conference.

With the Republican presidential nominee at work on his acceptance speech, conferences with other leaders were scheduled. Important among these was the visit of George N. Peek, former AAA administrator who resigned his post following a break with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and is now a New Deal critic. Also on the program was the visit of Col. Frank Knox, Governor Landon's running mate.

At Governor Landon's office a letter was made public from William Cabell Bruce, former Democratic senator from Maryland, saying that he was "bitterly disappointed" in President Roosevelt and "deeply gratified" at Governor Landon's nomination.

In the meantime members of the Kansas legislature had departed for their homes after submitting two constitutional amendments to the state's electorate. One of these would authorize state aid for the needy and the other would approve state participation in the federal social security plan. Both amendments were recommended by Governor Landon.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman Is Taken by Death

DR. S. Parkes Cadman, who rose from the mines of England to international fame as a pulpit orator, died in Plattsburg, N. Y., at the age of seventy-one.

Dr. Cadman was pastor of the Central Congregational church of Brooklyn and was a former president of the Federal Council of Churches.

In his youth, Dr. Cadman worked as a "pony boy" in a mine in Shropshire, England. At fourteen he began to read theology; at seventeen he joined the church and at eighteen preached his first sermon. He came to America in 1890 with less than $100 in his pocket. Through a bishop whom he had met in London he obtained his first pastorate.

In his later years, Dr. Cadman had for his congregation all the people of the North American continent. He was the first of the "radio pastors" and his Sunday afternoon sermons reached the ears of millions.

New Austro-German Pact Makes Diplomatic History

A NEW era in European diplomacy was heralded with the signing of a treaty between Germany and Austria re-establishing peace and normal relations between the two nations.

Since Italy has been acting in the role of big brother to Austria in the past two years it was regarded as a virtual certainty that Premier Mussolini had sanctioned the new pact. Observers pointed out that with Germany, Austria and Italy in accord and with Poland friendly to Hitler's aims, Europe now has a prospective alliance more powerful than the triple alliance of Germany, Italy and Austria-Hungary preceding the World war.

By the terms of the new Austro-German pact, the sovereignty of Austria is guaranteed, a friendly attitude by Austria toward Germany is promised, amnesty to Nazi agitators in Austria is given and freedom of Austrian Nazi now interned in Germany is permitted.

In sealing the Austro-German agreement Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg of Austria wired a message of congratulations to Chancellor Hitler expressing his conviction that the agreement "would be to the advantage of the whole German people." In replying Hitler expressed the wish "that this agreement will re-establish the old traditional relations springing from racial unity and the centuries long common history" of the two peoples. It is understood that both Hitler and Schuschnigg will meet in the near future, probably at Hitler's summer home at Berchtesgaden.

In diplomatic circles the signing of the new pact was regarded as another shrewd coup by Chancellor Hitler and Premier Mussolini. The German and Italian dictators have thrust a dictatorially governed Fascist and Nazi wedge through central Europe from the North Sea to the Mediterranean.

In Paris, French officials were quoted as seeing in the new agreement an initial step toward German annexation of the Austrian republic without resorting to war. They declared their belief that Hitler's actual entry into Vienna is now only a question of time.

President Roosevelt Leaves for Nautical Vacation

AFTER dedicating New York's new $64,000,000 Tri - borough bridge, attending the wedding of Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, minister to Denmark, to Captain Boerge Rohde of the Danish court and spending two days at his Hyde Park home, President Roosevelt embarked on a nautical vacation in Maine and Canadian waters.

President Roosevelt

On the bridge dedication program with the President were Secretary of the Interior Ickes, Gov. Lehman of New York, Senator Wagner and Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York City. The bridge is the largest completed public works administration project in the East. It comprises four spans in its three and one-half miles of elevated ways and connects Manhattan, the Bronx and Queens, Long Island.

Before leaving to board the schooner Sewanna, President Roosevelt conferred with a group of eastern state representatives on the matter of flood control. Representatives of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia and other states hit by disastrous floods early this year met with the President.

On the cruise of the Sewanna, a 50-foot schooner yacht, President Roosevelt will act as skipper and helmsman. Three of his four sons, James, Franklin Jr., and John are members of the crew. The cruise will carry the President along the Maine coast to Campobello Island, New Brunswick, where his mother has a summer home and off Nova Scotia where he expects to do some deep sea fishing. A destroyer, the presidential yacht Potomac and the schooner Liberty carrying newspaper men are trailing the Sewanna.

Before he returns to the White House, the President will pay a visit to Lord Tweedsmuir, governor-general of Canada at Ottawa, the Dominion's capital.

Ruth Bryan Owen Becomes Bride of Danish Officer

ROMANCE outmaneuvered diplomacy when Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, minister to Denmark, became the bride of Captain Boerge Rohde, gentleman-in-waiting to King Christian of Denmark. The wedding took place in St. James Chapel at Hyde Park, N. Y., in the presence of President Roosevelt who nominated Mrs. Owen as the country's first woman minister.

Ruth Bryan Owen

A few days after Mrs. Owen returned to the United States for the summer, the announcement of her engagement was made in Denmark by Captain Rohde's mother. A day or two later, Captain Rohde arrived in America and plans were made for an immediate wedding.

Rockefeller Celebrates His 97th Birthday

CUTTING a big cake to celebrate his ninety-seventh birthday, John D. Rockefeller predicted that he would live to be one hundred. Despite temperature of 92 in the shade, the famous nonagenarian donned a sun helmet and went outdoors on his summer estate near Lakewood, N. J.

The multimillionaire oil man and philanthropist did not let the celebration of his birthday interfere with his daily nap or his daily afternoon automobile ride.

Mr. Rockefeller long since has given up all forms of athletic activities, including golf, formerly his favorite pastime.

Promise of Rains and Cooler Weather for Drouth Areas

WITH a recession of the extremely high temperatures promised and the prospect of rains, some measure of relief was in sight for the sun-parched drouth areas of the Great Plains. Rains which fell in portions of the Northwest revived scattered areas. But for day after day a record-breaking heat wave had brought temperatures ranging from 90 to 114 from the Rocky Mountains to the Appalachians.

Twenty-three states, eight of them in the South, were listed as suffering in some degree from the drouth. Ten of them—North and South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Minnesota, Missouri, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Virginia and South Carolina—were already in a critical stage. Five others—Kentucky Georgia, Alabama, North Carolina and West Virginia—were borderline cases. Eight others where the full severity of the drouth had not yet been felt were: Nebraska, Wisconsin, Iowa, Michigan, Illinois, Kansas, Indiana and Ohio.

The sweltering heat and drouth spread into Canada. The prairie provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—Canada's bread basket—had begun to suffer like their neighbors in the United States. Except for scattered local showers, there had been no rain from Ontario westward to the Canadian Rockies since June 16.

With the full extent of the damage in the "dust bowl" area of the Northwest not yet known, the federal government made plans to deal with a long-range disaster. President Roosevelt, taking personal command of the relief program in Washington, announced that he would make a personal tour of the drouth-stricken areas within the next few weeks.

The President announced that the federal government had prepared a comprehensive plan whereby 170,000 out of 204,000 farm families impoverished by the drouth in the Northwest would be given immediate cash assistance. He declared that he will make his trip after the relief program has had an opportunity to get under way.

Green-Lewis Rift Brings Labor Crisis

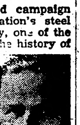
AS THE long-awaited campaign to unionize the nation's steel industry was under way, one of the most serious crises in the history of the American labor movement arose when strife broke out between William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor and John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America and head of the Committee for Industrial Organization, who has promoted the unionization drive in the steel industry.



William Green

Meeting in Washington, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor considered the matter of suspending eight national and international unions on the ground that these eight unions have begun the formation of a rival, or dual labor federation.

John L. Lewis announced that he would not respond to a summons of the executive council to answer charges that he had violated the federation's policy by trying to organize 500,000 steel workers into one big industrial union instead of into several unions divided by crafts.

Threat of Farm Strike Worries French Nation

WITH the threat of a farm strike hanging ominously over France, riots in French cities and street clashes between the leftists supporting the popular front socialist regime of Premier Leon Blum and rightists who oppose it added to the unrest. The government made anxious efforts to dissuade farm workers from going on a strike for higher pay and better wages.

On five farms near Paris striking farm hands had actually occupied the land. While this was a localized situation, it was fraught with dangerous possibilities because the area affected not only provides most of the French capital's fresh vegetable supply but is an important wheat growing region as well.

Due to heavy rains and hot weather the wheat has ripened at an abnormally rapid rate. Should a widespread strike of farm hands occur that delayed the wheat cutting only a few days, experts were of the opinion that the entire crop of the region would be lost.

Fifteen Jap Army Officers Are Put to Death

FIFTEEN Japanese army officers who were leaders in last February's bloody rebellion in which four high-ranking government officials met assassination, were executed by a firing squad in Tokyo.

Two other officers condemned to death were not shot and no explanation was made by the war office. They were Captain Yoshiaki Nakamura and Captan Asiachi Isobe. Unofficial observers believed their lives were temporarily spared so that they might testify in trials of other men accused of complicity in the uprising of February 26 which pushed Japan close to the brink of civil war.

Poets and People

Love can carry you back through the centuries and make you close to, make you know the men and women who have loved, as you have loved. Love makes the greatest woman who ever lived, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, your sister and mine, and she is our familiar friend because she has sung all the things we haven't words to say. Keats' love is something we know and feel, and that makes him belong to us in a way no other poet has.

We have the miracle of the radio in this cosmopolitan world of today. But there has always been a radio of love that tunes your heart to another heart, so that you can reach across time and space and wipe out loneliness. So that messages come singing in the night, and you say, "Yes, dear, I love you still—and always."—Adela Rogers St. John in Cosmopolitan.

Her voice broke.

"Ridder'll be free in a few weeks," she pled. "Wait, Mr. Gilbert. You don't know how many innocent people you may drag into this."

Barry hesitated.

He now remembered that he had told Pat he loved her. "It didn't get me anywhere," Barry thought. "It never will. I'm not even sure that she heard me, but I'm glad I spoke, all the same."

Aloud, he said, "I'll wait, Pat."

She glanced up at him, gratefully.

"Not until the trial, though," he warned her. "I won't take that chance. I won't let this girl, Peggy, go on suffering until then. But now I believe I know who murdered Kelly. Someone who came into the house while your father was there. Someone so full of the thought of it that she bungled the new lock on the front door."

"You think—" Hambidge began.

"I think that's why it blew open. And I think, too, that revealing your visit—now—would be merely 'tipping our hand.' The person I suspect has already covered her tracks pretty well."

"Then," Pat said, almost incredulously—"Then you're not going to repeat this story?"

"Not even to Winslow. He hasn't much more faith in my 'sleuthing' than you have. We'll leave him to work out Ridder's defense. For the present let's agree on an armistice. Mutual silence. If the time arrives when I feel I must speak, I'll come to you first. Is that fair?"

"Quite."

From the very beginning, Barry had suspected Mrs. Kelly. "She sued for divorce recently, and withdrew the case," Peter Winslow had told him. "Do you think that might indicate that she killed her husband?" Barry did, and one discovery after another confirmed the idea. "But," as Barry had reminded his city editor, "Mrs. Kelly was in Harlem. She went to a dance."

That sounded promising until, as the first move in his investigation, Barry dug up The Herald Tribune of "the morning after the body was found." Mrs. Kelly had told him that paper contained a full record of her social activities, and it did. "At the time of the murder, Mrs. Kelly, who sued for divorce recently, and withdrew the case, was awarding prizes at a fancy dress ball of the Crosstown Chowder and Outing club in Harlem Gardens. This was at midnight, and the other judges were . . ."

"Kelly wasn't killed at midnight," Barry realized. "He wasn't killed until two hours after midnight. If Mrs. Kelly got through with her prizes—"

"Well," Barry exulted, climbing into the subway. What next? Say nothing, and saw wood—that's what. One more link in this chain, and I'm going to change a lot of people's minds about me and my 'sleuthing!'"

Monday morning, Barry dropped in on Peter Winslow. He was still carrying the Ridder check for $2,000, and he wanted Peter to take part of it as a retainer, and bank the rest for Peggy.

Peter did accept it, as a matter of course, though he waved aside the offer of a retainer. "I'm in no hurry," he insisted. "Wait 'til I do something. I know you're good for it."

Obviously, he was doing a great deal. "Got the defense all planned," he declared, showing Barry a thick sheaf of memoranda. "Loose-leaf" memoranda it was, in the most literal sense—scrawled on waste paper and the backs of envelopes. Order may be Nature's first law, but it wasn't this lawyer's.

"No, I'm not neat," Peter smiled, intercepting Barry's glance. "Except personally, and that's Julie's achievement. Julie's Mrs. Winslow, of course, and she buys all my clothes. Lays 'em out for me, too—even the boutonniere. I often ask her if she wants me to look like a gigolo. Don't worry about this stuff, though,"—indicating the sheaf of memoranda. "Miss Clark'll have that straight by night."

Miss Clark was his secretary.

"Women keep you in order," he went on smiling; "that's about the only thing I have against 'em."

"There's nothing to this case," he continued. "It'll come to trial in a few weeks now, and be over in a few hours. Want to hear what I'm going to ask that Filipino?"

Listening, Barry felt again that his own activities had been merely foolish. A dozen questions disposed of all the evidence the butler had given so far, and made it apparent that what he actually knew of young Ridder's visit was exactly nothing. "You heard a quarrel? A violent quarrel? And you were alarmed? That's why you came upstairs? Rogers left then? And the lights were still burning in the front room? If you were alarmed, why didn't you knock at the door, to make sure your master was all right? Not so very much alarmed, were you? In fact, you weren't alarmed at all until you saw what had happened." This was the beginning of an inquiry that twisted about, doubled on itself, and was likely to leave any jury on earth too uncertain to convict anyone of a capital offense. "Particularly, anyone with a wife and child," Peter said.

"Peggy was in here Friday," he added. "She looks as though she'd been dragged through a knot-hole. I wanted her to come to us for the week-end, but we're in town most of the time. I'm going to talk to the Hambidges about having her out there."

"That would be great," Barry kindled. "They'd be company for each other. It wouldn't do Pat a bit of harm to learn how the other half lives."

"Right!" Peter exclaimed heartily. "I'll call Pat today."

In spite of himself, as he was leaving, Barry mentioned his Harlem theory.

Peter listened intently.

"Well," he said, "you are a Hawkshaw."

"You'd be surprised if I landed Mrs. Kelly, wouldn't you?"

"No," Peter replied, smiling again, "but I'd be terribly surprised if you didn't begin suspecting someone else ten minutes afterward."

CHAPTER VIII

The more Barry thought of it, the more certain he became that the Judge's story, and the revelations in Harlem, removed the only reason for questioning Harwood's hypothesis. When the divorce action was filed, Kelly had promised not to see Betty Barclay again. That promise had induced the withdrawal of the petition. And then Betty Barclay had phoned, while Kelly was out, and just as Mrs. Kelly was going. In Harwood's own words, Mrs. Kelly "went wild." Failing to get legal counsel, she taxied to Harlem, and there she got "madder and madder." Just after midnight, she drove home, and found Kelly alone—drunk, and with the accumulated wrath engendered by two trying interviews. There were words, and a handy decanter.

He found Peggy doing some mending in her dingy room. She had lost flesh, and seemed to be always staring at nothing. "It's Jacky," she confided in Barry. "I'm worried about him."

The youngster looked pale and ill.

"Look here, Peg; will you have lunch with me tomorrow at the Astor? I want you to meet somebody."

"Miss Hambidge?"

"Yes."

"She'd turn up her nose at me like an elephant reaching for peanuts."

"I don't think so. Anyway, I want you to know each other."

The appointment was made, at last—one o'clock—and Barry called Pat.

"Well, the trail's hot, all right."

"Tell me about it."

"I don't dare over the wire. You know; operators. Come in and lunch with me?"

"When?"

"Tomorrow at one."

Pat was eagerly anxious to hear his news, and there was no other way. But, if Pat's nose remained static when she learned she was to encounter Peggy, her mouth straightened. "Why? What have I in common with this girl?"

Pat flushed.

"You owe her something for that, don't you think? What're you being so high hat about? This girl's Mrs. John Clarke Ridder, Jr., you know."

"I'm not being high hat. Only, naturally, just now, I don't feel much like meeting strangers. Especially strangers with whom I have no community of interest."

Lunching together, however, it soon became evident that there was a "community of interest." Pat warmed to this painted chorus girl, fearful for her husband exactly as Pat was fearful for her father. Though Peg didn't know it, their fate hung on the same thread. Both heard Barry's account of his discoveries with regard to Mrs. Kelly.

"It seems pretty conclusive," Pat said.

"I never thought of that dame—I mean, woman," Peg added. "Would that get Jack off quick?"

Barry explained his understanding that, if there were definite proof of another person's having committed a crime, anyone in custody was released immediately. "The district attorney moves for a dismissal of the indictment, I believe," he told them.

"Gee!" Peggy said, with the tears in her eyes.

Pat was no fool, and she found herself respecting and liking this "night club hoofer." She was Mrs. Ridder, after all. "Whoever the girl might have been, it was the tears beginning to dissolve the beads that stirred Pat. She had never seen anyone cry that way before—cry with her lips twisted into a smile.

"Why not? When you really love anybody, you don't care what they do, or have done, or what they are. It's what they are to you that counts. You're not thinking what you're going to get, but what you're going to give. That is, the right kind of girl is."

The upshot was that Pat took Peg and the youngster to Southampton the next morning. "Peter suggested it," she told Barry. "And, of course, you're right—I do owe them something."

It wasn't the debt that did it, Barry realized. It was Jacky. Peg wanted Patricia to see him, and the house was so near. There really wasn't any good excuse for not going. So, for the first time in her life, Pat sniffed fried fish in an entrance hall, and tripped on worn stair carpets, and found herself stifling in a back room without air or sunshine. She'd known people lived like that, of course, but, somehow, she'd never thought much about it. She found herself thinking now. "If I had to spend one night in this place— That's what's the matter with the boy."

It was arranged that Evans was to drive them out, and come back for Barry on Thursday.

When Barry left Pat at her hotel, she said, "You seem to be everybody's friend, Mr. Gilbert. It's a little hard to understand, considering—"

"Considering that I'm an adventurer and an imposter?"

"Yes."

"Yes," Barry repeated, "but that's how you learn what friendship means."

That night, Barry went to the Cocoanut Bar.

"I mustn't overlook anything," he reflected.

There wasn't much to overlook in the Cocoanut Bar. Not in the way of clothing, at all events. The lobby was full of men, more or less surreptitiously glancing at framed photographs of girls whose costumes might almost have been packed in a vanity case. Inside was a square dancing floor with tables about it, like the seats about a prize ring. Above, there was a balcony with more tables, except at one spot, occupied by offices.

There were three shows a night, the amateur Hawkshaw discovered from his menu—at seven, eleven, and one.

It wasn't hard to get acquainted with any of the girls. One had only to look prosperous, and incline his head an inch or two in the direction of a vacant chair. "We're not supposed to do this," Violet Fane informed Barry, "but Luis's got a swell stand-in."

Barry had his expense account and his ingratiating grin, and used both to the limit. It wasn't long before the blonde was telling the story of her life. "I bin with Luis ever since I was a kid," she bragged. "He's a swell guy. You oughta know him. I'll give you a tumble after the next show."

Luis was most affable. A sentimentalist, but a business man, with a keen eye to spenders, and a withering contempt for tight-wads.

A flashy young fellow, Morano was, who wore sporty clothes, and much jewelry. Slim and dapper, his shining ebon hair was slicked back from his forehead. He had a long, thin nose, and straight, thin lips, and a slight but rather curious impediment in his speech. His voice could be very soft at times.

"Tender hearted, Luis is," Miss Fane declared later. "I've seen him cry when somebody sang about mother, or the kid, or sumpin'. That loved-her-and-lost-her stuff specially. He was married onct."

"Didn't it take?"

"Sure, it took. That's why he cries. The Jane died, or sumpin'. Know what Luis did—when he got the coin, I mean? Bought the house they used to live in, and went on livin' there—alone, with a couple of servants."

"Gee!"

"Ain't that romantic? I'll say so! He's still got the servants, too. They all moved to a farm, somewhere in Jersey, a couple'a years ago. Would you believe it—he drives out every morning, after the last show. Nuts about horses, Luis is. Not to bet on. Just likes 'em.

"Learned about horses in Fauquier county," Luis said, returning at that instant. "I lived there 'til I was nineteen, and that's all they know. Go on, Vi; you'll be late."

"I never was late for a show yet," she retorted. "Nor out of one. Not in all the years I've worked for you."

"That's straight," Morano admitted, as she was leaving. "Never been out of a show in her life. She's a swell girl, Vi."

There wasn't much to be got at the Cocoanut Bar; not that Violet and Morano weren't willing to talk. Morano's romance had left him a gentle melancholy—or, perhaps, he was only worried about business. But, if he had anything to conceal, it certainly seemed to have no relation to Kelly. On that subject, everything was open and above board.

"Just a gorilla," Morano said of the Big Boss, the next night, when Barry returned to the Cocoanut Bar.

"Sure!" her employer agreed. "He wouldn't do nothing worse than steal pennies from a dead baby. Pal of Vi's though," Luis added, winking at Barry.

"Yeh," Violet declared, dryly; "until that Barclay dame came along."

"He was in here that evening, wasn't he?" Barry asked.

"Yeh. Just a few hours before they croaked him."

"He had a girl pinched, or something?"

"Yeh," Morano repeated. "Nice kid, too. Took her around to the station in them things."

"Kelly was soused," Miss Fane said.

"Yeh. Plenty. And he thought the kid was picking his pocket. Nothin' to it."

St. Paul—Prizes totaling $18,923 were allotted to the cattle division of the Minnesota State fair for this year's exposition. The fair will open September 5 and continue to September 12. A total of $87,101 in prizes will be on the 1936 premium list.

Cambridge—During the fiscal year ended July 1, WPA paid $34,069.91 for labor and material on the 10 projects that have been in operation in Isanti county. There are at present 64 persons on the WPA pay roll as compared with 78 persons employed in January.

St. Cloud—Factual information about St. Cloud, both historical and economic, is contained in a new 64-page brochure published by the St. Cloud Chamber of Commerce on the basis of information supplied by a WPA writers' project. The book is the first of several to be issued about various Minnesota cities.

St. Cloud—After twice narrowly evading capture—first in a chase by a sheriff and later when they abandoned a stolen automobile and continued their flight in another—two St. Cloud reformatory convicts are still at liberty. The escaped prisoners are Floyd Schake, 20, Anoka, and Walter Michalek, 18, of Minneapolis. Both were serving terms for automobile theft.

St. Peter—Lawrence Devol, leader of a band of criminally insane convicts who escaped June 7 from the Minnesota State insane asylum at St. Peter, and a former member of the Karpis-Barker gang, was shot to death in Enid, Okla. He was brought down by police bullets in a shooting affray in which an Enid policeman was slain and two other officers were wounded, one of them critically.

Minneapolis—Rates ranging from $7.80 to $15.90 an acre have been set for the soil-conserving payments for Minnesota counties under the 1936 agricultural conservation program, according to Frank J. Brown, in charge of information for the program in Minnesota. This marked the launching in Minnesota of the federal farm aid program which replaces the AAA crop adjustment plan held unconstitutional.

Minneapolis—If the Mill City goes a bit screwy during the week beginning Friday, July 17, it will be because those mad Marx brothers, Hollywood movie comedians, are cavorting on the stage of the Minnesota theater. Together with a company of 45 singers, dancers, and Hollywood beauties, the famous brothers are presenting a stage musical comedy, "A Day At The Races", testing public reaction to it before returning to California to make it into a motion picture. Only four other cities in the country will have the opportunity of seeing this production.

Minneapolis — President Roosevelt plans to make a personal survey in mid-August of the northwest drouth areas to check up on operation of plans to distribute federal relief among 170,000 farm families. In revealing his intention to tour the northwest, including a possible speech at the diamond jubilee celebration of the Dakotas, the President said 50,000 farmers would go to work at once on WPA projects and that before the relief projects are completed, 204,000 will be receiving federal aid.

Ship Subsidy

Washington.—One of the pieces of legislation enacted by the late seventy - fourth congress was the ship subsidy bill. Residents of farming communities and smaller cities and towns in the interior probably paid no attention to it whatsoever. Nor was there any outstanding reason apparent why they should give thought to a rather complex and yet far-reaching piece of legislation. But it is important even though the circumstances under which it will be effective may not so appear to the agricultural sections of the country.

The new law provides an undisguised subsidy as the basis of encouragement for development of a new American merchant marine. It is the first time that such a policy has been carried out by the American nation and it is, therefore, yet a matter to be tried out before anyone can say definitely that the results will be satisfactory. Those who sponsored the legislation have long contended it was both sound and sensible and their argument prevailed in congress.

Advocates of the measure say that it will provide at least a start for the construction of new and faster and more efficient American owned ships. They contend further that the policy upon which the nation has now embarked as regards shipping will cost less in the end than other disguised and concealed subsidies that have been employed.

It may be necessary to recall that the United States long has paid what amounts to a subsidy to ocean going ships in the form of excessive rates for the transportation of ocean mail. There are 43 such mail routes and the ships operating on these routes, consequently, benefited to the extent of the number of pounds of mail they carried because the payments they received were on a pound basis. This contribution from the federal government enabled many of those shipping companies to survive.

But it is only natural that one should ask why a subsidy is advisable or necessary at all. The answer is plain. American owned ships, ships flying the American flag, are required by law to meet numerous conditions that are not required by any other nation of the ships registered with their admiralties.

* * *

Some Difficulties

With these conditions, among many others, it becomes easily understandable what difficulties confront American flag ships in competition with world shipping.

Above and beyond the factors just mentioned, it is a matter of record as well that ship construction in the United States costs more perhaps than any place else in the world. Here again American standards are influential. They bring about higher wages and shorter hours for American labor in American shipyards. Thus, a new ship starting out begins its service with a handicap of greater cost upon which a return must be had if those who invest their money in ships are to receive a profit thereon.

Then, there is a further distinct and important reason. I refer to national defense. It has long been the conviction of military and naval men that American freight and passenger ships should be so designed, developed and constructed, that they might be converted to satisfactory use as auxiliary craft in time of war. In this connection it will be recalled that tremendous sums were expended by our government in building ships for use in the World war. There was such vast waste of money at that time that it seems incredible anyone should ever make the same mistake again. But to avoid that mistake advance preparations are necessary and that is a point strongly stressed by those who favored the ship subsidy legislation.

Link With the Farm

Now to link the importance of the ship subsidy bill with agriculture: American products must have access to foreign markets and this access must be under fair and reasonable competition conditions. Such reasonable and fair competitive conditions cannot be obtained if American built ships, constructed at greater costs because of the higher standards of wages and living of American labor, and operated on a basis of greater cost for the same reasons do not have some protection from the government whose flag they fly. They cannot, for example, meet the freight rates offered by the Japanese whose labor basis is distressing and whose general construction costs are amazingly low. Nor can they compete with ships constructed with government money and subsidized by special privileges accorded by their governments.

So, it is made to appear, at least from this line of reasoning, that American firms are left to the mercies of foreign shipping companies in their efforts to expand our export trade—that is, they are left to these mercies unless this government takes a definite stand by which American flag ships are accorded some advantages.

I suspect there are many features of the ship subsidy bill which was fathered by Senator Copeland, New York Democrat, that will prove unsatisfactory. Indeed, I am sure some of them will be found to be wholly unworkable. But the point is, after all, that a start has been made toward honesty of policy in dealing with merchant marine problems. I think no one can refute the statement that as between concealed or disguised subsidies and forthright payments that are known as subsidies, the forthright and honest method is decidedly better.

Since the United States normally produces a surplus of agricultural products, it becomes highly important to agriculture that the foreign markets are accessible and that the costs of transportation do not entirely eat up the value of the commodity exported unless the wheat from the plains states and the cotton from the South and the corn from the Mississippi valley can be moved at reasonable cost. It can be moved at reasonable cost only if American shipping is protected. That is not alone my opinion. It is the opinion of many experts in the field.

One might properly inquire why the foreign boats should not be used to handle American commodities if the freight rate is lower. There are two very valid reasons why this should not be obtained. One is that constant rate reduction by foreign shipping companies would sooner or later, probably sooner, destroy the American merchant marine. With this end achieved, the foreign shipping companies would do as they have attempted to do on a number of occasions—jack up the rates to suit themselves. The other reason why American goods should be shipped in American bottoms is that a mercantile marine is as necessary an adjunct to our national economy and our national welfare as are the lines of land transportation. This may seem to me a broad statement but I believe, nevertheless, it is a truthful one because all fields of industry as well as agriculture would suffer if we were left at the mercy of foreign shipping companies. Further, the commodities that we import would pay whatever rates the foreign shipping companies demanded in order to reach our shores and we would pay the bill.

It seems, therefore, that while this legislation probably is far from perfection, probably has entirely too much governmental finger in the shipping pie, presents a start that eventually will be helpful. I have heard no answer to this statement. It is going to cost about so much for transportation on the ocean and if we can maintain an American industry upon that cost plus the aid of a subsidy of the type now initiated, we have laid out a sound unit in our national commercial structure. It goes without saying, therefore, that if it is helpful to one part of the country it is going to be helpful to all others because we are so interrelated.

Pests and Drouth

Political students have been engaged lately in stirring arguments over what possibly may be a new influence in the campaigns of 1936. I refer to the disastrous conditions in some of the plains of the Middle West resulting from lack of rain. I refer, also, to the presence of pests in sections of the plains states.

It has been interesting, not to say humorous, to listen to the arguments being advanced, arguments based purely on political phases that may or may not result from those conditions. There is no agreement among the Democrats and no agreement among the Republicans as to the effect of the natural circumstances developing in the middle west. Some Democrats contend the drouth will react to President Roosevelt's advantage. Some Republicans fear that the Democratic contention is true. Some Democrats are afraid that the loss of crops and the generally bad condition in which this leaves thousands of farmers will place them in a state of mind where they will be determined to vote against somebody and of course the only person against whom they can vote is Mr. Roosevelt inasmuch as he happens to be the man in power at the moment.

BILLY MINK AND LITTLE JOE OTTER DECIDE TO GO VISITING

AFTER visiting the Smiling Pool and warning Little Joe Otter and Jerry Muskrat to watch out for traps, Bobby Coon decided that the Laughing Brook was altogether too dangerous a place for him, so he turned back into the Green Forest and firmly resolved to keep away from the Laughing Brook. Billy Mink and Little Joe Otter talked things over.

"I found three traps," said Billy Mink. "There may be some I have not found. Anyway, it is certain that when that trapper finds that I know about those traps he will set some more. I don't believe he is smart enough to hide a trap so that we cannot find it. But, you know, accidents will happen. He knows that you and I make our homes along the Laughing Brook and he will simply make life miserable for us by continuing to set traps. Do you know what I believe I'll do?"

"I Believe I'll Go Away for a Visit."

"What?" said little Joe Otter.

"I believe I'll go away for a visit," replied Billy Mink. "I've been feeling rather restless for some time anyway, and there isn't any better time of year to go visiting than right now, before the snow and ice come. There's a certain brook some distance from here that for a long time I've been thinking of visiting. I believe I'll start tonight, and I'll stay long enough for this trapper to get tired of setting traps and catching nothing."

"That's a good idea," said Little Joe Otter. "I believe I'll go visiting myself. I always did like to travel. There is no [illegible] taking foolish [illegible] and [illegible] what we would be doing by staying here. I think I'll go down to the Big River and stay awhile. The fishing here isn't as good as it might be, anyway. I wonder if Jerry Muskrat will go visiting, too. Let's tell him what we are going to do and see if he wants to go along with one of us."

"He can't go with me," declared Billy Mink in a most decided tone. "He travels too slow. I don't believe he would want to go with me anyway, because, between you and me, I suspect Jerry is a little afraid of me."

Little Joe Otter grinned. "I guess he has reason to be," said he. "I've been told that the Mink family has a liking for muskrat meat. I hardly think he'll want to go along with me either because he is such a home-loving body. But anyway, we'll tell him what we're going to do and then he can do as he pleases."

So Billy Mink and Little Joe Otter told Jerry how they were going to fool the trapper by going visiting. They urged him to do the same thing.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

LUNCHEON DISHES

FOR a delicious luncheon dish which will appeal to most tastes the following will be enjoyed:

Stuffed Peppers With Mushrooms

Wipe the mushrooms carefully and break into pieces. Use the field mushrooms that may be had for the gathering. Cook in a tablespoonful or two of butter, add one-half cupful of cream, three tablespoonfuls of soft bread crumbs, salt, pepper, and the beaten yolk of an egg. Fill the peppers that have been prepared by removing the veins and parboiling for five minutes, then drain and fill. Place in a baking dish or in gem pans with a little water in each. Cover with buttered crumbs and bake until the crumbs are well browned.

Luncheon Potatoes

Chop rather fine enough cold boiled potatoes to make a quart. Melt four tablespoonfuls of butter or sweet fat in a saucepan and add the potatoes. Mix well, add two tablespoonfuls of flour mixed with a cupful of milk. Stir well, cover and cook slowly for ten minutes. Add two hard-cooked eggs chopped and season well.

Ginger Ale Salad

Soften one-fourth of a package of gelatin in one-fourth of a cupful of water, dissolve over hot water; add a grating of lemon rind and one and three-quarters cupfuls of ginger ale. Turn into molds and set away to chill. Serve very cold on heart leaves of lettuce with a mayonnaise dressing to which three or more tablespoonfuls of cocktail sauce have been added.

For a lemonade that is always ready to serve take a cupful each of lemon juice, two cupfuls of sugar, boil together for five minutes, then bottle. Serve a tablespoonful or two of the sirup over cracked ice, fill the glass with water.

WOMEN COMING

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

No line dividin' sky and water,
And hot as sin, though I've been in
A lot of places it was hotter.
Thing by the door says eighty-four,
I wouldn't call that fearful weather,
Yet I don't know a day I've so
Felt sort of melted altogether.

If Maw don't mind, I guess I'll find
Out on the porch a corner cozy.
I don't know why it is, for I
Slept well last night, I feel so dozy.
There's things to do, a chore or two,
And yet tomorrow may be cooler,
We maybe might have rain tonight,
Today it's hot, and ain't no fooler.

What's that, they be? Gosh, I can't see
Why people go a-gallivantin'
And all dressed up, a day a pup
Like that one there jest lays a-pantin'.
All right, I'll run. Say, git my gun.
And find my hat. Well, come on, Rover.
A fellah jest must have his rest;
Come on—there's women comin' over.

INFANT TOLL HIGH IN U. S. DEATH RATE

Mortality Greatest in First Five Years of Life.

Washington. — For the modern, the first five years are the hardest, and of these, the first year is 12 times as fatal as any of the next four. A recent thoroughgoing study by the Census bureau of deaths and their cause in 1934 disclosed that the five-year period which most nearly approaches the first period in fatalities is that between the ages of seventy and seventy-five.

This might bring the improper conclusion that if a person gets through the first five years it is likely that he will live to seventy. The dividing line, however, lies somewhere just under sixty. There are slightly more deaths under sixty than beyond that age.

Of the 1,157,440 deaths in 1934 that were analyzed by the bureau, 585,696 were under sixty; 571,744 were after sixty. The study, for comparative purposes, covered those 34 states which have been reporting their vital statistics regularly to the bureau since 1920.

Among the causes, the diseases of early infancy—congenital debility, premature birth and injury at birth—accounted for almost half the deaths of those under one year. Pneumonia, diarrhea, entritis and congenital malformations covered another third. Whooping cough and influenza also claimed heavy fatalities among babies.

A close, general analysis, covering not only child but adult deaths, disclosed that about one out of four dies of heart or some circulatory disease; one out of nine dies of cancer; one out of 10 from diseases of the nervous system; one of 10 from infectious or parasitic diseases, with about the same ratio for accidents and for digestive disorders.

Most of the fatal illnesses of man lie between the skin and the bones. Only one of every 813 die of bone ailments, one of 685 from skin diseases. One out of every 370 dies of chronic poisoning and intoxication. And just one out of every 166 lives long enough to die of old age. Curiously enough, one death was attributed to senility between the ages of forty-five and fifty. The period claiming the largest number of such deaths, however, was between eighty and eighty-five.

Cancer Rate High.

Some of the diseases that ranked highest in fatalities were: Tuberculosis, 57,897; cancers and other tumors, 123,211; diabetes, 24,826; cerebral hemorrhage, 81,996; endocarditis, 53,240; myocarditis, 124,592; heart diseases, 42,348; bronchopneumonia, 34,254; lobar pneumonia, 44,791; violent and accidental deaths, 108,140; digestive diseases, 106,171.

Generally, the study showed that the modern was troubled most with his heart and circulatory system, next with cancers and tumors, has a nervous system that shatters, falls prey to dozens of infectious and parasite-carried diseases and is subject to a broad category of accidents. Beyond these, he has a stomach and digestive tract that may take him away. But smallpox, the scourge of a century ago, has almost vanished from the bodies of Americans. There were only nine deaths from smallpox in the area covered.

Some of the rarer diseases showed themselves, however. Two died of the plague. Scurvy took 28. Beriberi claimed four. And, perhaps indicative of the depression, only two died of gout.

Taylor's Election Cost Club $65 Livery Bill

Toledo.—An account book of the Whig committee, recently brought to light, reveals to what efforts Toledo's "Rough and Ready club" went in its determination to elect Zachary Taylor President in 1848.

So frequently did members rent horses and buggies for campaign trips, that their victory cost the club $65. The account book reveals that this sum was quickly subscribed, however, in the first two years of the Taylor-Fillmore administration. The account book belongs to Frank Segur of Toledo, whose grandfather, Dan Segur, was secretary of the Whig committee here.

Italians Are Rated as Most Talkative

London.—Italy is the most talkative nation in Europe and Germany is a poor second, according to the ratings of a European radio survey.

While Holland is the least garrulous nation on the air with only 12 per cent of its broadcasting time devoted to talks, the two countries ruled by dictators allot more time to talking than any other form of radio entertainment.

The stations of Italy devote 45 per cent of all available programs to talking, and those of Germany devote 27 per cent. After Germany the country with the most to say is Norway with 25 per cent "talk time."

Maybe I'm wrong, but it seems to me that New York changes its character with the change of seasons. In winter, it's cold, hard, artificial. In summer, it's hot, tired and inclined to be curt. In autumn, it's rebellious, those who have been away to the shore or mountains resenting return to steel and concrete and those who have been forced to stay here through the heated term, resenting months of imprisonment in apartments and tenements. In spring, it's like a lot of prisoners released without parole or probation and inclined to be a bit boisterous over their luck. Right now, it seems to be an overgrown village, friendly and with leisure to gape at excavations, line up alongside Riverside drive and stare at the Hudson and block pedestrian traffic whenever there is a window demonstration.

"Isn't anyone else having mushrooms for supper?" asked the hand, noticing that he was the only one eating them.

"We like them for breakfast best," said the farmer.

"Fine," said the hand.

Seeing Is Believing

By GRANT M. SASSAMAN

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

IT GAVE Al Belker a start to read in the afternoon papers that Tony Girbo had been shot to death in his room down on Peach street at nine o'clock that morning. But it didn't worry him when two detectives came to his apartment and told him to put on his hat.

Belker had been arrested no less than fifty times during his ten years of crime, and he had never yet served time. Alibis were what counted. He always had an alibi, whether he needed it or not. "Alibi Al" they called him.

"You guys got nothin' on me," he told the dicks as they started walking him down the street to headquarters. "I didn't bump Girbo, but I ain't sorry he's dead. I dunno who did it. I was ten miles away, changin' a tire on my car, at nine o'clock—out on York road."

"Oh, yeah?" rasped Anders, the taller of the detectives. "You were seen going into Girbo's rooming house at eight-thirty. At nine a guy across the hall hears a shot and the noise of some one lamming it down the stairs. Girbo lives long enough to name you as the killer. How d'you like that?"

Belker stopped and glared at Anders. "Yer lyin'!" he snarled. Then suddenly an ice-cold lance of fear touched his heart. Girbo was shot from behind, according to the papers. Plugged in the back. Maybe he believed—

Abruptly Belker's panic left him, and he cursed himself for that brief moment of fright. What did it matter what Girbo said? What the cops thought? "You pokes are all wet!" he jeered. "A half dozen old gents an' ladies sat on the porch out on York road while I changed my tire."

"I dunno what kind of joint it was. I didn't pay no attention. I was too busy knockin' off a guy ten miles away!"

"Don't wisecrack with me, punk!" hissed Anders. "I'll run your teeth through the back of your head! I've been laying for you ever since your mob held up the Corn Trust and put a bullet through Officer McDade's heart!"

"It wasn't me, nor any of my mo—friends! We had alibis, Flatfoot. We had—"

"Shut up!" snarled Anders.

At Second and Overton streets they stopped while Stevens, the short detective, bought a package of cigarettes from old Dornick, who had a stand at the corner. The old man's glance went past the tip of Belker's left ear, but it brought the sweat out upon his heavy face. Inwardly he cursed the dicks for bringing him past the corner he always avoided.

Old Dornick, two years before, had been a guard at the Corn Trust. The same slug that went through McDade's heart had ricocheted from the wall and ploughed into Dornick's head. Belker had fired that shot!

• • • • •

An hour later a red police car drove slowly along York road. In the front seat beside the driver was Lieutenant Winters. "Alibi Al" Belker sat in the rear, wedged between Anders and Stevens.

The lieutenant was saying over his shoulder: "I don't know what kind of place he's talking about, but it's got to be good—what with Girbo's dying statement and the fact that he was seen in the dead man's—"

"I ain't denyin' I was there," broke in Belker savagely. "A coupla minutes I was there. Then I got in my car and drove away!"

"Okay! Oka-ay!" snapped Anders. He bent forward and peered through the car window. "Is this the place you've been prattling about?" He pointed to a rambling frame house perched on a terrace ahead, on the left side of the road. Waving maples partially obscured the upper part of the building. There was a large porch in front.

"Yeh, that's it!" cried Belker triumphantly. "That's the dump! I was parked right there in full view o' the front porch!"

Anders, his face grim and disappointed, regarded the four silently. An old folks' home! Belker's alibi would stand in any court. These old people had nothing to do but watch the world go by. They'd welcome the diversion of testifying.

A sign, nailed to the coping of the porch roof and half hidden by the trees, caught Anders' eye. He went close to the terrace wall and peered upward.

Suddenly his grim lips pursed into a soundless whistle, and into his blue eyes leaped a gleam of savage jubilance. "You're right, punk," he chortled, spinning about, "Seeing is believing!" He grasped Belker by the arm, dragged him to the wall and pointed. "Read that, punk!"

Belker raised his glance. His mouth dropped open. A groan dribbled from his lips. The sign said: HOME FOR THE AGED BLIND.

FAMOUS HEADLINE HUNTER FLOYD GIBBONS' ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello Everybody

"The Hat on the Floor"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter

BEATRICE JOHNSON of Brooklyn, N. Y., has a doggone good criticism to make of Old Man Webster, the bird who wrote the dictionary. She says that when he defined the word "fear" he didn't half do the job.

And to illustrate her point, she tells a story of a big night at the Johnson home, when the whole darned family got the scare of their lives.

Beatrice is fifteen now, but she was only ten at the time of her adventure. Then she lived on Rockaway avenue out in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn with her mother, three little brothers, and an older sister.

Her father, a veteran of a colored regiment in the World war, had died some years before. The Johnsons lived on the top floor of a tenement, one of a long row of buildings all alike, and all joined together.

Mama Johnson Believes in Playing Hunches.

The door of their apartment led from the hall straight into the kitchen, and that door was a flimsy thing with a large pane of glass in the upper panel. It wasn't much of a protection, and the Johnsons, who had no man in the house to take care of them—well—it sort of got on their nerves a little.

One spring Saturday night in 1930, it got on Mama Johnson's nerves just enough so that she stayed home with her family instead of going to a party to which she had been invited. Ma Johnson still can't explain why she stayed home that night. She just had a hunch that something was going to happen. And sure enough—something did.

It was a hot night, and the whole family had gone to bed. Beatrice's kid brothers were snoring away in the next room, and her older sister, just recovering from an operation, was asleep, too. Beatrice was just about to drop off, when suddenly she was awakened by a loud crash—the sound of shattering glass!

Beatrice Investigates the Cause of the Crash.

Beatrice sat up in bed, her heart beating rapidly. That crash had come from the kitchen. It could mean only one thing. Some one was breaking into the house.

Her throat was dry, and her whole body was shaking. Mechanically, she picked up a bathrobe and jumped out of bed. To get to her mother's room she had to pass through the kitchen. Would the intruder be there? She put her hand on the door-knob and turned it slowly—quietly. The knob turned all right, but when she started to swing the door open, it creaked loudly.

Beatrice went weak all over from fright. "For a second, I stood there, unable to move," she says. "I tried to pray that the burglar would spare our lives, even though we had no money to give him. To this day I don't know what prompted my hand, but I reached up and turned on the light. Then my mother came rushing into the kitchen."

One glance told them that some one had been there. The glass pane in the kitchen door had been smashed to bits. The burglar's hat—a gray fedora, lay in the center of the kitchen floor. But the burglar himself was nowhere in sight. Was he hiding somewhere about the house? Neither Beatrice nor her mother dared to look. They were afraid they'd find him.

Hatless Intruder Grins in Through Broken Door

After that there was more confusion than the Johnson family had seen in years. Beatrice ran to the window. Her mother woke up her brothers and sister. Her little brothers were so scared that instead of getting dressed, they undressed—took off the underwear they were sleeping in and stood naked in the middle of the kitchen floor. Beatrice has laughed about that scene a hundred times since, but she didn't then. "I was scared stiff," she says. "I couldn't have smiled for a hundred dollars."

And then, suddenly, the thing happened. Beatrice's smallest brother raised a pointing finger and screamed: "There he is!" Beatrice looked up, and sure enough, there he was—a short, middle-aged Italian, his head and torso framed in the opening that had once been the glass panel of the kitchen door. He was hatless; his face pale; his eyes bloodshot, and he was grinning!

It was that weird, terrifying grin that scared Beatrice more than anything else. "My knees came near giving way under me," she says. "I ran to the window and screamed bloody murder." The garage man across the street heard her and called to a cop who was just up the street.

"Dago Red" Was Cause of All the Trouble!

Meanwhile, the little Italian had vanished. The Johnson family pulled themselves together, while the policeman and the garage man searched the house for the intruder. They found him all right, but when they arrested him for a burglar, he was the most indignant guy you ever saw. He wasn't a burglar, he said. No such thing. And what was more, he wanted his hat back.

Then the whole story came out. The little Italian had been out for the evening, and had taken a little too much red wine. He got into the wrong house—that wasn't hard to do because the whole doggone row of them looked alike—and when he had leaned against the Johnson's door to steady himself, the glass had broken and crashed to the floor.

His hat had fallen from his head, landing on the kitchen floor, and that's what he had come back for when Beatrice saw him there, grinning. He was grinning, he said, because the Johnsons looked so funny, particularly those three kid brothers standing in the middle of the floor without a stitch of clothes on.

Karakul Sheep Sacred

Karakul sheep have been regarded as sacred by Brahmans, Buddhists, and Mohammedans, notes a writer in the Detroit Free Press. They are the first animals mentioned in the Bible and historians consider them the first animals to have been domesticated in prehistoric times. "To the Bokharan, each part of the sheep has a symbolic meaning. The skull is regarded as the seat of knowledge, flexibility of life, etc., and on sacred pilgrimages the roadside is hung with these parts which the pilgrims touch

Festival of Midsummer

In pagan times Germany celebrated the festival of Midsummer, or "Sonnenwendfest," as the occasion when day triumphed over night, light over dark, the forces of good over evil, and today many superstitions are still observed. A young couple expecting to be married soon must either jump through the wheel of fire or over a bonfire, so that their union will be a happy one. In some sections, a few handfuls of grain are thrown into the flames, a souvenir of the old custom of offering a sacrifice to the sun.

War Debt Hangovers

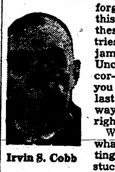
SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—In summarizing governmental finance for the fiscal year, Secretary Morgenthau doesn't even list the thirteen thousand millions of dollars owed to us by defaulting foreign nations.



Irvin S. Cobb

But Americans at large won't forget. If you doubt this, wait till one of these debtor countries gets in a fresh jam and turns to Uncle Sam for succor—and, brother, you can spell that last word the other way and still be right.

We didn't know what we were getting into when we stuck around too long after the fighting ended in 1918. Makes me think of a colored labor batallion who went on the loose at Brest on Armistice day.

A hardboiled top sergeant rounded them up:

"Get to work on dem freight piles," he commanded.

"Lissen," barked the sergeant, "de war may be over, lak you specifies, but fur sich ez you de duration ain't hardly started."

Woes of French Hotels

IF, OVER the woes of the French resort hotels, anybody catches me shedding a tear, it'll come out of an eyedropper and not from the heart. I'm thinking particularly of the romantic and soulful Riviera, which, under the surface, is just as romantic as an adding machine and soulful as a cash register.

There, where E. Phillips Oppenheim once delighted to "op" and the Yankee suckers rushed in, ready for their skinning—and never disappointed—is the original home of the deft short-change and the mastodonic overcharge. There I've seen many a mistake made in the bill and never yet one in favor of the customer.

Influenza Complications

SINCE the last bedside bulletin, so many souls have inquired, that I am offering a supplemental report on the work of the wrecking crew.

First I cracked an ear drum. (Cries of "Whose?") Then this clinging California influenza moved slightly south by west within your correspondent's area. So now I've fallen into the hands of a throat specialist.

A fine fellow—but easily satisfied in the matter of entertainment. His idea of a sprightly conversation is to hold down my tongue with a spoon and have me say "ah." What I claim is, when you've heard one "Ah," you've heard 'em all. But he fairly hangs on my words. There's a gleam in his eye I don't like. He's beginning to crave my tonsils.

Taking Political Sides

TODAY some entirely fair-minded patriot who is snuggled up close to the throne or hopes soon to be, proclaims: "Landon is as synthetic as a rubber duck. Roosevelt is the only hope of an imperiled people. What price a constitution when we can have frankfurters?"

Tomorrow another gentleman, who likewise is as unbiased as a spitefence, bursts forth with something like this:

"Re-elect Roosevelt and your country forever is wrecked. Landon alone can save our threatened institutions. A real statesman. He eats in the kitchen and hates to wear neckties."

Meanwhile, Mr. Roosevelt remains calm and seemingly confident. Governor Landon remains calm and seemingly hopeful.

• • •

The Two Opposing Camps

ON THE Republican side there temporarily is a lull. Incredible though it sounds, Col. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., is not getting ready to run for anything. Later reports may change this.

Organizing the speaking bureau for the Democrats, Chairman Rayburn does not list among the chosen orators the name of his most distinguished fellow Texan. In vaudeville it breeds a laugh when the second half of the sketch makes the wrong answers, but politics is something else again. Can it be that Uncle Jack Garner has become the Gracie Allen of his sex? Only they do let Gracie talk!

A writer who isn't taking sides wonders at length whether the homespun suspender-wearing qualities of Gov. Landon can overbalance the melodious and limpid lines of President Roosevelt. For this problem the appropriate musical accompaniment would seem to be, "Poet and Peasant."

Pinafore for Little Girl

Pattern No. 1910-B

The clever cutting of this useful pinafore is shown in the small diagram beside the little girl. You will see at once that this frock requires no seaming and of course the feature which so greatly intrigues children is the butterfly which forms the pocket.

Notice how simple it is to put on, merely slipped over the head and tied at each side. Mothers find it a great help because it can be used as an apron over a frock, which must be kept clean, or worn instead of a frock. The panties to match are an asset—they have the comfortable French yoke top and stay snug but never bind. This attractive design made in cotton, percale, gingham, calico, or lawn would be effective with contrasting binding and colorful embroidery on the butterfly pocket.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1910-B is available for sizes 2, 4, 6, and 8. Size 6 requires 1 1-2 yards of 35 inch material plus 7-8 yard for the panties. Send fifteen cents in coins.

Send for the Summer Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send fifteen cents for your copy.

Money in the World

It is estimated that there is about $110,000,000,000 in money in the world. This is based on the gold reserves of 50 principal nations, which amount to approximately $22,000,000,000. There are variations as to different countries, but on an average the paper and other money is about five times the gold held. The United States at present is an exception, as it has a much higher proportion of gold. Some other countries are below the average.

SUMMER RECIPES CALLING FOR USE OF FRESH FRUITS

Now that summer days are at hand, the alert woman is interested in successful recipes calling for the use of fresh fruits. Here are three that have been thoroughly tested:

Fresh Fruit Pies

For rhubarb, plum, grape, strawberry, raspberry, blackberry, blueberry or huckleberry pie:

Combine 3½ cups prepared fruit, 1½ to 2½ tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca, and 1 to 1¼ cups sugar. Let stand 15 minutes, or while pastry is being made. Use as filling for 9-inch pie.

Fresh Peach and Banana Mold

1 package lime flavored gelatin
1 pint warm water
½ cup fresh peaches, sliced
1 banana, sliced

Dissolve lime flavored gelatin in warm water. Arrange sliced peaches on bottom of mold. Pour on warm gelatin, being careful not to disarrange peaches. Add banana. Chill until firm. Unmold. Garnish with whipped cream, if desired. Serves six.

Ripe Pear Jam

4 cups (2 lbs.) prepared fruit
7½ cups (3¼ lbs.) sugar
1 bottle pectin

Peel, core, and crush completely, or grind, about 3 pounds fully ripe pears. If desired, about 3 teaspoons spice may be added.

Measure sugar and prepared fruit into large kettle, mix well, and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard one minute. Remove from fire and stir in pectin. Then stir and skim by turns for just five minutes to cool slightly, to prevent floating fruit. Pour quickly. Paraffin and cover as above. Makes about 11 glasses (6 fluid oz. each).

Work With Dignity

Do what thou hast in hand with perfect and simple dignity and feeling of affection, and freedom and justice; and to give thyself relief from all other thoughts.

BUSINESS IS BUSINESS

Call on a business man at business times only, and on business, transact your business and go about your business, in order to give him time to finish his business.—Duke of Wellington.

Foreign Meat Now on U. S. Tables

Chicago, Ill.—Most of the world now is helping to supply the American dinner table with its meat at the expense of the American cattle grower, data on meat imports at New York compiled by the National Provisioner, a trade publication of the meat packing and allied industries, show.

For the nine months ended April 30, 1936, there has been imported into the United States a total of 100,672,885 pounds of cottonseed oil, crude and refined, the publication points out.

These products come into direct competition in the United States with American farmers, and in the case of pork and cotton, drastic reductions have been made in American production under the New Deal agricultural policies.

Celebrated 50th Anniversary

On Sunday afternoon the Otto Johnson farm home was the scene of a large celebration, the occasion being the 50th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Johnson.

Hudreds of friends and relatives came to spend the day with them and to congratulate them upon their anniversary. The Holt Community Band furnished the music and short talks were given by Rev. T. Myhrer of Newfolden and Mr. A. P. Thompson of Holt. The Swanson sisters of Goodridge and the Johnson sisters of Moorhead sang several beautiful songs.

After the program the day was spent in renewing old acquaintences and playing games. The ladies of the crowd brought lunch which was served to over three hundred people.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson were presented with a gift as a remembrance of the occasion.

Johanson-Raaum Wedding

The following item was clipped from their home paper and sent us by Rev. and Mrs. O. I. Raaum of Vashon, Washington.

The Colvos Lutheran Free Church was the scene of a beautiful wedding July 4th, when Miss Norma Johansen, danghter of Mr. and Mrs. August Johansen, became the bride of Rev. Ernest Raaum, son of Rev. and Mrs. O. I. Raaum.

The ceremony took place at five o'clock in the evening with the groom's father performing the ceremony in a picturesque setting of the church, which was adorned with two large baskets of Regale lillies, and an arch of pink rosebuds.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was lovely in a long white satin gown made with an Elizabethian collar and long sleeves, full to the elbow. Her long silk tulle veil, inset with a row of pink rosebuds, was caught into a turban with a silver coronet. She carried a shower bouquet of yellow rosebuds.

The Misses Laura and Ella Johansen, also sisters of the bride, Thelma Nelson, and Mrs. Valborg Raaum also wore pastel shades of taffeta in green, coral, aqua blue, and yellow, respectively. They wore wreaths in their hair of pink and white sweet peas, and carried corresponding bouquets of sweet peas.

Little Joyce Stavney, wearing a long yellow net dress, and carrying a basket of sweet peas and roses, was flower girl.

Mrs. Gilbert Berg sang "Because" and "At Dawning" accompanied by Miss Valborg Stavney, cousin of the bride, who also played the wedding march.

Following the ceremony about 125 guests assembled at the bride's home for the reception.

Rev. Raaum and his bride left the same evening for a short wedding trip and will leave for Bella Coola, B. C. the last of the month, where Raaum has a pastorate waiting him.

Card of Thanks

We wish to take this means of expressing our hearfelt thanks to all those who attended our Golden Wedding, July 26th. Also for the lovely gift.

Thank you all.

Oppegaard-Hanson Wedding At Milan, Minn., Friday, June 26

The following writeup was taken from the Milan Standard sent us this week from Milan, Minnesota.

At a beautiful candlelight wedding service at the Kviteseid Lutheran church on Friday evening, June 26, Miss Marian Cleo Jeanette Oppegaard became the bride of Mr. Tollef Clifford Lloyd Hanson, both well known young people of this community. The service was read by the Rev. R. R. Syrdal at 8:30 o'clock. Two large candelabra of lighted white candles, Japanese lilacs, daisies and peonies at the Alter and lighted candles in the windows furnished the setting for the ceremony.

The bride was attended by her two sisters, Miss Constance, as maid of honor, and Miss Agnes, as bridesmaid. The groom was attended by his brother, Tosten, as best man and an intimate friend, Mr. Norman Hagen, as groomsman.

To the strains of Lohengrin's "Bridal Chorus," played by Mrs. O. E. Locken, of Crookston, an aunt of the bride, the bride and her attendants entered the church. Miss Oppegaard was escorted by her brother, Lawrence, who gave her in marriage at the alter, where they were met by the groom and his attendants, who entered from the sacristy. Serving as ushers were LeRoy Peterson, Everett Evans and Waldemar Goulson.

The bride's dress was of white satin and lace with a slight train and a trailing veil of white net fastened with orange blossoms to a headdress set with gems and a band of pearls She carried no flowers, but on her arm rested a white New Testament from which hung a shower of Rose buds and fernery. The Testament was a gift from the groom.

Miss Constance was dressed in a floor-length gown of pink net over taffeta and carried a bouquet of peonies. Miss Agnes wore a floor-length gown of light blue chiffon with a pink sash over blue taffeta and also carried a bouquet of peonies.

Mrs. J. T. Klovstad sang "Crowned With Thy Benediction" before the ceremony and "O Perfect Love" immediately after, while the couple remained kneeling at the alter. Mrs. Locken also played "Evening Star," from Tannhauser, by Wagner, as a prelude, and for the recessional, Mendelsohn's wedding march.

A reception was given by the bride's mother, Mrs. Martha Oppegaard, at the church parlors where approximately 150 guests were present. Light refreshments including ice cream, cake, "Krumkage" and coffee were served. A wedding cake beautifully decorated, had been baked for the occasion by Mrs. Oscar L. Olson, an aunt of the groom. A program was given at which the Rev. Mr. Syrdal acted as toastmaster. The following responed with congratulatory speeches to the newly-weds: The Rev. E. I. Strom, Edwin E. Ostraat, Mrs. O. E. Locken, Hon. Edward Hagen and Lawrence Oppegaard. A telegram of congratulations was received from the Rev. H. J. Stolee, of Northfield.

At the reception, Mrs. Stanley Anderson served as hostess and the waitresses were the Misses Olive Moen, Margaret Klovstad and Ruth Rosrtad.

Out-of-town guests present at the wedding and reception were: Mrs. O. E. Locken and daughters Helene and Mary Ellen, Crookston Mr. and Mrs. Gilmore Peterson and three daughters, Mrs. Harold Hilden, Mrs. Kenneth Aslakson, Miss Alvina and Myrtle Peterson, LeRoy and Manford Peterson and Miss Ann Marie Hustad all of Minneapolis, Mr. and Mrs. Orrin Oppegaard and son of Wheaton, Mrs. H. Stolee and daughters and Edwin Ostraat of Northfield, and Everett Evans of Ortonville, besides many from Watson, Big Bend and surrounding localities.

They will make their new home at Holt, Marshall couny, where the groom will be installed as pastor of the Nazareth Lutheran church on Sunday, August 16. They will be at home to their many friends there after August 15.

The bride is the oldest daughter of Mrs. Martha Oppegaard, of this place, and is a graduate of the local high school and the normal teachers' training department of the Crookston high school. She taught in rural schools in this vicinity for four years and for the past three years has been otherwise employed in Minneapolis and here.

The groom is the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Halvor Hanson, of Westbank, who were on this day celebrating the 28th anniversary of their own wedding. The groom graduated from the Montevideo high school in 1927, and received his B. A. degree at Luther college, Decorah, Iowa, in 1933, and his bachelor of theology and candidate of theology degrees at the Luther Theological seminary in St. Paul this spring. He will be ordained into the holy ministry at the Big Bend Lutheran church Sunday, August 2, and installed at his new charge at Holt August 16.

Heat Spell Broken By Rain

The weather the past week has been good for the farmers who have a lot of work to do at this season of the year. On Saturday night and Sunday morning this territory was showered with a fine rain. This was welcome at this time as it will revive the late seeded crops and pastures.

Gone To The Dogs

At some swimming beaches there are notices that no dogs are allowed. And they mean it too. At Diamond Point Park at Bemidji you have to go swiming with dogs or stay out of the water. 'Tis a shame for such a place.

Putting In New Scale

A crew of carpenters and scale experts from Minneapolis arrived here this week to install a new 16 ton air-dump scale at the elevator of the Northern Seed and Grain Company. Mr. Ness, manager for the company here, stated that the old scale was too small for large trucks with heavy loads.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Larson, Mr. and Mrs. Hj. Peterson, Mr. and Mrs. V. E. Oakey and Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Swan spent Sunday at Roosevelt picking raspberries. They reported finding several good spots where they picked many quarts each.

Bought Home In Oregon

We have this week received a communication from Elling Tollefsrud and family in Oregon, in which they state that they want the Holt Weekly News sent to them at Silverton, Oregon. They have purchased a 15 acre farm with a home on it a mile and a half from that city and about four miles from Mt. Angel.

We had a fine trip out here. Spent a day and a half in the Yellowstone National Park and spent a week in the state of Washington. We are enjoying the state of Oregon: Sincere greetings to Minnesota friends.

The Tollefsruds.

Soil Conservaton Meeting Here

Farmers are hereby notified that a Soil Conservation Meeting will be held at Holt, Friday evening, July 31st to explain new rulings and changes and application of bases in connection with the soil conservation program.

R. A. Reierson, County Agent.

Mrs. G. Gilbertson and children who have been visiting with Mrs. Gilbertson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Sorum, the past three weeks left last Thursday for their home near Hillsboro.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Wangen, Mr. and Mrs. H. Wangen of Duluth and Mr. and Mrs. A. Hammersten of Highlanding visited at the Christ Engen home Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. O. C. Johnson and daughters of Moorhead, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Johnson, Eunice and Verna visited at the R. F. Smith home Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Gust Friberg and family of Donald, Alberta, Canada, visited at the G. Swenson and Pete Sorter homes, returning from a visit with relatives at Granite Falls, Minn.

Notice To Band Members

All band members are asked to attend band rehearsal Tuesday evening, Aug. 4. Be there.

At The Avalon Theatre

If you go to the Avalon Theatre at Thief River Falls, Sunday August 2, you can see another glorious achievement for the reigning queen of song - - Grace Moore in "The King Steps Out" with Franchot Tone, Walter Connolly and Raymond Walburn.

Matinee at 2:30. Colored Silly Symphony and Latest News.

Drilling New Well At Creamery

After having furnished all the water needed for the manufacture of butter, and steam at the creamery here the past 24 years, the old drilled well finally played out. Mr. Larson, Manager of the creamery stated that they are now drilling a new well and expect to have a good supply in a short time.

Hilmer Erickson, who drilled the first well there nearly a quarter century ago, also has the jsb to drill the new one.

The Safety Man

Let's say something again about bycicles, roller skates, and coasters.

People riding bicycles in the street are a part of the regular traffic and should observe traffic rules. When a child rushes out of a driveway on a bicycle, or weaves from one side of the street to the other, he is not fair to automobile drivers.

Most automobile drivers watch out for children riding bicycles, and bicycle riders should form the habit of looking out for automobiles. To ride safely at night, place a light on the front of the bicycle and a tail light or reflector at the rear. It is not safe for two people to ride on one bicycle. It is difficult to control the vehicle that way.

Roller skaters should obey the same rules as people on foot.

Observe these safety rules, and you parents caution and warn your children to obey these rules also.

Bloody Civil War Rages in Spain

CIVIL war, desperate and bloody, broke out in Spain, and though the government in Madrid declared it was in control of the situation, such news as got through the censorship indicated that the struggle was by no means ended. On one side were the Fascists and royalists led by Gen. Francisco Franco; on the other were the loyal troops and the workers, Communists and Socialists. The rebels started the game in Spanish Morocco and the Canaries and were soon in control there. Then Franco, who is only forty-three years old but a dynamic character, crossed over to Algeciras, followed by the Foreign Legion and a lot of Moors, Moroccans and black African troops. After a sharp batttle at La Linea, close to Gibraltar, these contingents began a march northward toward Seville and Cadiz. There was severe fighting in San Sebastian, where the American embassy is located in summer, and in other border towns. Malaga was reported to be in flames.

L. Companys

Commanders of the rebels asserted their aim was to "save the republic," to keep order and to destroy the Marxists. In Barcelona their attack was directed especially against Luis Companys, president of the Catalonian parliament, who was said to be besieged in his offices.

Jose Maria Gil Robles, leader of the Catholic C. E. D. A. (Confederation of Autonomous Right Parties) fled to Biarritz, France. An aviator who escaped the rebels in Morocco declared Gil Robles had instigated the revolt.

Premier Santiago Casares Quiroga resigned in favor of Diego Martinez-Barrio, speaker of parliament, but the latter held the office only a few hours. Then Jose Giral, former minister of marine, formed a cabinet with General Pozas, who has the support of both the powerful Civil Guard and Republican elements of the army, as minister of war.

The rebels sent word to the government that unless it capitulated they would bomb Madrid from planes.

Olympic Torch Started to Berlin Games

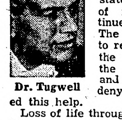
IN OLYMPIA, Greece, scene of the first Olympic games, a torch was lighted by the rays of the sun and a Greek runner seized it and started it on a 12-day relay to the sports field in Berlin where the Olympic flame is to be lighted on August 1. Five thousand distinguished persons were selected to carry the torch, these including King Boris of Bulgaria, King Peter of Jugoslavia, and a long list of princes, statesmen and sportsmen. On the last leg it was to be borne by S. Loues of Greece, winner of the marathon in the games of 1896. A hundred thousand Hitler youths will accompany Loues in a triumphal parade to the stadium.

Five thousand torches to carry the flame were donated by the Krupp works, so each of the bearers will retain one as a souvenir.

Hot and Dry Spell Broken by Rains and Cool Winds

RELIEF for the drouth-stricken regions in the Middle West came with rains in many sections and cooling winds that sent the temperature down toward normal. However, it was too late to save the crops in many states, and prices of foodstuffs continued to advance. The farmers began to receive aid from the government in the form of cash, and no one could deny that they needed this help.



Dr. Tugwell

Loss of life throughout the United States from the unprecedented heat wave exceeded 3,850, an all-time high.

Agronomists in Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and Ohio expressed apprehension over the outlook for the corn crop unless general rains should develop rapidly.

Arriving at Bismarck, N. D., to help co-ordinate drouth relief enterprises, Rexford G. Tugwell, resettlement administrator, was informed that approximately 60,000 farm families in the state were among the needy. A conference of state and federal officials in Bismarck developed a three-fold plan for the relief of dwellers in the desolated areas of the Dakotas, western Minnesota, eastern Montana and Wyoming. These included:

Immediate advancement of money to needy families, repayable out of WPA earnings; granting of funds to farmers desiring to keep small livestock herds for the purchase of feed and subsistence to be repaid by work on WPA projects; loans and grants to owners of large scale cattle enterprises to cover the cost of shipping animals to other states for feeding.

Nazi Decrees in Danzig Crush Opposition

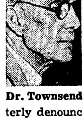
UNLESS the protests of Poland are effective, all opposition to Nazi power in the Free City of Danzig is due to be crushed. Dr. Arthur Karl Greiser, president of the Danzig senate, which is controlled by Nazis, has issued administrative decrees ordering:

1. Dissolution of any organization whose members, with knowledge of its executive board, spreads news "endangering the state interest."
2. Prohibition of review by the courts of police measures of a political nature, including those aimed at the right of assembly, the press, and free speech.
3. Prohibition of Jewish ritual slaughtering for food purposes.
4. Imposition of three month protective custody on persons declared to be "endangering the public peace."

Thus the city's constitution is virtually set aside, and the Poles especially, having extensive economic interests there, are indignant.

Doings of Towsendites in Their Convention

AN ALLIANCE between Dr. Francis E. Townsend, Father Charles E. Coughlin and Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith in the interests of a third party was announced at the Townsendite convention in Cleveland, attended by 12,000 followers of the California doctor who advocates pensions of $200 per month for every person over sixty.



Dr. Townsend

In an address before the convention, Father Coughlin bitterly denounced the present administration and President Roosevelt and called upon the delegates to follow Dr. Townsend in endorsing the candidacy of William Lemke for the presidency on the Union ticket.

Lemke himself appeared before the convention before it adjourned and made a speech in which he pledged himself to "stand foursquare behind the old age pension movement" and denounced the present administration as "national lunacy." The delegates applauded the first statement, but otherwise were rather apathetic toward the Union party leader. Doctor Townsend made no plea for him but merely urged his followers to concentrate on the election of senators and congressmen.

Nanking Troops Take Control of Canton

REVOLT of the Cantonese against the Nanking government has collapsed and latest reports say government troops have entered Canton and taken over maintenance of peace and order. There was no opposition and the city was quiet.

Chen Chi-tang, the Canton war lord, deserted his followers and fled to Hongkong on a gunboat. There was a scramble to find Chen's alleged silver hoard, said to amount to many million dollars, but much of it is believed to be deposited in foreign banks.

The Nanking government gains possession of Kwantung province's fleet of more than 300 fighting planes, and also of extensive armaments. These latter include quantities of heavy artillery, field artillery and machine guns, nearly half a million rifles, numbers of anti-aircraft guns, tanks, the southwest's navy, two arsenals and one airplane factory.

Turkey Given Right to Rearm the Dardanelles

EIGHT signatories to the Lausanne post-war treaty have granted to Turkey the right to remilitarize the Dardanelles, and they, with Turkey, have signed a convention covering the matter. Only Japan made slight reservations because it is no longer a member of the League of Nations.

The convention grants complete liberty to merchant marine passage through the straits in peacetime and wartime, even with Turkey at war, provided the commercial vessels do not assist the fighting powers.

The Russian navy is granted complete freedom in peacetime to leave and enter the Black sea through the straits, but nations outside will be subjected to limitations on passage of fighting ships through the channel.

During wartime belligerents will be prohibited from using the straits unless acting for the league.

Communist Campaign to Open on August 5

NATIONAL campaign headquarters of the Communist party have been opened in New York city and it is announced that Earl Browder, candidate for President, will start his speechmaking in Denver on August 5. From there he goes to Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Ore., Seattle, Butte, Bismarck and Minneapolis. All his speeches will be broadcast.

James W. Ford, colored, the Communist party's candidate for vice president, will open his tour August 5 with an appearance in Scranton, Pa.

Attempt to Kill King Edward of England

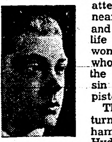
THE attempted assassination of King Edward VIII of England in London brought great alarm to the English speaking world. The attempt was made near Hyde Park and the monarch's life was saved by a woman bystander who grappled with the would-be assassin and wrested a pistol from him.



King Edward

The king was returning to Buckingham palace from Hyde Park, where on horseback he had presented new colors to six battalions of the Grenadier, Coldstream and Scots guards.

In Paris, the celebration of France's national holiday, Bastille day, saw the Champs Elysees a scene of rioting with rightists and leftists in combat with each other and the police. The disorders began when leftists were returning from their own parade in the eastern section of the city.

Lewis and Others Are Summoned for Trial

IMMEDIATE splitting of the American Federation of Labor into two rival groups was averted by the action of the Federation's executive council in voting to bring to trial on August 3, the union leaders led by John L. Lewis on charges of "dual unionism." It had been reported earlier that the council had voted to suspend the 12 unions grouped as the Committee for Industrial Unionization.

The council's action was looked upon as a peace move in the crisis that threatens open warfare in the labor movement. It was precipitated by the drive to organize 500,000 workers in the steel industry into one big industrial union by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and his followers.

The charges against the Lewis group include "competition as a rival organization with the A. F. of L."; fomenting an insurrection within the Federation; violation of contracts they have entered into with the Federation when granted their charters.

L. P. Ayers Predicts Big Business Improvement

PREDICTING 1936 will be the best business year since 1930 and "possibly since 1929," Colonel Leonard P. Ayers, economist of Cleveland, declared that statistics on all important business had shown substantial and "healthy increases" since the first of this year. Strikes, drouth and other difficulties have not affected increases in employment, markets and security exchanges, the economist said.

"More steel has been produced in the first half of 1936 than in all 1932," he pointed out. "A major factor in the increased steadiness of business has been well sustained employment among the factory workers making durable goods. Workers in the durable goods factories suffer most from lay-offs and shut-downs, but such has not been the case in the first half of this year and of last year."

Henry Ford Has Vision Concerning Foods

HENRY FORD, approaching his seventy-third birthday envisioned the eventual decline of farm animals as a source of the world's food and predicted that grains and other crops will largely be substituted for them.

Henry Ford

"We can, I believe, get a more plentiful supply of food cheaper and better," he said, "by processing the products of the soil instead of asking cows and chickens to do it for us. In the future farm animals of all kinds will decline in numbers. We won't need them."

Army to Get Many New Fast Fighting Planes

PERFECTED plans of the War department for procurement of airplanes provide for the acquisition of 60 new fast fighting planes every month during the rest of this year. This has been made possible by the smooth functioning of a new purchasing plan started by Harry H. Woodring, assistant secretary of war.

Before the end of the year, 500 new planes will be ready for action, officials said. Plans have been made for the purchase of more than 600 planes of various types in 1937.

Refresh the Finer Nature

We are too apt to let the mean things of life overgrow the finer nature within us; therefore it is expedient that at least once a day we read a little poetry, or sing a song, or look at a picture.—Goethe.

Strange Hobby

An Australian, at Sydney, Australia, has a queer habit. He buys up barrow loads of fruit—then takes delight in selling out everything at a penny a dozen. This light-hearted philanthropist says that he has been wanting to do this sort of thing ever since he was a child. He has been the center of attraction. "I don't know why I do it, except that I feel happy," he says. "Sometimes I'm walking along and see a fruit-barrow, and before you can say 'How's your uncle?' I've bought the lot."

EATING HEAVY FOODS

"Wasting my time," Barry told Harwood, the next morning, in the city editor's busy office at The Globe. "My time, and nearly a hundred dollars of the paper's money. Winslow had it straight. The Fane girl was strutting her stuff from one o'clock until long after the murder."

"Well, it's good to be sure."

"Yes, and I'm mighty sure now. Every step I've taken since our last meeting leads right up to Mrs. Kelly."

Harwood looked at him quizzically. "Step No. 1?" he asked.

"My advertisement offering a reward for the number of the cab that killed that artist's wife."

"You don't mean that you got it?"

"There it is," he said. "026017. The figures under it are the number of the driver who gave me the information."

Ernie copied both numbers.

"Swell work," he commented. "Anything else?"

"Lots. This fellow had a passenger who got out at Twenty-third street around midnight. When the woman was killed—two hours later—the driver bumped into him again in Sixteenth street, very much rattled, and looking as though 'he'd committed a murder.'"

"Any description?"

"Rather a vague one. That doesn't matter. I'm sure, in my own mind, that this passenger was the caller Kelly expected, and that he wasn't the murderer. I'm equally sure that he knew murder had been committed."

"Let's call it a mere supposition. In that case, Kelly was killed around two o'clock. At two o'clock, Mrs. Kelly wasn't in Harlem."

"How do you know that?"

Barry's answer was a full report of his adventures of Saturday. "Without Step No. 1, Step No. 2 means nothing. In other words, if Kelly'd been killed at midnight—which is the theory everyone's worked on—Mrs. Kelly's alibi would have been holeproof."

Harwood joined his finger-tips in an almost prayerful gesture. "I wish we could find the guy who looked 'as though he'd committed a murder.'"

Barry made no reply.

"That's always the trouble," the city editor went on. "What kind of a skate is this Luis Morano? Tough?"

"On the contrary. Cries over a mammy song."

"That so?" Harwood inquired. "Where is this Cocoanut Bar?"

Barry told him, and promptly returned to Mrs. Kelly. "How the deuce are we going to prove what she did after she got home?"

"That's up to you," Ernie said. "I'm off on a new tack now." His eyes twinkled. "One that would go a long way toward establishing your theory of coincidence. Gosh, I'd give my two uppers to break this story within the next week or two."

Thursday evening, Barry spent in his room, mostly thinking. He had telephoned Pat twice since their luncheon together, and found her enthusiastic over her guests. "There's nothing wrong with the boy," she declared; "nothing that a few weeks out here won't cure. He's on the beach now, with his mother."

Judge Hambidge had taken to the little fellow at once. Almost like having a grandchild. It kept his mind off his worries. And no one could see Peggy, being brave, but always staring at nothing, always thinking of what might happen, without pity that warmed into affection. "She's really an awfully good sort," Pat said, from Southampton. "I like her a lot. When are you coming out?"

"Tomorrow, I hope."

"Well, we'll expect you for dinner."

That breach was healed, all right. Pat had called him "the scum of the earth." In the same hour, he remembered again, he had told her he loved her. As to that, she still maintained silence. "That's the kindest thing she could do," Barry thought. "A Judge's daughter, and I—"

Barry had learned not to think of the future. "Nor heed the rumble of a distant drum," as his own father had put it. Just for now, it was pleasant to be somebody who knew Pat—and he wanted to take that awful look out of the other girl's eyes. "That oughtn't to be hard now," Barry thought. "If I could get that Filipino to talk. He knows when Mrs. Kelly came home, and he's probably got a darned good idea what she did afterward. If we could get to that Oriental—"

At which point, Evans came, and he had been drinking.

"Sorry, sir," he apologized, taking the nearest chair. Evans had none of Willetts' compunctions. "Sorry, sir, but I've been having dinner with Kelly's chauffeur."

"Liquid nourishment?"

"Yes, sir," Evans admitted, sheepishly. "But that was the only chance I had with that Irishman."

"Well?"

"Well, I drove Miss Hambidge, and Mrs. Rogers, and the boy to Southampton, like you said. And I started back today. It was nearly eight when I made the garage, and I was good and hungry.

"There's a decent cafe a few yards away. Nolan — that's Kelly's chauffeur—was sitting at a table, with a load he ought to've gone twice for."

Evans smiled.

"Ed had a grouch on women in general. And he was chowed plenty. I hadn't been with him long when he opened up on Mrs. Kelly. There's something queer between her and this Filipino, he says."

"Charlie?"

"That isn't his name, but let it go at that. And, when Ed said 'queer,' he didn't mean anything wrong. Just some kind of an understanding. Mrs. Kelly's been giving the Chink coin and jewelry, regular. Charlie showed him some of it, Ed says.

"Well, the night of the murder Noland drives Kelly to the Cocoanut Bar. And home—at nine o'clock. When he gets out at his house, Kelly says, 'Put the car in the garage. Mrs. Kelly's gone up to Harlem, and I won't need you 'til tomorrow morning.'

"Ed obeys orders. He goes back to Kelly's, and sits in the kitchen. This Chink is in the butler's pantry, getting a tray ready. And, while the two of 'em are down there, the damnedest row starts upstairs—"

"Rogers and Kelly."

"No. This was around nine o'clock. Mrs. Kelly. She was laying Mike out so you could have heard it a block.

Ernie Copied Both Numbers.

Well, this goes on for ten or fifteen minutes, and then the bell from the parlor rings. Charlie starts upstairs with the tray. He gets up two steps, when Kelly appears at the head of the flight. "Come up here, you lousy spy. Come up here while I tell you where you get off!'

"Charlie sets down the tray, and goes. Nolan follows into the pantry, and has a stiff drink. Then he sits down again, and listens to Kelly laying out the Chink."

"Could he hear anything? Words, I mean?"

"No. Just Kelly's voice. Mrs. Kelly was out of it. She'd gone to her room, Nolan thinks. But Kelly made noise enough for two. And, after another ten minutes or so, Charlie comes back.

"'I'm fired,' Charlie says — in the Chink lingo. 'I got to get out. That blankety-blank told me to go quick, or he'd kill me.'

"'Are you going?' Nolan asks.

"'Sure,' the Chink says. "I got to get my money first. He chased me out of the room when I asked for it, but I'm going back,' the Chink says.

"Nolan then took the cook to a movie, and when they get back, everything's quiet. It's after midnight, because these two walked home. Kelly's upstairs, talking to somebody, and the Chink's in his room, packing and muttering to himself something frightful. So Nolan says good night to the cook, who goes into her room, and then Nolan slips into the pantry, and takes another shot of that hootch."

"What hootch?"

"The rye whiskey I was telling you about."

Barry sprang from his chair.

"The rye whiskey?".

"Sure. And it was in a cut-glass decanter."

"Are you certain?"

"Nolan is. And he's just as certain that it was still in the pantry when the guy upstairs left."

"Why?"

"Because he heard the front door close ten seconds before he went out the back way."

"Mrs. Kelly wasn't home," he said. "She went to her sister's after the high-jinks in Harlem, and Nolan got her there the next morning, before they called the police. There were only three people in that house after the guy went who was visiting Kelly—Kelly himself, cook, and a mighty mad Chinaman."

"Filipino."

"Whatever he was, he was mad, and the decanter that killed Kelly was downstairs with him until just about the time Kelly was killed."

"Thanks," Barry nodded. "I think we've got something.'

"Oh, I forgot to give you this. It came—to Southampton—just as I was leaving," said Evans.

"This" was a cablegram. Alone, in the smoke-filled room, Barry opened it. Nine words. "Father and I sailing for home Sunday. Love. Mother."

For an instant, he stood, frozen, the wire in his hand.

"'Out-going passenger and mail ships," he read. "Sailing tomorrow—Steamship Oranje Nassau. For Port-au-Prince, La Guayra, Curacoa, Maracaibo, Carupano, and Pampatar.' I'm on my way to one of 'em tomorrow!"

CHAPTER IX

Barry's panic was short-lived.

Between him and the sailing list had come a vision of Peggy, with beaded lashes screening eyes forever staring at nothing.

"I can't do it," he said to himself. "I can't run away and leave that girl in the lurch. Nor Pat either. I've tackled this job, and I've got to go through with it.

"Anyway, it begins to look as though the end were in sight. If Ridder sails Sunday—"

He went back to the shipping news.

"If Ridder sails Sunday, that's the Bremen and she's due here the following Saturday. That gives us eight days. I'd better see Winslow."

He called Peter next morning, but the attorney was in the country. "Left last night," his secretary reported, "and won't be back until Monday."

Barry had a dinner engagement at Southampton. "We'll start things humming on Monday," Barry told himself. "I've got my house to put in order, too. Ridder's house, that is."

Evans telephoned around ten, and before noon they were on their way to Southampton. "My last week-end with Pat," he was thinking. "Where'll I be next Saturday? Out of luck, and out of a job. In jail, maybe, and in the newspapers. That's my finish with—everybody."

There was a new atmosphere at the Hambidge's. Pat had been right in telling Jacky that he'd "cheer my father up a lot." "They're building a railway on the beach," she laughed, when the boy—sunburned, and active—joined them before dinner.

"You must go to bed now," Pat bade him, "if we're to take our ride in the morning. We have a canter every day before breakfast," she added to Barry, ringing for a maid to take charge of the youngster. "I discovered the dearest little pony in the village, and the man brings it over at nine o'clock, with another horse for me. Jacky's getting to be a regular Buffalo Bill."

The strained expression of a week ago was beginning to disappear from the face of Judge Hambidge. But the greatest difference was in the boy's mother. Naturally imitative, as Barry had remarked, she had been quick to observe and emulate Pat's moderation with make-up. Her speech, too, had lost all but an occasional inadvertent reference to "guys" and "dames." She had stopped staring into space. "What's the news about Jack?" she asked, quite calmly.

"Free next week," Barry declared ringingly.

At the dinner table, in spite of herself, Peg caught some of the contagion of Barry's new confidence. Nolan's story sounded like the solution of everything, they agreed. "We've got to get Jack out before Saturday," Barry said. "His father'll be home then."

Both women looked up at him.

"What'll happen to you?" Peggy asked.

"The main question," Barry urged, "is what's going to happen to Peg. And Jack. And Jacky."

"We'll meet that when it comes," Peggy returned, steadily. "But now I'm worried about you."

She excused herself early, with the plain purpose of leaving Barry with Pat. But the Judge stayed on. His legally trained mind had been busy with the Nolan disclosures.

"If Mrs. Kelly slept at her sister's, why didn't she say so to you? It would've been her best alibi."

"Yes, but it would have involved admitting that she'd had a run-in with Kelly."

"That's true," Hambidge admitted. "But Nolan was drunk last night, you say. And some parts of his story simply don't hold water. I don't believe there was anything 'queer' between Mrs. Kelly and the Filipino. Kelly's finding that out wouldn't account for his calling the man a 'lousy spy,' would it?"

"No," Barry retorted. "But listen. If the Chink was a 'lousy spy,' he got paid for it, didn't he? Wouldn't that explain Mrs. Kelly's giving him 'coin and jewelry?' And everything else? The Chink's reporting Betty Barclay's message, and all the rest of it? I tell you, this story's as straight as a string. Betty Barclay went on the road with her show about the time Mrs. Kelly sued for divorce. I found that out some time ago. She got back the day of the murder, and phoned Kelly. Mrs. Kelly learned of that from the Chink, and lit into Mike. Then Mike lit into the Chink, and the Chink killed him. I think we can prove that."

"They can't convict Jack," the Judge insisted. "Peter says so, and I've never known Peter to be wrong when he made an assertion like that. But acquittal means waiting for the trial, and waiting for the trial means that Jack will still be in jail when his father returns."

Pat remained silent, but, the next morning, on the beach, she drew Barry away from the little group [illegible] railroad construction.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Duluth—This city of cool summers darn near baked when the mercury hit an all-time high of 106 degrees.

Minneapolis—Construction of three concrete runways at Wold-Chamberlain field at an estimated cost of $250,000 is under way.

Renville—Work on the new sewer project has started with a mechanical digger and a large crew of men engaged on the job.

Thief River Falls—Victor Christgau, state WPA administrator, dedicated a new ice skating rink. The concrete floor is half complete.

Mankato—Mankato's weather observer often blamed along with other weathermen, for quirk of heat or cold, was confined to his bed with illness brought on by the heat.

Hackensack—Seagulls are so tame on Ten Mile lake, near here, that they light on boats, eat minnows out of the hands of fishermen and even perch themselves on the heads of anglers.

Pipestone — An overworked ice cream refrigerator caught fire here as 100-degree temperatures prevailed. Firemen called to the Sjorstrom cafe found dense clouds of smoke issuing from the refrigerator.

Aitkin—Fire which destroyed the Illinois Cooperage Manufacturing company's mill and dry kiln here caused damage estimated at $100,000. The office and other buildings were saved by the fire department.

Chisholm—Minnesota is represented on the United States Olympic team in Germany, by Ann Govednik, star breast stroke swimmer from Chisholm. She finished second in the final trials in the 200 meter event.

Chaska—It was Sugar day and the whole town turned out for two days of festivity and contests. Hundreds were there from as far away as the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards to join in homecoming and eighty-fifth anniversary celebrations.

Cannon Falls—Clifford W. Gress, banker, and for many years the "summer Santa Claus" at Cannon Falls died in California. The 73-year-old president of the First National Bank of Cannon Falls, died in Pasadena, where he and his wife had resided two years.

Minneapolis—Patty Berg's driving along the golf fairways is just about perfect, but Ray W. Meeker, justice of the peace, fined her $10 for speeding more than 65 miles an hour when he decided her driving along Minnesota highways was not of the same high class.

St. Paul—The Minnesota highway department has completed more than $5,000,000 worth of road construction since the beginning of the season and additional projects totaling $11,500,000 are now under way, according to a report issued by N. W. Elsberg, state highway commissioner.

Minneapolis—Minnesota will receive $38,494 from federal funds for vocational rehabilitation of physically handicapped persons durng the year ending June 30, 1937. The grant is made on provision the state matches it with an equal amount. The program is directed by the state department of education.

Loretto—Walter Schoening, who operates a farm near here, finished harvesting a 12-acre field of oats which yielded approximately 80 bushels to the acre. Mr. Schoening used the Early Gopher variety, which he claims is the best suited for central Minnesota. A scientific farmer, Mr. Schoening practices crop rotation.

St. Paul—The federal government collected more taxes from Minnesota citizens in the fiscal year ending June 30 than for the corresponding period 12 months before. Figures made public at Washington by Guy T. Helvering, commissioner of internal revenue, disclosed Minnesota internal revenue payments of $37,842,787 for the last fiscal year as against $29,767,410 for 1935.

Hibbing—A 10-year-old feud between two brothers resulted in a double slaying and suicide here, when Jack Hautamaki, 39, shot and killed his brother, Martn, 50, and Mrs. Mary Siironen, 49, his housekeeper. Following the slaying, Jack Hautamaki went into the deep woods and ended his own life. The shootings, it was learned, climaxed a family quarrel at noon during which Jack was struck on the head by a dish, hurled by Martin.

Ely—Airplanes carried additional equipment and men to fight a forest fire sweeping over 10,000 acres of national woodland near here. The blaze, started by lightning, broke away from a crew of 320 men and raced uncontrolled through the tinder-like fallen jack pine toward Brule lake. Three hundred more men were flown to the fire scene, while pumps and hose were shipped from regional headquarters here. The planes landed on Cherokee lake.

Rochester—Governor Floyd B. Olson underwent a second operation at Mayo Clinic here and physicians pronounced it a success. The governor has been under the observation of physicians since last fall. A tube was inserted into his intestine to permit feeding direct, so the stomach could have a complete rest for a few days. The operation was considered a minor surgical procedure. The tube is only temporary, doctors explained, and will be removed when the Governor's stomach returns to a normal condition.

Labor and Politics

Washington.—The steel industry of the United States has cast for itself a role in the forthcoming campaign—whether it intended to do so or not. The same is true of John L. Lewis and his segment of organized labor—and it is pretty generally suspected that Mr. Lewis intended to get labor questions well mixed up in politics. It is all more important because of President Roosevelt's attack on "economic royalists" in his Philadelphia acceptance speech.

Whatever rights the steel industry has or whatever rights Mr. Lewis and his followers have, the fact remains that they are all knee deep in politics and there is every reason to believe that each side will suffer in public esteem as a result. It means simply this: each side is mixing up problems that are basically economic in character with sordid, even unclean, political motives.

This outburst is prompted by two things: the gigantic steel industry has taken the position that it will defend itself against encroachment of professional labor leaders like Mr. Lewis and President William Green of the American Federation of Labor and their satellites "from any source." The steel industry thereby has thrown down the challenge and now that such a die is cast, the steel industry will be compelled to do a number of indefensible things if it adheres to its program.

The same condition is to be observed in the organized labor situation. Whether Mr. Lewis is willing to admit it or not, his declaration that he will foster, even enforce, his scheme for organizing the steel workers is likely to lead to overzealous acts by his followers—and overzealous and foolish acts all too frequently lead to bloodshed.

* * *

Steel Bucks Unions

For a number of years, steel companies have refused steadfastly to recognize union labor as represented by the professional leaders in the American Federation of Labor. They have attempted to defeat the inroads of that organization by forming what is known as company unions, groups of employees on the pay roll of each corporation. They have accorded to these groups the right of collective bargaining and have insisted that they would deal only with the representatives of the company unions for the reason that they believe they then are dealing with the employees concerned with questions of pay and working conditions in that particular plant. If the national unions were recognized, officials of a given company always have had to negotiate with the expert union negotiators who are paid by the national organization. The results have not always been happy. This combination of circumstances, together with a disposition on the part of the steel companies, I am afraid, to be rather selfish in their attitude toward labor has developed a continuing controversy that has raged over the last score of years.

It happened that the rather insolent announcement of the steel companies, their challenge, came almost simultaneously with the delivery of President Roosevelt's speech accepting the Democratic nomination for re-election. It was in this speech, it will be remembered, where Mr. Roosevelt denounced "economic royalists," in which he resorted to expressions bound to create class hatred and in which he used language that is certainly going to help discredit corporations which are large enough to attract national attention. Of course, I know that Mr. Roosevelt did not have the steel industry particularly in mind in his assault on massed capital but the effect is the same as though he had been shooting directly at the steel industry because of the coincidence mentioned above.

The tragedy of the thing is that the professional labor leaders are going to use the steel industry's challenge politically.

* * *

The Real Issue

From all of the inside discussions that I have heard, it appears that the issue between the steel industry and its workers is no longer simply whether the steel industry shall be unionized. It is a question of how it shall be unionized. In addition to this, Mr. Lewis has been chiseling away for several years in promoting his labor union idea of organizing all workers in one unit instead of the craft union idea that is basic in the American Federation of Labor. That is to say, Mr. Lewis proposes to have a steel union or a shipbuilding union or a textile union instead of organizing the workers in accordance with the particular jobs they do, whether they be engineers, painters, carpenters, moulders or any one of the various other crafts.

Since the steel industry has its company unions, there is a conviction in many quarters that Mr. Lewis might well pause to consider whether this is the time to carry forward his program of bringing steel workers under national labor union control. There are those who believe that the company unions eventually will become units in the larger labor structure of the country and, if that be true, it is made to appear that Mr. Lewis has hurt labor's cause.

On the other hand, the steel industry already is under attack by the government. Mr. Roosevelt suddenly "cracked down" on some of the major companies recently, charging them with collusion in bids on government work. He came out with this charge at a time which undoubtedly will stiffen the backbone of the union agitators—and it is not unlikely that by the same token he has stiffened the resistance which the steel companies will use.

Yet, it does seem that the steel companies made a fatal mistake in the pronouncement they have issued. There are too many people who will be inclined to believe that the steel companies have taken advantage of an apparent assurance of collapse of federal supervision. There are few who believe that the federal compulsory collective bargaining statute will last very long but the fact that this statute is due for the discard, it sems to me, hardly warrants the action which the steel companies have taken. They are no more warranted in that than union labor is warranted in taking advantage of the political situation to feather their own nest. A real danger, in addition to this, is that Communist agitators are going to use this situation as one vehicle for spreading their propaganda of dissatisfaction and discontent and Mr. Roosevelt's attack on massed capital unfortunately lends itself to the nefarious schemes of the Reds.

Tax Law Irritation

It long has been said that the method of administering laws frequently has created more dissatisfaction among the citizens than the requirements of laws themselves. Tax laws of whatever kind furnish a splendid example. It has always been true since we have had income tax laws that taxpayers have complained more about bureaucratic regulation, indecision, lack of uniformity in administration and, generally speaking, slow processes of settlement than about the amount they were required to pay. The same is true about our customs laws despite the fact that they affect fewer persons directly.

The other day the Treasury issued a notice to customs inspectors that was "effective immediately." It was a change in policy respecting the quantity of goods an individual may bring in from foreign shores without the payment of the customs tax.

Since 1798 or thereabouts, there has been a law which permitted a returning American to bring in commodities of whatever kind he desired, except narcotics, up to $100 in value but that law permitted the Treasury to make exceptions. The Treasury notice the other day was an announcement of an exception to this $100 exemption. It said that no inbound traveler could carry more than one wine gallon of liquor without the payment of the customs tax thereon. A practice had sprung up since the import duty on liquors has been made so high of returning tourists bringing in almost the full exemption in liquor alone. Probably the practice was getting very bad and no one questions the judgment of the Treasury in determining policy. But it is the method employed in making this change that has aroused criticism.

In ordering the new regulation "effective immediately," the Treasury forced upon hundreds of travelers the necessity for paying duty on their personal stocks of liquor in what amounts to a surprise order. They had left foreign shores under one regulation and arrive under another.

I have no doubt at all that the Treasury's reason for changing the rule while the game was being played will result in a considerable amount of revenue for the government. But there are many who believe, as I do, that the department in all fairness should have issued its regulation to become effective at some fixed date in the future in order that citizens who must comply with it would be prepared by proper notification of what they were expected to do and the penalties for failure to obey.

The incident to which I have referred is an outstanding example of inconsideration and such things always cause citizens to have a hurt feeling, a feeling that the government changed the rules without consulting those who must obey the rules.

Traveling Clinic Brings Health to Children

If little Johnny or Mary, living in a remote section of the 1,094 square miles included in the large Los Angeles school district, has a toothache, infected tonsils, bad eyes, or any minor physical ailment, his parents don't worry. For soon the traveling healthmobile, the only one of its kind in America, will be along with its staff of oculist, dentist, and nurse. The unique healthmobile is a part of the medical service furnished the Los Angeles schools, and which penetrates to every little hamlet and community in the vast empire of the school district. The carload of health constantly travels from school to school, filling teeth, taking out tonsils, testing eyes, and caring for children who would otherwise be neglected.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

JERRY MUSKRAT'S TROUBLES BEGIN

JERRY Muskrat watched Billy Mink and Little Joe Otter start on their journeys. Billy was going to a distant brook. Little Joe was going to the Big River. Both intended to stay away until they were sure the trapper, who had just begun to make trouble along the Laughing Brook, would be so discouraged that he would take up his traps.

When Jerry had said good-by to Billy Mink and Joe Otter there had been something of wistfulness in his squeaky voice. The fact is, Jerry would have loved to go visiting also. But he knew that it was quite out of the question. In the first place, he is a slow traveler on land, and he felt that on land he would be in even more danger than if he stayed at home, despite those dreadful traps. Then, again, winter would soon come and he must be prepared for it if he would live through it. Billy Mink and Little Joe Otter do not have to prepare for winter, but Jerry does.

"I Suppose," He Muttered, "My Troubles Are Just Beginning."

So Jerry sat on the top of his house and watched Billy Mink and Little Joe Otter out of sight. Then he sighed. Then sighed again. "I suppose," he muttered, "my troubles are just beginning. These traps Billy Mink told about were set for him, but I know trappers well enough to know that sooner or later there will be some traps set especially for me."

Jerry was quite right. Early the next morning as he was making his breakfast on a lily root he caught sight of some one coming down the Laughing Brook. It wasn't Farmer Brown's Boy. It was a stranger. This stranger kept stopping and examining every old log in the water and every hole along the bank. He stopped at three of Jerry's favorite eating places and studied them. Jerry knew just what that meant.

"That's that dreadful trapper," thought Jerry. "He's trying to find out where I am in the habit of going so that he may set traps there. It's clear to me that from now on I shall have to watch my step every time I move."

After the stranger had left, Jerry swam to the places where the stranger had stopped. At each one of them his nose was tickled with a delicious smell. At one place he smelled a carrot, and Jerry is very fond of carrot. At another place he smelled apple, and if there is any one thing that Jerry Muskrat likes it is apple. He was greatly tempted, was Jerry Muskrat. It seemed to him that he must go ashore and get those good things to eat. But he didn't. He just plunged his head under water so that he could no longer smell those things and then swam over to his house to think things over.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

HELPFUL HINTS

SWEETS have always been popular with the ladies, and so a box of candy is often a smoother of the way, in cases mild or serious.

Slice any rich candy bar very thin and spread or lay between ginger snaps.

Moisten chopped figs with orange juice and a bit of lemon juice, heated over water until smooth, add chopped peanuts and use for a sandwich spread.

Fancy cakes and cookies may serve for dessert in an emergency. Small ginger cookies, put together with melted marshmallows or any good candy bar. Vanilla wafers made into sandwiches with melted peanut candy or caramels softened to spread. Crackers with white of egg, chopped marshmallows and nuts baked in a quick oven make delightful little cakes to serve with a cup of tea or chocolate.

A few cans of pineapple on the emergency shelf will be found most desirable for any number of dishes. It is ready in the form of rich slices to be used as they are with meats, or shredded, or in small cans in cubes to be used as garnish for frozen dishes and other desserts.

Crab meat is one of the most versatile of foods, especially good for a midnight snack, a sandwich or in the form of a cocktail. For the latter three tablespoonfuls of catsup, two tablespoonfuls of horseradish, one tablespoonful of worcestershire sauce and salt to taste. Add the crab meat and serve thoroughly chilled.

For simple head lettuce salad dress with lemon juice, a little salt and a handful of rolled, freshly roasted peanuts. Orange and lemon juice with a little seasoning make ideal salad dressings.

"Grandmother" Clocks

"Grandmother" clocks are more entitled to their name than "grandfather" clocks, for their cases, with the exception of the face, are carved to represent a woman's figure. ## THE NEW WORD

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

TODAY perhaps you heard
A word
You never heard before,
Yet think there is no land
At hand
For mortals to explore,
Behold a continent,
Content
To leave it still unknown,
When you the trail might take
And make
That land, that word, your own.

Oh, never let the word
You heard
Remain a mystery.
Right then take down the book
And look,
Yes, look it up to see.
For, there is more to hold
Than gold,
Another wealth to reach,
A fortune for the mind
To find—
It is a wealth of speech.

TRY THIS TRICK

CATCH THE DICE

Catching the dice is a game that looks easy but proves impossible when people try it, unless they know the secret.

A small cup is held in one hand. The thumb and fingers encircle the cup; between them, they hold a small cube; one of a pair of dice. The second cube is placed upon the first.

The object is to toss each of the dice separately, catching them one by one in the cup; and keeping them there. Thus the fun begins; for after the first cube is bagged, the tossing of the second causes the first to jump out.

The way to do the trick is not to toss the second cube at all. Simply release it. Swoop downward with the cup and catch the last of the dice while it is falling.

LEAVES WEALTH TO ASSIST POOR BOYS

Rich Oil Operator Creates "Mercy Foundation."

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Ever conscious throughout life of his struggles in his rise to financial heights as one of the nation's wealthiest oil operators, Addison H. Gibson, moved in death to insure youths of another generation against similar hardships.

In his will filed for probate here he left more than $2,400,000 of his $2,500,000 estate to the poor for medical care and to needy young men for college education.

Dies in Oklahoma.

The seventy-five-year-old Pittsburgher, who started life as the son of an Armstrong county storekeeper, died recently in Tulsa, Okla. In creating by his will the Addison H. Gibson Foundation, he declared:

"I have throughout life been impressed by the misfortune of persons in dire need of medical and hospital assistance, but unable to obtain the same because of poverty and limited means. Also by the fact that worthy children of parents who are poor or of limited means cannot obtain the higher education which they crave and which, if they could obtain, might greatly increase their happiness and their usefulness."

He ordered $100,000 be held in trust for his sister, Annie A. McChesney, of Oak Park, Ill., and her daughter, Martha G. McChesney. Upon their death the money will be returned to the foundation.

Remembers Associates.

Gibson, whose career began as a lease searcher for the Peoples Natural Gas company 40 years ago, struck it rich when he brought in Mexico's largest oil well at Tampico.

He urged that his money be given only to western Pennsylvanians. In addition, he remembered his associates in the oil industry.

He specified:

"I want them to make loans to worthy young men desiring to obtain a college education. I want loans to be made to such individuals at a low rate of interest, or, if my trustees see fit, without interest. I realize such individuals will not be able to give security for their loans.

"It is my belief that a great majority of the boys so given assistance will repay their loans."

Excavators at Scupi Uncover Theater Ruins

Belgrade.—Excavations, carried out under the supervision of Dr. Nickola Vulitch, of the Belgrade university on the site of the Roman-Byzantine city of Scupi, just outside modern Skoplye, in the south of Yugoslavia, have reached an important stage.

Ancient Scupi was destroyed by an earthquake in 516 A. D. A large theater has been discovered of which all important parts, such as the stage, halls and corridors, were traced. The stage was about 150 feet long, and the entire theater measured 300 to 900 feet, offering seats for about 3,000 spectators.

The outer walls have been excavated as well as part of the columns which served to support the "velarium," the canvas which protected the costlier seats from rain and sun.

It is expected that further excavations will throw light on the disputed problem of the use of the stage in Roman and Greek theaters.

As Scupi was the seat of a bishop from the Third to the Sixth centuries A. D., Doctor Vulitch hopes to discover and excavate also important ecclesiastical buildings of the early Byzantine period.

"Alcoholic Baldness" Held Prohibition "Hangover"

Chicago.—"Alcoholic baldness" is becoming alarmingly prevalent in the United States, a "hangover" from prohibition days, according to Paul A. Thomas, hair and scalp specialist.

"The majority of cases," Thomas says, "are just beginning to show up, since it takes seven or eight years to reach the baldness stage. During prohibition constant drinking of bootleg gin and compounded liquor containing raw or impure alcohol frequently caused a scalp condition known as "hooch hair."

"The shattered nervous system and over-stimulated blood circulation dissipated and weakened the scalp, stopped its normal function and caused it to develop irritations. The hair became dry and brittle. Baldness now is the result in most of these cases. Scalp specialists report that this type is becoming more and more common, and that the response to treatment is slower than for many other scalp ailments."

No Courthouse, No Sale

Monterey, Calif.—Monterey county residents whose property has been foreclosed are jubilant. The law provides that the sale of all such property must be made from the "steps of the courthouse." Monterey county is building a new courthouse and it will probably be six months before there will be any "courthouse steps" for foreclosure sales.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

Prowling around New York—and feeling restless every time he hears a liner whistle—your correspondent encountered Ray Henderson who devotes the greater part of his time to writing about Katherine Cornell. Knowing that at this season, his employer spends many hours reading manuscripts, naturally the question asked concerned the outlook for young dramatists. The answer was a bit surprising. On an average, only once in 200 manuscripts received at the Cornell offices from unknown dramatists is there an original idea. Still, an editor once stated that in five years, during which time he'd read thousands of unsolicited manuscripts, he had found only three worth buying and of the three, one turned out to have been plagiarized. Oh yes, another thing. Mr. Henderson mentioned that during the last few weeks, the Cornell play department had received a preponderance of anti-war manuscripts.

• • •

Proceeding along Broadway, your correspondent stopped for a word or two with Phil Baker. The conversation concerned complications caused by copyrights in music which, as everyone knows, has been responsible for the revival of many songs of the past because if the new ones were put on the air, there would be lawsuits. The Baker comment was that the way things are now, if Gabriel wanted to blow his trumpet, nine chances out of ten, the tune would be restricted and Judgment day would have to be postponed! Which brought to mind the charge made by Phil Duey that song writers have banded together in a campaign against public utilities with electric companies as their chief target. As proof, he cited, "Lights Out," "After Dark," "Early to Bed," "Sleep," "A Perfect Day" and "At Dawning.'

• • •

In one of those vacant lots on Eighth avenue, your correspondent encountered two youngsters playing a game they called "night club." Their equipment was an old table on which stood a number of assorted bottles, all empty. Asked where they got the idea, one little girl spoke up and said they'd heard their parents discussing such places and had followed the details so far as they were able. "And if we could only get that goat over there to stand still near our table, we'd get the right smell, too," added the other little girl solemnly. Incidentally, a number of the night clubs have added telephones to the table equipment.

One of the habits of inhabitants of this town to which your correspondent is unable to become accustomed is that of going to a store and buying dirt or rather "earth" as it is termed by those who sell it. New Yorkers spend regular money for a little black soil for window boxes or flower pots and spend much more to make those penthouse gardens. At current retail prices, shoe scrapings of boyhood days would have sold for enough to have bought a new cane fish pole. Even the residue from face washings, under maternal supervision, would have brought considerable. Instead of buying dirt, we had to work hard to get rid of it. But this is New York.

At lunch recently with a few friends, Frank Buck explained how East Indian fakirs are able to handle even the most poisonous snakes without endangering their lives or their health. Before giving a demonstration of his control over reptiles, the fakir irritates his snakes to such an extent that they are so fighting mad they will bite anything that gets in their way. The fakir allows them to vent their ire on some harmless object, such as an orange, until their venom sacks have been emptied. Then for the next few hours, he handles them without risk. It may be all as the "Bring-'Em-Back-Alive" Buck says, but I wouldn't want to try it. Some old snake would be just mean enough to hold back a few drops for my benefit.

The truly rural again is being shown New Yorkers by means of that "traveling farm" which made such a hit last year. There are cows and chickens and a red barn with a milkmaid, which by no means are commonplace in a city where kids know the country only through pictures. Each month this year there will be a 10-day vacation for the exhibit so that the animals may rest, continual stares tiring them no end.

Newly Hatched Gulls Taught to Fear Man

Ottawa.—A sea-gull captured three or four days after hatching can never be tamed because its mother or other grown birds have taught it fear, Dr. John Tait of McGill university, Montreal, told the biological section of the Royal Society of Canada. A gull taken just after hatching, he said, may grow up without fear of man.

A planter in Alabama hadn't seen one of his former workers for a year, until he saw him in Montgomery one Saturday. "Well, Well!" the planter exclaimed. "What are you doing now, Uncle Mose?"

"Ah's done gone to preachin'," the venerable negro replied.

"What! You preaching?"

"Yes, suh!"

"Well, well! Do you use notes?"

"Naw, suh! At the fust Ah used dem; but now Ah has to have cash!"

Competition

Charity Ball

By HARRY F. BURNS

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

THE boy arose and reluctantly left his companion at Mrs. Peuston's imperious bidding. The deserted girl's eyes were so appealing that the waiter was at her side almost before she had dragged her wistful stare from the boy's departing back.

"Did he say something he should not have, honey?" the waiter demanded fiercely.

The waiter sighed with relief.

"Then what's the matter, Daisy?"

"He said he'd have to be gone a few minutes. And I think I'd better leave before he gets back."

"I think you'd better, Daisy. You shouldn't have come anyway. Mrs. Peuston's charity dinners aren't any place for a working girl. . . . Are you sure he didn't say anything he shouldn't have?"

"Honestly he didn't." She smiled up at him bravely. "Do you know who he is?"

"Some friend of Mrs. Pueston, I suppose." He looked down at her with tender sharpness. "These folks are too blue-blooded for us, honey. Don't break your heart with foolish dreams. . . . You shouldn't have come in the first place."

"But I had to, Daddy. Mr. Ginling gave me the ticket and let me have this store dress, just because he wanted me to see what was being worn this season. I couldn't fail him when he's been so nice to me always, could I? I won't break my heart with foolish dreams, though. . . . You'll tell him something, won't you, so he won't think I—"

"I'll give him some excuse, honey. . . . You'd better run along," he said hastily.

"As soon as I get a closer look at Mrs. Vanter's gown," she promised. "She'll dance by in a moment. . . . I mustn't forget I'm managing Mr. Ginling's evening dress department."

The dancing crowd surged past. She touched the waiter's hand in an invisible gesture of affection, and was gone. He busied himself about the midget table until the boy returned.

The waiter eyed the boy appraisingly. Nice, clean looking youngster, he decided. Seemed sort of fresh and wholesome.

"The young lady asked me to tell you," he said, "she met her father and she had to leave."

The boy was still fresh and wholesome, but the happiness was erased from his face in an instant. "Did—did she leave any other message? Any—any word about where I could reach her, or anything?" he inquired hopefully.

"No, sir."

"Which way did she go?" he demanded then, jumping to his feet.

"Oh." The boy sat down again, slowly as if he were suddenly old. "Do—do you happen to know—never mind. And thanks for giving me her message."

"Was there anything else, sir?"

"No, thanks. Yes!" The boy wriggled uncomfortably. He asked hesitantly, "Do you—does the young lady come here often, do you know?"

"I've never seen her here before," the waiter answered truthfully.

The young man pulled out a card, thrust it into the waiter's unresponsive hand. "If you ever see her, will you ask her for pity's sake to let me have her address?"

The waiter was staring, unbelieving, at the bit of pasteboard. Above the name, two lines wavered before his eyes. "Ginling Department Store," and "Advertising Department."

"You can reach me there any time except tomorrow morning," the boy said. He explained unhappily, "I have to spend tomorrow morning with the manager of the women evening gown department, planning fashion ads. That's why Mr. Ginling sent me here tonight to look over the dresses they were wearing."

Use for Paint Grows.

Oil from soy beans is used at an increasing rate in manufacturing paints. It no doubt would be used more extensively if farmers in the Middle West could grow their own crops that would yield seeds with more rapid drying oils, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune. The amount of iodine contained in oil is directly related to the drying properties of the paint made from the oil. The higher the iodine content the faster paint dries. Paint experts say that oil from perilla seeds has a higher iodine content than oils fro mother oil bearing seeds such as soy beans, flax, and hemp. Perilla seed oil cannot be used alone in making paint because it dries too fast, so it is mixed with soy bean oil. The perilla oil now used in this country is imported.

Sentimentality

"You seem sad," said the pilot.

"Not exactly sad," answered Miss Cayenne. "Only sentimental. Every time I get this far from earth I begin to feel terribly homesick."

"Too Much Courage"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

SOMETIMES it's a fine thing, boys and girls, to have one of those cast-iron, copper-plated nervous systems that don't get all in a jitter the minute something happens.

Steeplejacks have them—and so have structural ironworkers who spend most of their working day twenty stories above the street, balanced on a ten-inch iron beam, playing baseball with red hot rivets. I've always sort of envied birds like that for their courage.

And again, at times, I've been glad I don't have nerves like theirs. After all, our nerves are about the best warning signals we have—and you know what usually happens to the guy who doesn't pay any attention to the signs.

Take the case of Bill Woods, for instance—William H. Woods of Brooklyn, N. Y. Bill isn't an ironworker, but he's got an ironworker's nerve. Put him in a burning building, and my guess is that he wouldn't begin to get excited about it until the fire actually began creeping up his coat-tails. I'm judging him now from the way he acted in that restaurant in Brooklyn on April 30, 1934.

This Adventure Starts With a Cup of Coffee.

It's quite a story, boys and girls—a story that starts out with a walking tour through the streets of Brooklyn. Bill and his friend, Charley Young, had been taking an evening stroll, and eleven o'clock found them at Boro Hall park. Charley suggested that they drop into a cafeteria for a cup of coffee before they hit the hay. Bill agreed, and they crossed the street.

They went into the cafeteria, took their checks from the machine at the door and went over to the long counter. They ordered coffee, and the counterman turned to get it. But no sooner had he turned than he swung back toward the door and said: "What's the matter over there?"

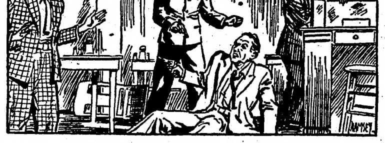
That's the first intimation Bill and Charley had that anything was wrong. They looked in the direction in which the counterman was staring. Several men were scuffling over near the door. Then, suddenly from the center of that milling group came the sound of a shot!

Bedlam Breaks Loose in Cafeteria Following Shots.

"In the moment that immediately followed," says Bill, "no one stirred. Everyone in the place had stopped eating and all eyes were turned toward the door. That moment of indecision didn't last long, however, for suddenly another shot rang out, loud and deafening in that enclosed space. No one knew what had happened, but you couldn't mistake that sound."



The Man Fell Over Backwards and Was Still.

At that second shot, bedlam broke loose in the cafeteria. Women screamed. Men jumped up from their seats. Tables were overturned. Everyone thought of just one thing, and that was getting under cover. Everyone was running about in frantic haste to get a door between them and that revolver—everyone, that is, but Bill Woods. In all the hullabaloo he alone kept his head. And it nearly cost him his life.

Bill looked around for Charley. He was gone—evidently into a milling crowd of people who had run toward the back of the cafeteria and were trying to crowd into the washrooms. Those who weren't there were crawling on their hands and knees, trying to get under a table. Bill noticed that and decided to get under cover himself. There was a radiator with a screened grill in front of him and he dropped down behind that. There followed a brief silence punctuated only by the sounds of struggling men, then another shot reverberated through the room. That was when Bill's curiosity and his nerve got the better of his common sense. He stood up to take a look.

Bill Made a Fine Target for the Man With the Gun.

Over by the door, a man, gun in hand, was standing, back up against the cashier's counter, while half a dozen younger men tried to wrestle the gun away from him. "One of the younger men," says Bill, "picked up a heavy sugar container and hit the older man over the head. I saw the glass break and the sugar scatter over the floor, but the man with the gun seemed invincible. They couldn't beat him down. They were too many for him in the end, though, and finally he fell behind the cashier's desk. And then, thinking all danger was past, I walked over to the counter."

Bill walked over until he was within ten feet of the fallen man when, to his amazement, the man started to sit up. The gun, still in his hand, rose until it pointed straight at Bill's midriff. Too late, Bill began to wish he'd been one of those nervous individuals who had taken refuge in the washroom.

He stood petrified—afraid to move. He drew in a deep breath and waited to feel the bullet bite into his flesh. At that distance, the man on the floor couldn't miss.

Timely Arrival of Copper Saves Bill's Life.

Then, the only thing that could save Bill's life happened. Through the restaurant door came a police sergeant with a drawn pistol. He got the situation at a glance, took deliberate aim at the man with the gun, and shot him through the stomach. That was the end. The man fell over backwards and was still. A red circle of blood slowly widened beneath him.

More policemen came. They began asking questions. The cashier of the restaurant had been creased over one ear by a bullet, and one young man, shot through the shoulder, was leaning against the counter, trying to staunch the flow of blood.

They told the story. The man with the gun, they said, had been drunk. He had walked over to a table and accused another man of laughing at him. An argument started and the drunk drew a gun. That was when Old Lady Adventure stepped in and started shaking up thrill cocktails—one for everybody in the house, and a deadly one for the man with the gun.

Women Wore Men's Shoes

During Ohio's yesteryears the forests were so swampy that women could scarcely walk to church or to other gatherings in their pretty footwear. So instead they wore the rough heavy shoes used by the menfolk. Close to their destination they would deposit the rough shoes in a fence corner or some other near-by place and put on their dainty shoes to wear inside. Thus their Sunday footwear lasted years and years.

Montreal's Historic Crosses

Many of the historic crosses in Montreal were raised by the pioneer inhabitants to commemorate being spared from the St. Lawrence River's ravages before it finally was brought under control. Founded by the man who erected its first and most famous cross, Paul de Chomedy, le Sieur de Maisonneuve, Montreal is frequently called the "City of Crosses." Maisonneuve' cross was erected almost 300 years ago.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

An Immortal Oration

BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF.—The future has a rotten trick of mussing up the judgments of the present. What a pity it is that we can't wear our hind-sights in front.

When I read where some ponderous performing pachyderm of the literary elephant quadrille says, "This story will live forever," I get to thinking about a time-yellowed copy of a metropolitan newspaper I saw once, a paper that was printed on November 20, 1863.

Irvin S. Cobb

It devoted great gobs of praise and nine solid columns very solid—to the eloquence of the Hon. Edward Everett of Massachusetts, who, on the day before, after months of preparation had, on a battlefield down in Pennsylvania, spoken two hours and turned loose enough oratory to fill about nine gas balloons. But of the subsequent and incidental remarks of another man, an awkward, shy man from Illinois, who had spoken just two minutes, it said, "The President was also heard briefly. The applause was formal and scattering."

Prejudices of Critics.

OFTEN, 'twould seem, the professional reviewer makes up his mind beforehand that he doesn't like you and behaves accordingly.

A friend sent me a clipping from a small city—it dealt with the opening of the picture, "Everybody's Old Man." The writer was quite severe in his analysis. He didn't like the film. Passionately, he didn't care for me.

The joke was that the theater where the picture was to have been shown burned down just about the time the paper went to press, and the picture wasn't ever shown in that town.

The next best illustration of the point I'm making dates back years ago. I was discussing various novelists with that gentle wit, the late Oliver Herford.

"Ollie," I said, "what do you think of So-and-So's books?" "My dear Cobb," he softly murmured, "something I once wrote about him—in a critical way—so prejudiced me against the man I could never bear to read any of his books."

* * *

Self-Anointed Dukes.

OUT here we're waiting for that Spanish baron and that French count back in New York to form the mother branch of their Noblemen's club for the protection of holders of genuine titles in America and, presumably, as a guarantee to our own home-grown heiresses that, when they marry foreign princelings or what not, the goods will be as described. There's been a lot of title-legging, you know.

As soon as the organization gets started we're going to open the Hollywood division. Since only the authentic nobility may qualify, it's figured that the active roster will be confined to a very limited group.

* * *

The State of the Nation.

FAR be it from me to turn alarmist right on the heels of the hot wave, but I feel it my duty to warn my fellow-Americans that this fragile and crumbling republic is doomed. That is, it's doomed if you can believe what comes out of our sainted political leaders in the way of predictions.

Hark to the quavering chorus which already has started up: A crisis exists. Every professional crisis-breeder in the land openly admits it. I can't remember when a crisis wasn't existing. But they come larger in campaign years. We are facing a dread emergency which has had no parallel since the last occasion when we faced a dread emergency. This very hour the nation totters on the brink of an abyss.

* * *

Miracles and Misdemeanors.

ONCE upon an early time there was a man so holy that even the wild creatures would not harm him. He drew a thorn from the paw of a tame lion and the grateful beast followed after him. So he became a saint.

Only the other day in a court in Tanganyka, which is in Africa, a black man—a savage by our definitions—was on trial. It seemed the lions were raiding the stock, so the native authorities set traps for them. The accused found a lion in one of these traps and made a ladder and went down and helped the great brute to escape.

Being arrested, he explained simply that the lion was his friend. So they fined him $12.50. In the olden times it was a miracle. Nowadays it's a misdemeanor.

A Village Blacksmith

There are few village smithy shops today under the chestnut trees. One reason is that there aren't any more chestnut trees. Another is that the motor car is rapidly driving horses and vehicles drawn by horses out of business.

I used to think that in fifty years or more practically all the village smithies would disappear.

But lately I have learned better.

Here in a little coast town in Maine is a village blacksmith who has more work than he can do, though he has probably not shod a horse or repaired an agricultural implement in twenty years or more.

* * *

For a time after the "devil wagons" began crowding horses and horse drawn vehicles off the road, he had little to do.

Then one day he saw some ornamental grill work that had been sent to his town to be used as an adornment on a new building.

He examined it carefully, then went home and thought a little.

"There is no reason in the world why I cannot do that kind of work," he said to himself. "I will do it, by Gosh."

* * *

Over the anvil on which he used to fashion horse shoes he makes beautiful things of steel and iron.

Visitors seeing him at work have come in to inquire if his handiwork was on sale.

He assured them that it certainly was, and that more of the same kind of work would be in evidence as soon as there was a demand for it.

He is known today all over the state, and in many other states, whose residents have bought his work.

And if he had the advertising gift that some people have he would have a wide reputation.

But not, I am sorry to say, a great business.

For his work is artistry, and cannot be done in quantity over a single anvil.

* * *

It cannot be said of him that he is another Benvenuto Cellini. He works in iron, not in silver and gold.

But he is a master craftsman, which he never might have become had he not been forced by changing conditions to become something besides the village blacksmith.

I saw him at work the other morning on a pair of beautiful andirons.

I asked him what they cost.

"A lot of time," he said.

"Yes, but how much money?"

"Oh, not so much. But the fellow I'm making them for isn't rich so I wouldn't like to charge him too much."

And there was proof that he really had the soul of an artist.

Railroad Jim
THE COLUMN CONDUCTOR
Says . . .

Considering how fine this railroad transportation is nowadays, you can't travel any cheaper. Fares lowest in history—substantial savings on round trip tickets. So why not take the train? It's safer. It's more dependable.

•

You can't beat the improved travel comfort in coaches and sleeping cars. It's a good thing movies don't have such restful seats—most folks would sure fall asleep.

•

Ever hear about the new Free pick-up-and-delivery of less than carload freight? It's a great convenience to shippers and receivers alike. Western railroads pick up at the door, ship by fast freight, and deliver to door at no extra charge.

•

Railroad trains are running on faster schedules these days. Seems like the iron horse wants to show these new streamlined diesels that he can step out, too. Both passenger and freight schedules have been speeded up.

•

What's more, the railroads believe in "safety first." Last year not one passenger was killed in a train accident on western railroads.

•

Talk to your local railroad agent. He's full of information about traveling and shipping.

•

We are proud of railroad achievements, appreciate the public's good will and increased patronage, and pledge continued progress.

State Assignment Tax Certificate No. 44

Notice No. 147

To S. S. Kolden,

You are hereby notified that the following piece or parcel of land, situated in the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit:

The South 82 feet of Lots 13, 14, 15 & 16 Block 9 in the Original Townsite of the Village of Holt, is now assessed in your name.

That on the 11th day of May, A. D. 1931, at a sale of land pursuant to the real estate tax judgement duly given and made in and by the District Court in and for said County of Marshall, on the 20th day of March, A. D. 1931, in proceedings to enforce the payment of taxes delinquent upon real estate for the year A. D. 1929, for said County of Marshall the above described piece or parcel of land was duly offered for sale; and no one bidding upon such offer an amount equal to that for which it was subject to be sold, the same was bid in for the State of Minnesota at such amount, being the sum of $21.45, and the same still remaining unredeemed, it was duly assigned by the State of Minnesota, on the 31st day of October 1931, for the sum of $18.39

That the said State Assignment Certificate for said piece or parcel of land executed and delivered by said County Auditor upon said sale last above mentioned has been presented to me at my office by the holder thereof for the purpose of having notice of expiration of time for redemption from said tax sale of said property given and served; and that the amount required to redeem said piece or parcel of land from said tax sale, exclusive of the costs to accrue upon said notice, is the said sum of $18.39, together with interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent per annum from the 31st day of October A. D. 1931, until the day such redemption is made.

And the further sum of $13.20, being the amount of the delinquent taxes for the year 1931, upon said premises together with interest on $11.62 thereof at the rate of 10 per cent per annum from the 1st day of March A. D. 1933, until the day such redemption is made.

And the further sum of $8.40, being the amount of the delinquent taxes for the year 1932 upon said premises, together with interest on $7.50 thereof at the rate of 8 per cent per annum from the 1st day of March 1934, until the day such redemption is made.

And the further sum of $8.24, being the amount of the delinquent taxes for the year 1933 upon said premises, together with interest on $7.68 thereof at the rate of 8 per cent per annum from the 1st day of March 1935, until the day such redemption is made.

And the further sum of $94.77, being the amount of the delinquent taxes for the year 1934 upon said premises, together with interest on $87.75 thereof at the rate of 8 per cent per annum from the 1st day of March 1936, until the day such redemption is made.

That the time for the redemption of said piece or parcel of land from said tax sale will expire twelve months after the service of this notice and the filing of proof of such service in my office.

Witness my hand and official seal this 3rd day of July, A. D. 1936.

Reading His Speech

This hitherto unpublished picture of Governor Alf M. Landon was taken at his desk in Topeka, Kas., as he was making the final revision of his speech of acceptance.

"By Deeds Performed and Promises Fulfilled"

Topeka, Kas.—Excerpts follow from the address by Representative Bertrand H. Snell notifying Governor Alf M. Landon of his selection as the Republican presidential nominee:

"The spontaneous expression of popular sentiment from coast to coast, which culminated in your nomination at Cleveland, offers eloquent testimony that your authority is rooted in the silent, secret hearts of the whole people."

* * *

"The crisis which calls you to be first among us will never yield to the sounding shibboleths of mere partisanship. You are saluted today by patriots of all parties!"

* * *

"Here in a solvent Kansas the people found a man who worked calmly amid all the noisy din of the New Deal's failures and false starts. They found a man who kept his books and the books of his government by simple, honest, old-fashioned arithmetic . . . a man who stood like a rock against the hallucinations of those who supposed that they could guide America to stability and prosperity by shameful political squandering of the people's substance. In this choice our people are guided by deeds performed and promises fulfilled!"

* * *

"As you set forth upon your high endeavor, carry in your heart the message of this hour:
America is with you!
America will sustain you!
America will see you through to victory!"

Conservation Club Meeting

Recommendations for a closed season of all upland game birds this year were adopted Monday evening, July 27, when directors, officers and members of the Northwestern Minnesota Association of Conservation clubs met at Red Lake Falls.

The association also went on record favoring a duck hunting season opening October 1 and continuing until November 1.

A ten-day deer hunting season to begin November 18, was recommended. The association also passed a resolution urging the amendment of the law to provide for an annual five day open season on deer, rather than a biennial ten day season. Extension of the boundaries in Kittson and Marshall counties to include a larger territory was also recommended.

The meeting was attended by 160 persons representing sportsmen's organizations in the seven counties of the seventh conservation district.

Officers for the coming year were elected. Dr. H. N. Leitch of Warroad was named president, W. H. Quist of Thief River Falls, vice president and A. A. Trost of Warren, secretary-treasurer. Directors, one each from the seven counties, include Chas. Fredericks of Bronson, Kittson county; Emil Malowitz of Red Lake Falls, Red Lake county; Oscar Holm of East Grand Forks Polk county; Harold Olson Thief River Falls, Pennington county; Arnold Hildahl of Greenbush, Roseau county; W. F. Zauche of Baudette, Lake of the Woods county; and H. O. Hanson of Holt, Marshall county.

The meeting was addressed by Congressman R. T. Buckler, A. C. Hanson, state game and fish director and Jack Manweiler of Baudette of the U. S. forestry service. The latter showed motion pictures of wild life in the upper Red Lake game refuge which he had taken.

The resolution recommending October 1 to November 1 as the open season for duck shooting this year, was directed to Ira Gabrielson, chief of the U. S. Biological survey; E. V. Willard, conservation commissioner and Mr. Hanson, director of the state game and fish department.

Those from here who attended the meeting were C. A. Larson, Harry Engen, H. O. Hanson, Harlan Gunheim, A. G. Krogen, Tom Severson, Jesse Sorum and Olaf Ness.

Moved House Out On Farm

A. C. Conklin made a deal recently with Mrs. Thea Nygaard in which he became the owner of the Great Northern section house here which she purchased from the company some time ago He had a house-moving contractor come up from Thief River Falls to help him move the house to his farm four miles east of town last week.

We are this week mailing out to all local subscribers the County Board proceedings for the Board of Equalization.

Brought In First New Grain

The first new grain for this year was brought in here late last week when Ole Tviet of Mud Lake came in with a truckload of fine rye. Mr. Ness, manager of the Northern Seed and Grain company here, announced that the grain was of a very fine quality and that the yield was fairly good considering the dry summer.

Mr. Tveit has a large crew of men at work on his farm taking care of the crops he has in this year. He put in several hundred acres of grain this year.

Mr. Tveit also operates a threshing outfit and the other day he had to buy another new John Deere tractor so that he can keep all his power machinery at work at one time.

WPA Education Program

C. G. Denning of Plummer, will be here at the local schoolhouse on Monday evening, Aug. 10th to discuss the plans for a free education program.

Lincoln, Landon Have Same Initials

Mrs. Wilma D. Hoyal, assistant chairman of the Republican National Committee, isn't superstitious, but she points out that Abe Lincoln and Alf Landon have the same initials.

"Abe Lincoln," says Mrs. Hoyal, "brought our country through its greatest crisis in the 19th century. If there is any significance in this repetition, Alf Landon surely will be elected to do the same for us in the 20th century."

Celebrated 79th Birthday

On Sunday friends and relatives of Jacob Nelson, pioneer resident of Holt gathered at the R. A. Werner home to take part in the celebration of Mr. Nelson's 79th birthday.

In the afternoon a short program was held. Mr. A. P. Thompson gave a very interesting talk and the children of the several families attending, sang birthday songs.

Those who attended the party were: Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Sorum and family, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Nelson and son, Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Wegge, Mrs. L. Wegge, Mr. and Mrs. J. Hagberg and son, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Werner and A. P. Thompson of Holt; Mr. and R. L. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Nelson and family of Grand Forks, Bertha Engeqretson of Fertile; Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Holmgren and son of Glyndon, Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Hagen and family of Thief River Falls.

The Weather

The continued heat and dry weather is still with us. No sign of rain the past week. The farmers are busy cutting what little crop they have. Some hope we will soon have rain so the stock will have a little better pasture.

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

Here is another list of questions which are interesting to check. If the statement is true or false, mark it yes or no accordingly.

1. Doubling a car's speed from 20 to 40 miles per hour increases the braking distance required four times.
2. There are more accidents at night for the number of cars on the road than during the day for an eqal number of cars.
3. A blow-out on a rear tire is apt to have more serious results than on a front tire.
4. Having injured a pedestrian along a highway, the first responsibility of the motorist is to telephone the police department.

Try answering these questions.

"You were right in the beginning," Pat said. "There was only one thing to do. Father saw Kelly alive after Peg's husband left him, and we should have said so.

"I can't stand seeing Peggy," Pat continued. "Was that what you had in mind when you sent her here? Anyway, it's too terrible. She comes down to breakfast, looking—well, you know. You knew about trouble like that—all night long—alone—and I didn't. I do now, and we've got to 'come clean.'

"I don't think it matters," Barry replied. "I still think we can free Jack without that."

"How soon?"

"By next Wednesday."

Pat nodded.

"All right," she said. "We'll wait until Wednesday."

Barry had never seen her more charming.

As they walked down the beach, to rejoin the others, he asked, "Are you ever going to confess how you found out about me?"

Pat laughed.

"That was too easy. The night of Marian's visit, you told me you'd taken the name Barry Gilbert. And it had a curiously familiar sound. After a moment, I remembered that I'd once seen an actor called Barry Gilbert in a war picture."

"And then?"

"Then you shut your hand in the door. The expression of mingled surprise and pain in your face—that was what had kept the picture and the actor in my mind. You were the man who'd come out of the drinking place, laughing and talking, and been shot. I was sure of that—just as sure as I was that you'd crushed your fingers deliberately to keep us from knowing that, unlike the Jack Ridder you were supposed to be, you couldn't play a violin any more than you could play Hamlet."

"I'm glad you found out," Barry said. "I'm glad I haven't been deceiving you, at all events."

They had reached the railroad builders.

"Pat!" Jack called. "Pat! We've finished—"

"Jacky! You mustn't call Miss Hambidge 'Pat.'"

"Everybody else does."

"I like it," Patricia came to the rescue. "We're Pat and Peg to each other now; why shouldn't I be Pat to Jacky?"

It was almost a miracle, Barry decided. Was this the same girl of whom, only a couple of months ago, her father had said, "Pat, for short, though it takes courage to call her that."

The change wasn't all his doing, or Peg's. Something else had contributed to softening Pat, and making her sweeter and lovelier. It was ironic, Barry felt, and bitter—that she should be the loveliest when he was losing her. What of his plan to come back for her—"Some day, when I've made good?" A girl like that might marry an ex-vagabond; she certainly couldn't marry an ex-convict.

Barry drove back to town Sunday evening without having put anybody's house in order. He had dined with the Hambidges, and gone over there in the morning "to see Jacky start for his ride."

"Well, our trial's set for two weeks from today," said Winslow when Barry called at his office Monday morning.

"I'm still hoping there won't be any trial."

"Meaning that you think you've got Mrs. Kelly?"

That was the question Barry had dreaded. Winslow's frank amusement at his "sleuthing" nettled him, and made him feel foolish. Especially now that he was compelled to admit, "No; I'm afraid you were right about Mrs. Kelly. She slept at her sister's that night."

"Well, then," Peter asked, "who's the latest candidate?"

"Do you remember reading me your cross examination of the Filipino?"

"A new notes for it—yes."

"You found a lot of holes in the boy's story?"

"Yes."

But Peter was still amused.

"Well, I've got a few more," Barry said, "and a motive."

He sat down, and Peter opposite him. Barry repeated what Evans had told him of the dinner with Nolan.

"You think so?"

"Obviously. If Nolan sticks to his story. We say Nolan's testimony establishes that the decanter was downstairs all the time Rogers was upstairs. But we've got to make the jury believe it."

"Or the district attorney."

Winslow shook his head.

"The district attorney wouldn't move for dismissal of an indictment on that evidence."

"But—"

"You're perfectly sure that the Filipino killed Kelly," Winslow went on. "I'm not. And the district attorney wouldn't be. The Filipino was angry. And the decanter was downstairs. That's all there really is to that story."

"That's what we've got to prove to the jury. My own guess is that the decanter had been carried into the dining room when the murderer entered the house."

"After Nolan went home?"

"Yes, and after the Filipino went to [illegible]

"And that man—"

"You're sure it was a man?"

"Very sure. And that man was someone who had better reason than we've found yet for hating or dreading Mike Kelly."

Barry rose.

"Have you ever thought of Luis Morano?" Barry asked.

Winslow let the glove fall.

"Why?"

"He seems to have had some reason for hating Kelly."

"You mean that row in the Cocoanut Bar?" Peter said. "Oddly enough, that's why I haven't thought of Morano. He was telephoning me from the Cocoanut Bar—about the row—at the time of the murder.

"Luis always came to me when he was in trouble. And he called me, at home, just after one that morning, to say that one of his girls was in jail, and would I take the case. I could hear that jazz of his."

Barry stooped for the glove.

"Well, that's that," he remarked. "Kelly was threatening Morano, you know, and—"

But Peter was smiling again.

"You can make a case against almost anyone," he said. "But a case that'll stand up—that's another thing."

Barry grinned sheepishly.

Winslow pressed a button.

"Stop worrying," he advised Barry. "We're going to free Rogers. If we have to get the guilty man to do it, we'll get him, but let's give the court a chance first."

"I'm Glad You Found Out," Barry Said.

"I guess we'll have to," Barry conceded.

Peter's secretary opened the door.

"What's Nolan's first name?" Peter asked Barry. "And where's his garage? Got it, Miss Clark? Now, get Nolan in here this afternoon."

He looked up at Barry.

"Don't mind my joking," he said. "Something tells me you did a grand job when you turned up Mr. Nolan."

"Peter's wonderfully kind," Barry told Harwood that evening, "but he makes me feel as small as an author's name in a motion picture advertisement."

"I don't think Winslow means to make anyone feel small," Ernie answered. "He's too big for that. It's the small men who've got to make other people smaller, in self-defense. The trouble with Winslow is that he's generally right, and that's trying, no matter how kind anyone may be about it."

"Winslow's a great lawyer," he went on, "and a swell guy. He's had his own troubles, too. Ever meet his wife?"

"Once."

"He's nearly wrecked his career for her, you know. She ran away from home with some youngster in a military school. The kid turned crook, and the cops killed him. Then she married Winslow. The tabloids played the story up all over the place, and Mrs. Winslow crashed, and had to be taken to Europe. She went to pieces again two or three years ago, and Winslow closed the office, and went to live in the South of France. The money gave out, I guess. Anyway, they didn't stay long. Of course, that telephone message doesn't prove anything."

"You mean Morano's message to Winslow?"

"Yes. Luis might have sent that at one o'clock, and still've been in time for the murder."

"Is there any chance that Luis didn't send it?"

"Why do you ask that?"

"It occurs to me that Peter might be shielding someone."

"Whom? Morano?" Harwood shook his head. "Winslow isn't that kind of a lawyer. As a matter of fact, I know Morano phoned him."

"Who told you?"

"Violet Fane."

"Then you've been to the Cocoanut Bar?"

"Yes. I went Saturday, and met all your cronies. Miss Fane says Luis followed Peggy Rogers around to the police station, and then came back to the Bar, and called up his lawyer, and drove to Morristown."

"At one o'clock?"

"Yes."

"How about 'faking an alibi?'"

"You reminded me it could be done," Barry went on.

Ernie turned suddenly.

"Ever strike you as queer," he asked, "that nobody ever connected Kelly's murder with the Jefferson Street grab?"

Barry couldn't trust himself to reply.

"They were pulled off about the same time. As I remember it, Judge Hambidge's decision was handed down the day after the killing."

Barry remained silent.

"Kelly stood to make a million or two on that deal," Harwood continued. "Those Jefferson Street houses were pretty decent once. Then they went slummy. Through agents, Kelly bought 'em in, one by one, for little or nothing, and turned 'em over to a phoney corporation to sell to the city at a huge profit. Some of the original owners may have been a little bit sore, don't you think?"

The conversation was drifting into safer channels, and, relieved, Barry let it flow on.

"As a matter of fact," Harwood resumed, "someone was—very sore. He called me up, the day of the murder, and offered to squeal. He wouldn't give me his name, but he said he'd be here, at ten-thirty that night, to deliver the goods on Kelly."

"And then?"

"Then he didn't show up."

"Somebody got to him."

"Probably. And then somebody killed Kelly."

Barry asked, "Is that the clue you had in mind when you said, 'Tell Winslow I may have a tip for him some day?'"

Harwood nodded.

"Yes, but, as I remarked later, that guy who phoned might have been anybody. I didn't have a darn thing to go on except that he had a soft voice and a funny impediment in his speech."

"And then—"

"Then you told me about Morano, and I went to the Cocoanut Bar. The guy that phoned me was Morano, all right. But what does that mean? Not a thing, maybe. If Morano did hop in his car at one o'clock that night—"

He paused.

"I've got a dozen men on this trail. Now, I'm going to send somebody to Morristown. Not you. They know you. Your job is to lay low. Morano hasn't the faintest idea who I am. I told him I came from Grand Rapids. But—"

The city editor was pacing the floor.

"My God, how this picture begins fitting together," he cried. "Morano threatens to spill the beans. Someone tells Kelly. Kelly goes to the Cocoanut Bar. With two strong-arm men. Why? To silence a squealer. That was around eight o'clock, and, at ten-thirty, the squealer didn't squeal. Why? Because Kelly had something on him."

"Something in writing," he said.

"Sure! The paper he accused Peggy Rogers of trying to steal."

"Yes," Barry went on, "and get this: somebody did try. Violet Fane, probably. Peggy Rogers says Violet had just left the table when the row started. And that Luis was talking to Vi, outside the dressing rooms, just before that.

"—What did he say? He said, 'I'll send this dame to jail, and you to the hot spot.' And you can't send a man to the electric chair for picking pockets."

"No."

"But you might, if you knew of something else he'd done, and had the proof of it. There was a paper, and it had disappeared when the body was found. Who got it? Morano. And not in the Cocoanut Bar, because it was still in Kelly's pocket at midnight."

Harwood laid down his pipe.

"How do you know that?"

"Somebody told me."

"Jack Rogers?"

"No."

Harwood's eyes narrowed.

"Was it Judge Hambidge?"

Barry didn't answer.

"If Winslow's shielding anyone it's Judge Hambidge," Harwood said. "Judge Hambidge, or someone close to him. I've been thinking that ever since you put the idea in my head. The judge has always been a straight shooter. Why did he write that decision? Was that paper a threat to him, too?"

Barry said, "I don't know."

"Can I help?"

Ernie looked at him.

"No," he replied, curtly. "For the present, I want you to keep out of this."

Eyes Around the World

The films of travel, which carry the vision around the world and back again have vastly broadened the horizons of millions of people, and in that respect have proved to be of high value.

The opportunities of most people for seeing the world are very limited.

The average person in small towns and country places has a very dim idea of the length and breadth of the world, of of the people who live in places remote from him.

Today almost every boy and girl can tell you of the Taj Mahal, or of the Desert of Sahara, or the peaks of the Andes, or of life in remote cities like London, Paris and Constantinople.

* * *

Mr. Shakespeare informs us that "home-keeping youth have ever homely wits."

But "homely wits" hardly exist when practically all the people of all the civilized countries of the world can, by paying a small price for a seat in a cinema theater look "'round the world and back again."

The camera man has completely replaced the men who used to go forth and view the world and bring home pictures of it to be thrown on a still screen.

From your seat in a theater you can view the Eskimo catching a seal which will provide him with his supper and an overcoat, with a good clear glance at the peaks of the Alps or the Andes, or at "Elephants a pilin' teak" in Burmah.

* * *

Minds feed on what the eyes see.

Loving their work, and eager to bring home pictures of all the known world, these daredevils of the films are never daunted by obstacles, or by dangers.

To me it has always been astonishing that every school room in every city and village and town has not long ago been provided with cameras and screens to aid the children in their work.

Not only would they vastly broaden the view of many sections of the world, but they could, I should think, be tremendously useful in teaching such subjects as biology and zoology.

Even pictures which only incidentally show the streets of foreign cities would be valuable. What they would do if wisely used would prove a marvel.

Unavailing Remorse

WE NEED to be careful how we deal with those about us, for Death carries with it to some small circle of survivors thoughts of so many things forgotten, and so many more which might have been repaired. Such recollections are among the bitterest we can have. There is no remorse so deep as that which is unavailing; if we would be spared its pains, let us remember in time.—Dickens.

The Junior League

The Junior league originated among a small group of young women in New York city who in 1900 sent a large number of roses from a party to a hospital. Later they and others banded together "for mutual benefit and the good of the community." From giving entertainments for the benefit of a college settlement they extended their activities to many other forms of social aid. Similar organizations of young women were formed in other cities out of which grew a national association of leagues, each interested in its particular ways in the educational, cultural and civic conditions of its community and in volunteer charitable and other service.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG WASHINGTON D. C.

Washington.—There seems to be little doubt any longer that President Roosevelt is getting ready to spring a new surprise among his many surprises and that he will employ it to wean away as much of the farm vote from Governor Landon of Kansas as is possible. The President usually has a card up his sleeve, one that he can pull out with a flourish and one that, on the surface at least, carries very convincing prospects in the particular line he has chosen.

To Lure Farm Vote

In this instance, it seems rather well established that you may expect the President to come forward shortly with a brand new proposition for greater co-operative effort between the farmers and the city consumers. He is likely to present this new proposition—some of his critics have been unkind enough to describe it as a new rabbit from the hat—in a dressing that will be quite alluring. It is not clear yet just when the new plan will be offered by the President and his New Deal associates, but the guess can be made that it will come in time to permit a full exposition of the program by the New Dealers in advance of election. By the same token, it is apparent that the President's 1936 promises for the farmers will be disclosed late enough so that the Republicans will have little time to pick it to pieces.

The tip-off on the fact that Mr. Roosevelt is developing another farm program comes in Mr. Secretary Wallace's latest book "Whose Constitution." Of course, the secretary's observations may not be charged directly to the President. Nevertheless, it is the opinion of many of us who have watched the New Deal wheels go around that the secretary of agriculture usually leads the procession in offering new suggestions for New Deal activities.

Secretary Wallace is a candid man and his frankness continuously has been of an engaging sort. For the reason that he is of this type, I think it can be said usually that his views reflect what is going on beneath the surface. That is, his views ordinarily serve as a trial balloon, whether the secretary realizes it or not, and if they are watched closely, an accurate forecast of what is coming may be made.

It might have been that the secretary's book would have escaped attention as a vehicle carrying a message from the inner circle of New Dealers except for one line that was tucked away in the Democratic platform, or the platform adopted by the Philadelphia convention.

The sentence in the platform with which the secretary's book may properly be connected reads: "We will act to secure to the consumer fair value, honest sales and a decreasing spread between the price he pays and the price the producer receives."

Some observers here have linked that proposition with a thought that Mr. Roosevelt proposes to organize not only co-operatives among the farmers but to link those co-operatives with similar co-operatives among the consumers. The conviction held by these individuals is that Mr. Roosevelt, astute politician that he is, is seeking to kill two birds with one stone. In other words, they contend that his plan will be thrown out as an inducement for the farmers to support his policies and re-elect him and that when he deals with the voters in great industrial areas he will point out to them the possibility of cheaper food in this manner.

It is to be remembered in connection with the reported new farm program that Mr. Roosevelt has sent a commission to Europe to study the co-operative idea. There has been no fanfare, no blare of trumpets about the departure of these men, each being an avowed New Dealer and each one being thoroughly dependable. That is, they are men who can be depended upon to present the facts they gather in true New Deal light. They have been in Europe now about a month. It is expected they will remain at least one month longer. If, then, they take a month to write that we can expect another New Deal farm program, based upon the co-operative idea, to emerge from the White House around October 1. It is just 30 days from that date to the election.

* * *

We now have had acceptance speeches by both Mr. Roosevelt and Governor Landon, his opponent. To the extent that the keynote speeches of the national conventions indicate the trend of mind of the party workers and to the extent that the acceptance speeches tell in a way the deeply rooted views of the candidates, the issues of the campaign are drawn.

Campaign Issues

Of course, it has frequently been the case that the issues of July are not the issues that decide the election in November. There are those students of politics who are saying this year that the questions discussed by President Roosevelt and Governor Landon in their acceptance speeches are going to have very little to do with the decision of the voters three months hence.

I can report only on a consensus among political authorities on this point. That consensus seems to be that Mr. Landon is going to stick to discussion of the major problems as he sees them and that Mr. Roosevelt's strategy will be governed entirely by whatever changes take place in campaign conditions.

In other words, these writers in Washington who have gone through many a harried political battle, seem to feel that Mr. Roosevelt's campaign strategy is going to be exactly like the policies he has followed in his present administration. By that I mean, to quote the President's own words, that "If one thing fails, we will try something else."

There is the conviction among these same writers that Governor Landon will resort to no oratorical flourishes nor will he employ any of the tactics that Mr. Roosevelt has so often used in his fireside radio chats. Further, it is quite evident, I believe, that Governor Landon will make the burden of his plea to the American people an appeal to restore what he considers to be the American form of government. It was quite obvious from his acceptance speech, as it has been evident in some of his pre-campaign pronouncements, that he favors the common sense idea in government management and that he will permit nothing to swerve him from that course.

But it should be said, it seems to me, that if Governor Landon is able to maintain that plane throughout his campaign, he will be deserving of great commendation. There are many observers here who believe he has undertaken a task of the most difficult kind. The governor has built up or others have built up around him an atmosphere of simplicity. It has reached a high pitch. The question is—can he keep the campaign attuned to that pitch from now until November? If he does, he will surprise a great many observers.

* * *

Lately, I have heard through underground channels that Democratic Chairman Farley is getting a little irked at the methods employed by the youthful John Hamilton, who is chairman of the Republicans. "Big Jim" has taken a leave of absence as postmaster general, you will remember, in order to devote his time to re-electing President Roosevelt. He is now in a position to battle and, judging by his record, he can be expected to carry on a vigorous fight. That makes it all the more surprising to know that "Big Jim" has grown a little bit peevish as a result of the nudging and the razing that the red-headed Republican chairman has been handing him.

Farley Irked

Six weeks elapsed between the nomination of Governor Landon and the date of his formal notification. During this time, Mr. Hamilton alone had to carry the Republican ball. He made numerous speeches and minced no words in any of them. He struck out straight from the shoulder at Mr. Farley.

During that time, Mr. Hamilton really had no one firing back at him. It was exactly the same condition as obtained before the Republicans had selected a candidate and Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Farley had no one to fight back at them. The test for Mr. Hamilton, therefore, will come when Mr. Farley gets into action and the Democratic campaign is fully under way. He is young in national politics and some of the success of the Republican campaign is going to depend upon how Mr. Hamilton conducts himself, when Mr. Farley starts jibing and knocking down the Republican chairman's ears in the heat of battle.

There is another phase of the campaign that is going to be interesting to watch. For three years, Mr. Roosevelt has had open channels on the radio, has had the utmost freedom in picking his spots for delivering new pronouncements or his appeals for patience by the people. But that time has passed insofar as the President is concerned. He is now confronted with competition. What I am trying to say is that everywhere and every time the President speaks, he will speak with the knowledge that a fighting opposition is ready to leap on every word and every proposal that he makes. This is an entirely different circumstance than any Mr. Roosevelt has faced since he entered the White House March 4, 1933.

If it can be avoided, never wash combs, as water often makes the teeth split. A small brush made purposely to clean combs can be bought. With this the comb should be well brushed and then cleansed with a cloth.

If in breaking eggs into a mixing bowl a bad one should accidentally be dropped in, a whole cake may be spoiled. It is, therefore, wise to always break one egg at a time into a cup before putting it into the mixing bowl.

To remove the onion odor from the hands after peeling and slicing them rub the hands with vinegar or lemon juice before washing with soap and water. If the onions are sliced under water and the hands are already wet rub them with dry salt.

Post Toasties Corn Flakes

Here is the story of the notorious Gallo gang—as Melvin Purvis, the young lawyer who became America's ace G-Man, told it to his friends, Paul and Joan. Names have, of course, been changed. This inside story is published as clinching proof that CRIME DOES NOT PAY!

WHY FOLKS EVERYWHERE CALL POST TOASTIES "THE BETTER CORN FLAKES!"

TO JOIN: Send two Post Toasties package tops, with coupon at right, to Melvin Purvis. He'll send you his official Junior G-Man badge, his big book that tells how to become a Junior G-Man, and a catalog of OTHER SWELL FREE PRIZES!

Boys' Badge (right) and Girls' Division Badge (above). Polished gold-bronze design, enameled in blue. Either free for 2 package tops.

HERE'S a hint from Melvin Purvis, America's most famous G-Man: "Have a big bowl of Post Toasties for breakfast tomorrow," he advises. "You'll like them—every spoonful!"

Post Toasties are so good because they are made from the sweet, tender little hearts of the corn . . . where most of the flavor is stored. And every golden-brown flake is toasted double crisp, so it will keep its crunchy goodness longer in milk or cream.

Wheat Imports Jump Rapidly

United States Now Buys 40 Million Bushels From Other Nations.

By FRANK RIDGWAY

Gears of international trade machinery have been thrown in reverse to the extent that the United States is today the world's largest wheat importer, with the single exception of Great Britain, including North Ireland. In that regrettable position this nation has imported from foreign countries more than 40 million bushels of wheat within the past year.

For at least 70 years, this country had been a net exporter of wheat. A dozen years ago, farmers bragged about selling to foreign countries more than 259 million bushels of wheat in one year, exceeding the exports of any other country in the world. Today, they are forced to stand by and watch foreign growers sell wheat to America's customers abroad. They also are supplying a large part of the market here at home.

Government Tinkering

This revolutionary change has been brought about not only by drouths, but also by government tinkering with production and foreign trade policies. Had there been no government meddling, our growers would have had more wheat to sell during the next 12 months when prices are expected to be higher than they have been for several years.

After three years experience under a crop and livestock production program dictated to them by officials of a centralized government, many practical farmers feel that they would have done a better job acting individually. They must pay their share of the New Deal dole money sent out to individual farmers for reducing their production which has contributed to the present predicament.

Farmers had been told by political planners that the reduced production of farm products, brought about by adverse weather conditions and by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program, had been good for them. As they now stand looking backward, each farmer is better able to appraise for himself what the drouth and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration did for him and decide as an individual whether it has been good or bad.

Pay Higher Prices

Producers, working under various handicaps, are now threshing a wheat crop estimated to be approximately 638 million bushels, more than 145 million bushels less than the five-year average from 1929 to 1933. It will again be necessary for the United States to bring in large quantities of hard wheat to blend with soft wheat during the next year. Our millers will be forced to pay a higher price plus 42 cents a bushel duty because Canada's wheat crop is short.

When the wheat drills start this fall, many United States growers are expected to make their own decisions as to the number of acres they will plant and encourage their neighbors to do likewise.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Lorentson and family and Mrs. Miller spent Sunday at Bemidji where they met some relatives from Duluth and had picnic dinner together. Howard Lorentson went to Duluth to stay a couple of weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carlson and family returned here last Friday evening from Birchmont Beach on Lake Bemidji where they have spent several weeks during the summer.

It would not hurt a bit to see somo of the people of this village go out with a scythe and cut some of the weeds that are grow ing up around their property. If they do not do so soon some one will have to chop them down in order to find the places.

We all want rain. Oh, why, oh why don't she rain?

Fears War Near In Europe

Estes Park, Colo.—An associated press dispatch states that Newton D. Baker, secretary of war in the Wilson administration, said here that conditions in Europe are such that it may be possible "to get an incident out of which would be created another World war".

Europe, he told the Institute of Human Relations, is "skating close" to war, and peace on the the continent is "uncertain".

"We have had a paper peace, but no real peace since the outbreak of the World war," he said.

"We have seen the League of Nations disintegrate, and now we see the whole world so formed that it seems war is inescapable.

"America might be said to be the only nation to have a peace mind. The other nations have war on the mind."

Many Forest Fires Reported

Fear that forest fires sweeping the western tinderbox may take a greater toll this year than in 1934, when the national loss was estimated at $45,000,000, was expressed Monday by federal fire-fighting officials.

While clouds of smoke rose from stubborn blazes in seven different states, they hoped for rain and tightened control measures at national and state parks and forests.

During the 1934 drouth 41,820-860 acres of forest were burned over. The 1936 toll will not be known definitely until a check of federal, state and private lands is made at the end of the year.

A roaring forest fire has been doing heavy damage to timber and farms at Aurora, Minnesota, 50 miles north of Duluth. Three persons were burned to death and 25 farms destroyed.

Another bad fire has been cutting a swath thru the Brule district in Wisconsin. This part of the state has been darkened the past few days with smoke from the forest fire in Beltrami Island east of Roseau. Over 300 men are out there combating the flames.

Other fires that have been reported as doing heavy damages, are in the Black Hills, S. Dak., Isle Royal, Michigan, Montana and many places in Canada. In Alberta a large fire has burned over a territory a hundred miles square. Please be careful with fire at this time. Don't throw lighted cigars, matches or cigarettes from autos when you are out motoring.

Will Install New Pastor Here

Rev. I. T. Aastad, Detroit Lakes, Minn., President of the Northern Minnesota District of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America, will be here Sunday, August 16th at 10:30 to conduct the installation services for Rev. T. C. L. Hanson who will take over the charge of the Nazareth Lutheran Congregation here at that time.

Asked To Avert Water Crises

At the request of a committee from cities of the Red River valley, E. V. Willard, state commissioner of conservation, and L. P. Zimmerman, state emergency relief administrator, last week left for Washington to ask President Roosevelt to take immediate steps to avert threatened danger of a shortage of drinking water.

According to Walter Olson, director of the division of drainage and waters, accumulation of debris in the Red Lake and Red Rivers is interfering with flowage.

President Roosevelt will be asked to further projects to restore normal water flow to the rivers.

The Ottertail river is being investigated this week by the United States Geological Survey, which will report its findings to the state division of drainage and waters. If the present rate of flow from Ottertail lake continues through the remainder of the summer and fall, and there is no rain, there will be very little water left in the storage lakes for use during the winter months, Mr. Olson said.

Editors Note— We don't believe that it is a fair deal to all concerned that, the above cities be allowed to have their own way about asking to drain our lakes for city water supplies.

In most of these cities they are going after all kinds of federal projects, so why don't they drill a few wells for water out of all the grants they get? Wake up and protest to having the Red Lakes drained out to give the large cities mentioned free water flowage from our lakes now.

The Weather

On Friday afternoon last week the hot and dry spell here was broken when the biggest rain of the season hit this part of the country. The steady two-hour downpour was welcome as it revived pastures and helped wells that were going dry. Since the rain we have had hot weather again and can use another good shower this afternoon.

Bought Threshing Outfit

Olaf Dahl and son Leslie, farmers in the Mud Lake area, have this week purchased the big threshing outfit we advertised for sale last week for Paul Hoffman. The Dahl's have a wonderful crop this year.

Edward Erickson Called Home

Band Concert At Newfolden

The Holt Community band will give an outdoor concert at Newfolden on Tuesday evening, August 18. All those who have cars and can find time should take the evening off and accompany the band there. Lets boost our band.

Eastern Council Meeting Held

The third meeting of the 4-H Eastern Council was held on Thursday evening, when the Honor Bright 4-H members and leaders acted as hostesses to the Holt and Grygla clubs.

The meeting was called to order by the president, Clarence Doran, who presided over all business.

The secretary's report of the previous meeting was read and accepted.

It was decided to hold our Eastern Achievement Day at Holt on August 21st unless the clubs in the Western county accept our invitation to come to Holt on the 22nd of August.

It was also decided to hold our next meeting at Gryla schoolhouse on September 18th.

A program was rendered consisting of community singing, led by Miss Bierbaum; talk by Mr. Plughoeft of Crookston; talk on "Rocks" by Marshall Evans, 4-H member; and musical selections by Honor Bright folks.

Games were played and a social time enjoyed by all.

Chester Larson, Vivian and Marian Larson, Beatrice Larson and Marilyn and Yvonne Oakey, represented the Holt 4-H at the meeting.

Awarded Trip To State Fair

Miss Marian Larson, a member of the Holt 4-H was awarded a free trip to the State Fair in the 4-H individual bread baking demonstrations.

4-H Club Team Win Games

The Holt 4-H kittenball team played against the Honor Bright team from Middle River on Sunday afternoon at Middle River.

The game was another victory for the Holt team, the final score being 22 to 9. The Holt 4-H team has now played against three other club teams with a victory in each game. They played Grygla mixed team with a score of 10 to 1, Viking boy's team with a score of 17 to 15 in one game and 16 to 6 in the other.

Mr. and Mrs. George Fricker and Boy left on Sunday for Lake Bemidji for a two week's vacation.

Band Gave Big Concert

The Holt Community Band made their first outdoor appearance for concert this year at the bandstand on Tuesday evening. A large crowd came out to hear the band play. Mr. Lindahl of Newfolden is the new director of the band and he put the concert over in good style.

Soil Conservation Statements

Farmers who have destroyed evidence of 1936 seeding of soil conserving crops or who wish to plow before performance is checked, should before destroying evidence, obtain statements signed by 2 neighbors or a committee man showing the soil building practice followed on the fields plowed or to be plowed. Neighbors signing statement should also stake out such fields which they approve.

As a suggestion, the county office recommends a map be drawn showing all fields and the uses that these fields have been put to. Wherever a soil conserving crop has been seeded and because of conditions beyond the control of the operator, shows no evidence of such practice, statements should be obtained to verify such practices.

Rev. and Mrs. Hanson Arrived

Rev. and Mrs. T. L. C. Hanson of Milan, Minn., arrived here on Tuesday evening to take up their duties in charge of the Nazareth Lutheran congregation.

Rev. Hanson will be installed at the morning services here on Sunday morning at ten thirty o'clock.

The people of Holt and community extend a hearty welcome to Rev. and Mrs. Hanson to this call.

4-H Club News

The Holt 4-H club will meet on Friday evening, August 14th, at Sunnyside.

Let's see all members, leaders, and parents present as the annual achievment day for livestock projects will be discussed.

Anyone wishing any assistance in filling out their records, kindly bring them along.

Miss Bierbaum, county leader, and Miss Helen Leader, ass't. sec'y. of the County Council, are expected to attend.

Lunch will be served. Everybody welcome.

July Called Record Month

There were more forest fires during the month of July than in any July on record, according to Anson E. Pimley, in charge of fire-fighting for the state division of forestry.

Final compilations for the month have not been made, Mr. Pimley stated, but indications are that July, normally a month with low fire hazard, broke all records.

"Everything possible is being done to control the fires", Mr. Pimley said. "But anything can happen with continued dry conditions. All persons entering or camping in the forests should exercise extreme care. We have all of our personnel and many additional men working on fires, but we obviously cannot make much progress unless we have the full cooperation of all citizens."

Mr. Pimley said that short wave radio sets are being used in addition to telephones to keep in touch with conditions in the fire areas.

At The Avalon Theatre

Shirley Temple in "The Poor Little Rich Girl" will be shown at the Avalon Theatre at Thief River Falls on Sunday and Monday, August 16 and 17. Two matinees on Sunday afternoon at 1:30 and 3:30 p. m.

Olympic Games Formally Opened in Berlin

WITH spectacular ceremony the Olympic Games were officially opened in Berlin when a graceful runner, bearing the Olympic flame that had been started from Greece dashed into the stadium, lowered the silver torch before Reichsfuehrer Hitler and kindled the sacred fire in a great cresset. Then came the formal parade of the athletes of fifty nations, nattily uniformed and marching with precision while guns boomed and bands blared. Some of the foreign groups gave the Hitler salute as they passed by the chancellor. Others did not. Among the latter were the Americans, who placed their straw hats on their left breasts and marched by with eyes right. Nor was the American flag dipped before the fuehrer, the explanation being that this was done only before the President. The American contingent was greeted by an outburst of whistling which the knowing declared meant "the raspberry." But on the whole the affair was decidedly successful.

Adolf Hitler

In the first day's contests the United States started things with a rush. Jesse Owens, Ohio State's colored star, broke the Olympic and world records in winning his heat in the 100-meter dash; and Johnson, who is from California, set a new Olympic record of 2.03 meters. In some other events the Americans did well, and in yet others they were eliminated.

In the 100 meter finals Owens won and Metcalfe of Chicago was second. Helen Stephens of Missouri, in winning two heats of the women's 100 meter event, broke the world record both times.

By a vote of 36 to 27 Tokio won the Olympic games for 1940, Finland being the losing bidder. The Americans, South America and the British empire were virtually solid for Japan, which offered a transportation subsidy of about $485,000 to offset costs of traveling in the Far East. The Finns urged that the games be returned to a Spartan simplicity.

Lewis and Allies Absent When A. F. of L. Council Meets

JOHN L. LEWIS, head of the United Mine Workers, and his 11 associates on the Committee for Industrial Organization, made good their promise not to be present when the executive council of the American Federation of Labor met to try them on charges of "insurrection." The council members were plainly angered by this defiance and it was predicted they would proceed to find the defendants guilty "in absentia" and to suspend the unions in the Lewis group. This would be the greatest split in the ranks of American organized labor since the federation was formed fifty years ago. It would mean the loss of about one-third of the federation's membership.

Previous to the meeting of the council President William Green in an impassioned speech accused Lewis and his followers of substituting "jungle law" for democracy in their efforts to organize the steel industry. He said he was prepared to make any personal sacrifice, even to resigning his office, to bring about peace and "bind up the wounds."

Col. Roosevelt Willing to Run for Governor

NEW YORK Republicans are to nominate a candidate for governor at their party convention in September, and Col. Theodore Roosevelt has said in a letter that was made public that he is willing to accept that honor if the party so desires.

Col. Roosevelt

Colonel Roosevelt, now forty-eight years old, was the Republican candidate for governor in 1924 and was defeated by Alfred E. Smith. Since then he has been governor of Puerto Rico and governor-general of the Philippines.

Puerto Rico Nationalists Are Found Guilty

PEDRO ALBIZU CAMPOS, leader of the Puerto Rico Nationalist party, and seven of his associates were found guilty at San Juan of a conspiracy to overthrow the United States government in the island by force and were sentenced by Federal Judge R. A. Cooper to prison terms ranging from two to six years. In the first trial of these men the jury had disagreed. The defense attorneys gave notice of appeal.

The case originated in a clash between Nationalists and police last October in which several persons were slain. Following this, Col. E. Francis Riggs, chief of insular police, was murdered, presumably in revenge for the killing of Nationalists in the October fight.

New Locarno Pact May Give Europe Security

WHILE the nations of Europe were worrying over the Spanish rebellion and the danger that it might bring about open rupture among the Fascist and anti-Fascist governments of the continent, steps were taken to assure peace. Germany and Italy accepted the invitation of Great Britain, France and Belgium to participate in a conference this fall from which it is hoped another and better Locarno pact will emerge.

No date for the conference has been set, but it was expected to be held either just before or soon after the meeting of the league of nations assembly in Geneva in September.

Zioncheck Does Not Seek Re-election to Congress

HEREAFTER Washington will have to get along without the excitement provided by the antics of Marion A. Zioncheck of Seattle, Wash. That eccentric—to put it mildly—gentleman has announced that he is not a candidate for re-election, because of his mother's ill health, and says he wants to be America's forgotten man. Zioncheck has settled down to private law practice.

Progress of Revolution in Spanish Republic

GEN. FRANCISCO FRANCO'S rebel forces in Spain, according to late reports, were pressing the government troops seriously and winning some bloody encounters. This despite the claims of Madrid that the Fascists had been checked. The rebel columns advancing on the capital from the south were reported to be threatening communications between Madrid and the eastern seacoast at Valencia and Alicante, chief sources of the government's food supplies. Leaders of the insurgents claimed they held Huelva, important seaport, and all the territory between Seville and the Portuguese border.

Gen. Franco

The government, now a red dictatorship, has taken possession of all church property and assumed control of all industry and agriculture. It also has confiscated the merchant marine to form a defense fleet. The loyalists were encouraged by victories in and around San Sabastian.

Fascist Italy has been accused of aiding the Spanish rebels, and it is asserted a number of Italian bombing planes were sent to them in Morocco. The leftist French government naturally is in sympathy with the Madrid government and Frenchmen, unarmed, have been given permission to cross the border to aid in putting down the rebellion. German and Russian sympathies, also, are ranged on opposite sides, and all this caused fears that a general war might result. France called on all other nations to preserve neutrality, and Spain warned Italy and Germany to keep hands off.

Day by day the struggle in Spain became bloodier and more ruthless. Summary executions of prisoners were common on both sides and these deaths were probably as numerous as those in battle. The government planes showered bombs on the rebel strongholds, virtually destroying many towns; and the Fascist bombers engaged in desperate fights with loyal warships.

President Roosevelt's Vacation Is Ended

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ended his 437 mile cruise when his yacht docked at Campobello island, New Brunswick, where he has a summer home.

Mr. Roosevelt remained at Campobello only two days and then took a special train to Quebec, where he visited with Lord Tweedsmuir, governor general of Canada.

Immediately after this meeting, Mr. Roosevelt took train for his summer residence in Hyde Park, N. Y., and there began mapping the plans for his campaign for reelection. Half a dozen leaders of the Democratic party, including National Chairman James A. Farley, were summoned into conference with their chief. The President also obtained from Secretary Wallace and Chester Davis a report on drouth conditions and relief needs.

Smaller Scale Projects in New PWA Program

EMPHASIS is placed on smaller scale projects to be completed speedily, in the third building program of the public works administration, which was opened by the allotment of $22,742,034 by President Roosevelt. It includes 352 projects in 37 states, and the largest of these is a courthouse for New York city to cost the government $4,835,000. The average allotment is only $64,323.

Secretary Ickes, PWA administrator, said that, in addition to 45 per cent donation, PWA will lend $2,142,000 to help communities defray their 55 per cent share of the cost. President Roosevelt has ordered that all projects "be commenced by October 1, 1936, reach a peak by the end of the year and be completed by October 1, 1937."

Frank Knox Notified of His Nomination

FACING an enthusiastic crowd that completely filled the big Chicago stadium, Col. Frank Knox received from Senator Steiwer of Oregon the official notification of his nomination for the vice presidency by the Republican party. National Chairman John Hamilton introduced the senator, who spoke briefly but forcefully and with his customary eloquence. As Colonel Knox stepped forward to deliver his speech of acceptance he was greeted by a roar of applause that continued for many minutes. His fellow citizens were glad to express their gratification for the honor done him, and the thousands from outside Chicago were no less warm in their appreciation of the candidate. In the streets surrounding the stadium was another vast throng of people who, unable to get into the building, listened to the proceedings as broadcast by a loud-speaker system.

Colonel Knox

Unlike Governor Landon, Colonel Knox devoted much of his address to the alleged failures of the Roosevelt administration which, he said, had the most glorious opportunity in the history of the nation but ignored its responsibility, failed in its job and defaulted in its obligations.

"From the day that it took office," he declared, "it embarked on a series of hysterical experiments on the economic life of a burdened people. At a time when universal co-operation was a necessity it initiated a campaign of abuse and vilification of business men. At a time when the credit of the country should have been strengthened it inaugurated a policy of credit adulteration and currency experiment that demoralized foreign trade and frightened domestic finance. It set up a system of regimentation of industry that reduced production and prevented re-employment. By coercion of congress it forced the passage of reform measures so recklessly drawn that they hamstrung the revival of enterprise and paralyzed the renewal of investment. It installed a regimentation of agriculture that destroyed food and reduced foreign markets and increased the cost of living and multiplied the expense of relief.

"At a time when private industry was struggling desperately for a new start it set up governmental enterprise to compete with private business. At a time when the burden of taxation was already hard to bear it embarked on a policy of squandering public funds and increasing the weight of taxes. At a time when united effort and mutual good-will would have completed recovery it promoted sectional hatred and class strife. At a time when returning business confidence was ending depression it began a campaign to terrorize business and subjugate the banks. At a time when confidence in the character of government was vital it established a spoils system.

"No one can define the New Deal or even describe it. But we know what it means. It means federal control over local business, over local bank credit, over local wages, over local conditions of work. It leads to federal regimentation of the labor, the business, and the home of every American citizen. It leads to price-fixing and production control by federal authority. It leads inevitably to the extinction of the small business man, to the end of free enterprise in America."

Government Crop Report Shows Drouth Damage

THE WEEKLY crop report and weather summary of the Department of Agriculture revealed that the drouth and high temperature were playing havoc with the corn crop in most of the leading producing states. In some sections there will not even be fodder and over a much larger area no grain will be obtained this year. There were good rains, however, in parts of the central and eastern areas and improvement was noted there in both corn and pasturage.

The present drouth in Iowa, the department said, has caused greater damage to corn than that of 1934. The summary reported almost complete destruction of the crop in two southern and two western tiers of counties.

Don't Watch the Thermometer

I am writing this on a hot day—a very hot day. The thermometer on my porch informs me that it is a hundred degrees Fahrenheit. I could believe that it is very much hotter than that.

The people that pass my door have taken off their coats—if they are men.

The women, who refuse to be beaten even if they can't really keep cool, are wearing filmy raiment, but they don't pant the way men do.

But while I admit that I am inconvenienced, and wish I could be in Alaska and lean against an ice floe like a polar bear, I know that if I stop thinking about the weather and go to work I will soon lose myself in my job.

* * *

A little way down the street is a fire-engine house. The firemen have rigged a pipe up in front of the building and from its mouth spouts a continuous man-made geyser. All the children in the neighborhood, and they make as much noise as all the children in town, are stripped to their little buffs and are shouting joyfully as they bend down their backs and let the spray from the pipe run over them.

* * *

But in the suburban town where I live, and in the great city which is not far away, men and women are doing their regular work.

If a fire should break out in another part of the town, the firemen who are now watching the children enjoy their shower baths would mount their ladder trucks and man their engines, and be off with a blare of sirens to do their appointed job.

If they decided they didn't want to get any hotter and stayed where they were perhaps the town might be consumed.

* * *

Men and women can do in a pinch what they have to do, whether the temperature is up or down.

When the need arises, especially the need to help others out of danger, their courage crops out and they all become heroes for the time being.

And I, who have nothing to do for the present but pound a typewriting machine would do well to forget the fact that it is uncomfortable, and stop breathing hard and making continuous trips to the refrigerator for ice cubes to fill my glass.

* * *

Rain or snow, cold or hot, one is easier in his mind if he forgets the discomforts that are bound to come, and to continue with his work.

And the more indispensable work he has to do, the more easily he will withstand the steaming streets and the torrid skies.

As long as it is not humanly possible to change the weather, the only intelligent thing to do is to forget about it.

CHAPTER X

"Not a word to anybody," Harwood had said. "Dig in 'til I phone you. One little leak, and we're finished."

Barry saw that. But why should Harwood fear the leak coming from him? Pat? Nonsense! Winslow, of course, who was Morano's lawyer. But Ernie had said, "Winslow isn't that kind of a lawyer." And he had said also, "If Winslow's shielding anyone, it's Judge Hambidge. Judge Hambidge, or someone else close to him." Except Winslow, who was close to Judge Hambidge, but Pat?

Into Barry's mind trickled slowly small, insistent recollections—one after another. Recollections that, in the beginning, seemed to have nothing to do with the case. Pat was in town the night of the murder. Naturally—with her father; what of it? "He wouldn't let me stay with him," she had said, at dinner the next evening in Southampton. What of it?

But the trickle was becoming a flood now. The afternoon Hambidge had confessed seeing Kelly, why did Pat keep checking the Judge? What did she fear his disclosing? And the confession itself; why did he make it?

"I'm off again," Barry raged at himself. "Just because Ernie said, 'Winslow may be shielding Hambidge, or someone close to him.' That might mean someone close to Winslow. But who's closer than the Hambidges?" And then he remembered declaring, the afternoon of the Judge's confession, "The man—or the woman—who killed Kelly knew what he—or she—was going to do."

Winslow had asserted, too; only a few hours ago: "that man." Curious.

And motive? Well, you couldn't deny that. If Kelly was threatening Judge Hambidge, and Pat knew it. There was no doubt that she did. "I've got something in my pocket," the Judge had quoted Kelly as shouting, and Pat had intervened promptly. All those weeks, before the decision was filed, she had writhed under the newspaper attacks on her father. Suppose she had known what was compelling that decision, and undertaken to remove the compulsion. "Silly!" Barry fumed at himself. "Fantastic!"

The house of cards was a wreck now, and Barry turned to other self questionings. "That paper in Kelly's pocket—the threat over Luis. But it seems to have been the threat over Hambidge, also. What's the connection?

"None," he finally decided, interring that idea, too, and turning in bed, determined that he must sleep. "Something between Morano and Kelly, yes, but between Morano and Judge Hambidge—well, that's just beet-tops!" With that he fell asleep.

The telephone wakened him.

"Mr. Gilbert? This is the hospital at Southampton. Miss Hambidge asked me to tell you that Jacky Rogers has been hurt. We don't know how badly yet. His horse threw him. She'd like to know if you can come at once."

"Certainly."

"Miss Hambidge says, if you'll go straight to her house, she'll be there."

Fortunately, he got Evans at once, and they were on the Merrick road less than an hour later. "Never mind the red lights," Barry ordered. "Keep going."

But Evans was wary, beating the lights when it seemed safe to do so; stopping when it didn't, and pushing the car to its limit on stretches of unpoliced highway. Before two o'clock, Evans drew up in front of the Hambidges'. Pat was waiting.

"I've just this minute got back from the hospital," she declared. "Peg's still there, of course. But Jacky's arm's broken."

"Nothing worse?"

"The whole thing's my fault," she said, tremulously. "Jacky's too young for a pony. Although I had one at his age."

She took him into the drawing-room, where they were joined by her father, who seemed terribly broken.

Between them, they told Barry what had happened. A bit of paper had blown across the pony's eyes, and he had bolted, with Pat after him. She got hold of the bridle, but the frantic little animal had dragged her out of her saddle. Still she had clung, until, maddened, the pony had bucked, and thrown his small rider. Pat had let go then; not without visible and invisible casualties to skin and clothes.

Pat's nerves were on edge, and Hambidge rambled on about the "poor kid," and this being "the last straw" for Peggy, and what were they going to do now, with the Ridders coming to Southampton.

And, suddenly, Pat said, "This is Wednesday."

Barry conceded the point.

"We agreed to tell the truth if Jack wasn't free Wednesday."

The Judge's muscles stiffened.

"That you saw Kelly after Jack left him."

For answer, Hambidge turned squarely to Barry.

"You're pretty shrewd, Mr. Gilbert," he said, for the second time. "If you were the District Attorney, and heard what I told you here a few weeks ago, what would you ask?"

Barry replied, "I'd ask what was that paper in Kelly's pocket? What was in it to compel an honest man to write a crooked decision? I'd ask who else might have wanted that paper—and what became of it?"

Both Pat and her father were staring at Barry now, with wide, startled eyes in which lay something like terror.

The Judge cried, "We can't face that."

"We've got to face it," Pat said. "We've got to. There's a woman with a sick boy—"

"There's another woman, too," the Judge interrupted. "A woman closer and dearer to me—" He checked himself, remembering suddenly that he and his daughter were not alone. Remembering, he turned back to Barry. "You know how I feel about all this," he pleaded. "I've said repeatedly that we must clear Ridder at any cost. But now you've put my fear into words. They can't convict this boy. What's the difference whether he's free tomorrow or two weeks from tomorrow? If there were any possibility of convicting an innocent man—any innocent man—I'd have no choice. But now—"

The telephone rang in the hall.

"Mr. Winslow on the wire," a servant announced. "Very important, sir."

The Judge went out, closing the door after him.

Pat excused herself. "I think I'd better go to my father."

Barry waited, alone, but his anxiety was great, too, and, at last, he parted the double doors and went into the drawing room.

As he did so, he heard the Judge's voice.

"They've arrested Morano," he said. "For murdering Kelly. What are we going to do now?"

But the girl had seen Barry. Her hand closed over the back of a chair, and she swayed dizzily.

Barry caught her up in his arms.

"It's no use. We've got to have the truth. Who murdered Mike Kelly?"

His grip tightened on her shoulders.

"For God's sake—Pat—darling—was it you?"

"Who murdered Mike Kelly?"

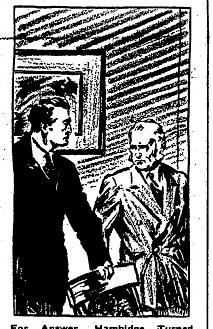
Beneath it, in huge headlines, the Globe answered, and accused. In journalistic circles, that story is still referred to as "the big beat": "Who murdered Mike Kelly?" "Do the police know?" "Have they always known?" "And has this knowledge been pigeonholed, while an innocent man was held for the crime, because the real murderer knew too much about Tammany Hall?"



For Answer, Hambidge Turned Squarely to Barry.

The Globe replied to these queries in a series of denunciatory statements, libel-proofed by a discreet sprinkling of the usual "it is alleged" and "who is said to be."

"Luis Morano owned the house at 24 Jefferson street. He bought it in 1929, and lived there alone, with two colored servants, until 1931, when he purchased a stock farm near Morristown, N. J. The house remained vacant, and, last January, Morano sold it to the Progressive Realty company for $12,000.

"In March, when the Progressive company transferred most of Jefferson street to the city for a so-called boulevard, the value of the Morano property was set at $55,000.

"The Civic association alleged that the Progressive company was merely a stalking horse for Boss Kelly, and condemnation proceedings were instituted before Judge Curtis Hambidge, whose decision was filed only an hour after Kelly was found dead, his skull fractured by a blow from a heavy cut-glass decanter.

"On the day of the murder, a man, believed to be Morano, telephoned the Globe that he could and would establish Kelly's connection with the Progressive company. An appointment was made for 10:30 that night. The man did not appear.

"But at eight o'clock—two hours and a half earlier—Kelly went to the Cocoanut Bar. He is said to have had with him two henchmen, and a paper of some sort, with which he threatened Morano. Kelly alleged that an effort was made to pick his pocket of this document, but it was still in his possession when he left the Cocoanut Bar.

"When Kelly's body was found, the paper had vanished. All this is, and always has been known to the police. Kelly was killed between one and two o'clock in the morning.

"At one o'clock, Morano telephoned his attorney that he was hopping into his car to drive to Morristown. But the police know, and have always known that Morano's car was still in front of the Cocoanut Bar three hours later. They know, and have always known that a new traffic cop gave the chauffeur a summons at that time, and that the two men went into the Bar together to find Morano. He was not there, and the doorman said he had not been there since shortly after one o'clock.

"Where was Morano? The police know, or should know that he was the occupant of a taxicab that dashed out of Sixteenth street—where Kelly lived and was then lying dead—at two o'clock the morning of the murder. Half a block from Kelly's house, the taxi struck and killed a woman, Mrs. Theodore Jaxon, of 53 Washington square. The number of that taxi is, or should be known to the police. Its driver is, or should be known to the police. He is George Mundelein of 861 Cass street, the Bronx.

"Morano hired the cab at Sixteenth street and Sixth avenue, and told Mundelein to take him to the Cocoanut Bar. When the accident threatened to identify him, he changed his mind, and ordered the driver to 'keep on going.' He said then that he had to catch a 2:12 train at the Pennsylvania station.

"Whether or not Morano caught that train, he was not seen again until late the next evening, when he reappeared at the Cocoanut Bar with his right wrist heavily bandaged. Morano told the doorman he had sprained the wrist playing with one of the horses on his stock farm. But Morano was not anywhere near that farm the night of the Kelly murder, or the day following.

"Most of these facts are, or should be known to the police. Morano is still at liberty. No effort has been made to detain him as a material witness. For more than two months, another man has been locked in the Tombs, under indictment for this murder. If the police haven't known of Morano's connection with the case, they have been grossly and criminally negligent. If they have known, they have been grossly and criminally corrupt.

And, at seven o'clock that night, Morano was "still at liberty." The police hadn't arrested him—in spite of the Globe, and Winslow's message to Hambidge—nor manifested the least interest in his whereabouts. The first show at the Bar was beginning when Tim Laugherty arrived with "Big Bill" Devine.

He was.

Whether Morano counted too much on his pull, or whether he realized the impossibility of escape, no one ever knew. The platinum blonde had urged him to clear out. "What for?" he asked.

"Then he said, 'Even in America, you can't get away with murder forever—not forever, you can't,'" she testified later.

"'I'm tired of the whole business,' he said. 'We might as well have it over.'"

What Morano meant by that was soon evident.

It was buyers' night at the Cocoanut Bar. The street-floor was so crowded that the detectives had trouble reaching the stairs.

Tim walked into Morano's little dining room.

"Hello, Luis! They want to talk to you at headquarters," Tim said.

Luis refilled his glass.

Directly beneath him, 20 brazen voices were bawling a chorus:

"Let me be—
That's all I'm askin' you.
Can't you see?
That's all I'm askin' you.
Take your hand from off'n my hips.
Take your mouth away from my lips
Let me be,
That's what I'm tellin' you—"

"I guess you better come along, Luis."

Morano rose.

"I'm not going," he said.

"No?"

"No."

"Because why?"

"Because I don't like your boarding house. I don't like that easy chair you got waiting for me. If you're gonna croak me, you might as well do it right here."

"Nobody don't want to croak you," Tim argued. "What's the use making trouble, Luis?"

For answer, Morano gave him the contents of the glass of champagne in the eyes.

Only for an instant, however. As Luis came forward, "Big Bill" caught him straight on the chin. It was a terrific blow. It sent Morano spinning against his own chair, and then, over that, through the flimsy railing, and down among the dancers, 15 feet below.

"Let me be—that's all I'm askin' you," came voices, bawling the chorus.

And then a babel of voices.

Screams, cries, shouts for help.

The band was still playing when a "bouncer" lifted the boss's shoulders. He was bleeding at the mouth, and stone dead.

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

The People Must Pay

Washington.—The United States is being given an object lesson in what happens when government attempts to interfere with nature.

American farmers these days are threshing their wheat crop. The production is that of a reduced acreage, an acreage that was planned on theory by the Department of Agriculture. The result is that this year's American wheat crop will approximate 640,000,000 bushels. That is about 145,000,000 bushels less than the average crop during the five years from 1929 to 1933. The result is a shortage.

Department of Agriculture figures indicate that the total wheat crop in the world this year will be something like 650,000,000 bushels below the annual production. In other words, the wheat crop is short everywhere on earth and the result is obvious.

In our own case, there is normally a carry-over each year of about 125,000,000 bushels but due to the shortage of the crop this year that carry-over is insufficient to make up the needs of domestic consumption.

Consequently, we soon will see heavy importations of Canadian wheat, a wheat that can be blended in milling with our own production and a very satisfactory flour results. Yet, it must be remembered that on all importations of wheat from Canada or anywhere else, a tariff of 42 cents a bushel must be paid. It is clear, therefore, that consumers of bread must pay that tariff because the importers are going to pass that item of expense along as part of the cost of the flour. In addition to the shortage in the United States, Canadian wheat production is reported to be something like 100,000,000 bushels under normal. There is sufficient production in Canada to permit of export, of course, but the shortage is bound to be reflected in the prices.

And mention of the price brings us back to the individual effect of the combination of acreage, reduced by government edict, plus the act of nature in visiting a drouth upon us. Scarcity always results in higher prices. It is the operation of the law of supply and demand. The Roosevelt farm policy has been predicated on the theory that scarcity would produce higher prices and thereby add to the farm income. But drouth and other production hazards cannot be predicted and, therefore, the American people find themselves in a position where the unpredictable has happened and the farmers are not getting the benefit of higher prices on a natural and normal production.

Industry Opens Up

There seems to be a stronger demand for wheat now than at any time during the last five or six years. It indicates a restoration of buying power on the part of the masses. In other words, industry again is opening up to some extent and employing workers although the increase in employment has been small thus far.

In consequence of this combination of circumstances, there is now a seller's market in wheat instead of a buyer's market in wheat. To say it another way, there are more people seeking to buy wheat than there are seeking to sell it and the consumers of flour will pay the bill. By way of contrast with present conditions, it may be pointed out that world wheat consumption has exceeded world wheat production in every year except one since 1929. In the 1932 crop year there was slightly more wheat produced in the world than was consumed. The result of the steady growth in consumption over production in the last few years has been to wipe out all of the carry-over—wheat stored in bins and elevators throughout the world—and in every country users of wheat are scraping the bottoms of their bins. The tragedy of it all is that, because of the reduced acreage and the drouth in the United States, American farmers are not in a position to take advantage of the higher prices thus established by the sale of surplus wheat which may have been accumulated if the acreage had been normal.

Instead of the United States really controlling the market for wheat, we are in a position where a good many other countries may be encouraged to grow more wheat. The natural and obvious results of this will be to further curtail the outlet for American wheat which so long has been relied on by many foreign nations that are non-producers of wheat.

I do not know how far the New Deal intends to go in revising its basic economic policy regarding crop controlling. I can be sure of only one thing in regard to the New Deal plans: The visitation of the drouth in two years in which the political planners of the New Deal attempted to upset natural laws has proved the inability of man to alter the course of nature and by the same token these conditions have proved the inability of government to change human nature. I do not know whether others will agree with my conclusion or not but I am of the opinion that the American farmers are paying dearly for the crop control checks they received in the past two years. Even with a crop shortened by drouth, if there had been the normal acreage of wheat, American farmers would have reaped the reward to which they are so justly entitled.

Bar Offers New Plan

A year or two ago, a committee of the American Bar association made a report definitely critical of the New Deal administration for having created so many agencies to which had been given functions almost like the courts. That report pointed out how such units as the now dead NRA and the equally dead AAA could issue rules and regulations that were enforceable as law. They called attention to the further fact that countless of these rules and regulations carried strict and severe penalties, even to the extent of a jail term for an individual violator.

Lately, another committee of the American Bar association has published another report, again calling attention to the un-American principles established in such bureaucratic control. It offers a constructive proposal for the elimination of bureaucratic management of individual affairs from Washington. It proposes the establishment of an administration court which would have power to enforce these rules and regulations but would be equipped with the judicial right of determination so that the thousands upon thousands of regulations with their various penalties would not be enforced upon an individual accused of their violation without giving that alleged violator the right of a hearing. The committee proposal, in other words, would put an end to determination of violations by one bureaucrat.

Ultimately, the proposed court would take over the judicial work of all of the administrative agencies in Washington now numbering something like 75. The initial operation of the court would be limited until it could bring something like uniformity out of the chaos now existing for it is well known that in many cases two governmental agencies will have rules on the same point and those rules will not be the same. In some aggravated situations, it has been found that one agency will prescribe a penalty against an individual business for doing one thing while another agency will have no penalty for the same act. Another instance is known where two agencies have virtually the same regulations but the penalties in the two rules are different.

Too Many Bureaus

I suppose the condition can be explained by the fact that dozens of new bureaus have been set up under the scores of New Deal laws and that in the haste to get them into operation, no co-ordination was had between the various groups, but it is my belief that private citizens cannot be blamed for this condition. Since they cannot be blamed for failure of government to function properly, they ought not be compelled to answer for the silly differences in law which bureaucrats have written under authority of congress to draft necessary regulations.

After all, congress is really to blame for this condition. It rushed through laws which President Roosevelt demanded and it did not take time to debate the provisions nor did it examine the sections to know fully what results would flow from them. In many cases, too many, statements of general legislative policy were not clear and congress abdicated its duties to the extent that it wrote into those laws provisions saying that the agency which was to enforce the particular law was given authority to write whatever rules and regulations were found to be necessary. Some authority of this kind always has been given in order to make the national laws flexible but they never have been given to such an extent as they have in the last three years.

Insufficient time has elapsed since the American Bar association committee came forth with its administrative court proposal for an analysis to be made of its potentialities. It may, and probably does, have weaknesses. It does, however, have a strong point in the general idea that a judicial body should determine whether an individual citizen has violated a bureaucrat's law and what the penalty should be rather than have that bureaucrat sit as prosecutor, judge and jury in telling the individual citizen what his crime has been.

One Locality Where the Wheat Crop Is Good

IN CONTRAST to the drouth devastated regions in other parts of the state and country is this scene of plenty on the farm of Allen Engler in Shawnee county, near Topeka, Kan., showing wheat being threshed. The locality is enjoying a banner wheat crop with an average yield of 25 bushels an acre, selling at one dollar a bushel.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

JERRY'S FEARS ARE ENDED

FOR a week Jerry Muskrat continued to find good things to eat at several of his favorite eating places, things of which he was very fond, and which had been put there by the stranger, who visited the Laughing Brook and the Smiling Pool every day. At first, as you know, Jerry had been very suspicious. He had feared a trap at each of those places where the good things were. But he had found no trace of a trap, and by the end of the week he had ceased to think of traps at all.

Had the Stranger Had a Gun Jerry Would Have Kept Out of Sight

The result was that now Jerry thought of nothing but the good things to eat and scrambled up on the bank and the old log which lay partly in the water, as carelessly as he had been in the habit of doing before the stranger appeared. His one thought was to get those good things the stranger so thoughtfully left there for him.

"I don't believe that this is the trapper of whom Billy Mink and Bobby Coon warned me," thought Jerry. "It must have been some one else who set those traps for Billy Mink. This is a friend. I don't know why he takes so much interest in me and brings me all these good things, and I don't care. I hope he'll keep right on bringing me apples, carrots, and such things. They certainly do taste good to me."

Sometimes the stranger came early in the morning and sometimes he came late in the afternoon. Always he left something for Jerry and Jerry was very grateful. Those feasts saved him a lot of time and trouble hunting for food. This gave him more time to work on his house and make it ready for winter. Jerry had a feeling that the winter was going to be a hard one, and he intended to be fully prepared for it. So he worked hard making the roof and walls of his house thicker than usual and making his tunnels in the banks of the Smiling Pool so that no matter how hard the winter might be, he would be quite comfortable.

Jerry so lost all fear of that stranger that sometimes he would work when he knew that the stranger was watching him. However, he always took care to see that the stranger had no gun with him. Had the stranger had a gun Jerry would at once have been suspicious and would have kept out of sight. As it was, he would keep right on working until the stranger left, and then hurry over to see what he had left for him. Jerry was very happy and quite without fear.

FIND THE COIN

This is one trick that becomes more and more bewildering if you repeat it. People will think that luck aided you the first time; but the longer you repeat the more bewildered they become.

Give a person a coin. Turn your back, tell him to hold the coin in one hand and raise the hand to his forehead. Then request him to place both fists on the table.

Turning about, you immediately point out the hand that holds the coin.

To accomplish this, merely look closely at both hands. The blood will have left the hand raised to the forehead, hence it will be lighter in color.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

THREE GOOD RECIPES

Sugar Cookies

Cream one cupful of butter, add two cupfuls of sugar, add two teaspoons of vanilla, one of lemon extract, two teaspoons of nutmeg, one-half teaspoon of salt, three eggs well beaten and four tablespoons of cream. Beat three minutes then add four and one-third cups of flour, one teaspoon of cream of tartar well blended. Shape into two rolls two inches in diameter and roll in waxed paper. Place in the ice chest 24 hours. Cut into thin slices and bake in a quick oven.

Caramel Jelly

Soak two tablespoons of gelatin in one-half cup of cold milk for five minutes. Pour one-half cup of sugar into a smooth iron frying pan. Heat slowly, stirring constantly until a light brown sirup is formed, add one cup of boiling water and cook five minutes, stirring frequently until well dissolved. Add the gelatin mixture and one cup of boiling milk. Cook slowly until the gelatin is dissolved. Add one-half cup of cream, pinch of salt, one and one-half teaspoons of vanilla and pour into molds to stiffen. Turn out and serve sprinkled with shredded almonds.

Orange Cream

Cook together the juice and rind of a lemon, one cupful of orange juice and four tablespoonfuls of flour mixed with one-half cupful of sugar. Add the beaten yolks of four eggs and cook until thick. Cream one-half cupful of butter and one cupful of powdered sugar and add to the cooled custard. Lastly fold in the stiffly-beaten whites of the eggs. Line the bottom of a pan with lady fingers and pour in the orange mixture. Set aside to cool and serve garnished with cream.

EVEN SUMMER

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WHO has not seen a summer rain
Sweep swiftly o'er a sunlit plain?
Bright was the morn
And soft the breeze,
Yet gales are born
Of even these,
And suddenly the sky is gray,
Yes, even on a summer day.

Who has not seen some summer hour
Grow darker with a sudden show'r?
Yet shall your own
Be always fair,
And loss unknown,
And hurt, and care?
Shall life be always joy to you,
The sky the same all summer through?

Who has not seen the rain appear?
Who ever lived a cloudless year?
The dripping leaf,
The fallen nest,
So comes some grief
To ev'ry breast—
And even so to you it may,
Yes, even on a summer day.

BRITAIN TO BUILD NEW, HUGE FLEET

Strong Enough to Go Anywhere, Says Navy Chief.

London.—Sir Samuel Hoare, first lord of the admiralty, declared that Britain, at the earliest moment, was to have virtually a new fleet "strong enough to go anywhere." Speaking at Southampton he warned that if Britain's sea communications should be cut the people would be dead of starvation within six weeks.

"This overwhelming reason," he said, "makes the reconstruction of our fleet so vitally important. We have delayed so long in its rebuilding that we now are faced with the problem of building what virtually amounts to a new fleet. That this new fleet should be built on the right lines is a matter of life and death to us.

"As our life depends upon our free passage through the seven seas, the world fleet must be strong enough to go anywhere and to carry out its duties in any conditions. It is our determination to have such a fleet and to build it with the least possible delay.

Air Power Threat

He also referred to the "new and formidable threat" of air power against Britain's national security.

"The air powers have made what was once the most secure island in the world the most vulnerable society in Europe," he declared. "For the first time in our history the heart of the empire has become vulnerable. Such a state of insecurity cannot be allowed to endure.

"I care not from what quarter our security is challenged, our reply to the challenge must always be the same. This is not a question of partisanship for or against this or that country in Europe.

"It is the established principle of British policy, it is indeed the basic condition of British life that wherever or whenever our security is endangered it is our bounden duty to make such preparations as will remove the danger.

"It is on this account that we are proceeding with our great program of air reinforcement. It is with the determination to reach at the earliest possible date air parity with the strongest power within the range of these shores that we are creating our new squadrons, producing our new machine."

Help Distressed

He pointed out that the rebuilding of the navy would greatly benefit the "distressed areas," where unemployment has been greatly troubling the nation.

"A rough calculation of the new construction program on which we are embarked," he explained, "goes to show up that to date, out of an expenditure of about 23,000,000 pounds no less than 21,000,000 pounds has gone in orders to the depressed and specially hit areas."

He concluded with the warmest defense of Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, replying to the latter's critics, particularly the Socialists.

"Far better than the pacifists," he said, "Mr. Baldwin represents, as no other man represents, the forces of peace in the country. Through all these difficult months he has been determined to prevent the conflagration of a European war. There have been many moments when a less steady determination to pursue the path of peace might have plunged Europe into one of the greatest catastrophes in the world's history."

French Town Boasts of a "Monument" to Gossip

Mulhouse, France.—At Mulhouse is a "monument" which, instead of glorifying the virtues of some historic character or event, symbolizes an ancient and modern vice, scandal-mongering.

It is known as the anti-gossip stone, and hangs outside the city hall, which is a magnificent example of Sixteenth century art. In days gone by this stone was placed about the necks of tattle-tales as a punishment for gossip and a warning. Carved in the stone is a woman sticking out her tongue, and an old ditty which, roughly translated, says:

I am the tattle-tale stone,
To each poisoned tongue well known,
Those who are chatty,
Quarrelsome, catty,
Must carry me all day long.

Doubtless the stone served its purpose, for Mulhouse has developed a race of intelligent, industrious artisans.

She Was Taxpayer —Beyond a Doubt

Madison, Wis. — A woman marched into the governor's ornate reception chamber and dropped sighing into a huge leather cushioned chair. She took off her shoes, put her feet on the massive carved table, smiled a minute and stepped back into her shoes.

Then before shocked employes could even ask her name, she left, remarking: "There, I guess I've got something for my money now."

It was believed she was a taxpayer.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

Prowling around the Big Town—and wondering whether to take a vacation and where to go if he did take one—your correspondent happened to notice that the lobby of the Hotel Times Square contained what looked like antiques. So he sought out Sydney Claman, president of the company, and made inquiries. Sure enough, they are all genuine pieces. Mr. Claman's father, the late Henry Claman, was a noted collector, and the specimens in the hotel were his choicest. When he died, his heirs, not knowing anything about antiques, began selling them indiscriminately. Included in the sales were two Etruscan vases which brought $500 each. Later the heirs learned that the dealer had resold them for $5,000 each and that brought an immediate recount, so to speak, of their heritage.

* * *

The reason why the antiques are in the hotel now is that Mr. Claman, chief beneficiary under the will, placed them there intending to hold them until he learned more about them and then make a sale. However, he has become so attached to them over a period of three years that so far he has not sold a single piece. Thus, a young woman from Oshkosh, visiting the ladies lounge, sits down at a $3,000 writing desk, which experts hold is an outstanding example of parquetry art, and some salesman throws his hat and coat on a marble table worth more than his year's salary. One of Mr. Claman's favorites is a $50,000 Renaissance mantel, inconspicuously placed far back in the lobby. Another is a half-ton, 14-foot-high clock of indeterminable value. It is said to be the chief work of the Worshipful Company of Clockmakers of London.

* * *

Continuing his prowl, your correspondent went down to the waterfront and watched a little tug push a big liner out into the river. That is by no means an unusual sight because those small craft are mighty busy around New York, the leading port of the world. But what was in mind was what big work little boats really can do. For instance, to dock the Queen Mary, it takes a fleet of 12 tugs, pushing, pulling with all their might. That might seem like a large number of tugs—and it is. On the other hand, the Queen Mary represents 80,000 tons and the combined tonnage of the 12 tugs is only 9,000. But 9,000 can make 80,000 slide right into the designated place.

* * *

The ability of small boats to make big ones do tricks, even with adverse winds and tides, is due entirely of course to the skill of the men in command of the little fellows. They go about their business nonchalantly, often in their shirt sleeves, and more often smoking pipes or cigars. But they are just as expert in their line as the man on the liner's bridge is in his. As a matter of fact, they are represented on the liner's bridge by a sort of commander-in-chief. He gives his orders by whistle blasts and those orders are obeyed promptly and exactly as indicated. Tug captains don't wear gaudy uniforms but they know their business—and shipping couldn't get along without them.

* * *

Sidewalk games of New York youngsters always interest your correspondent. Many are peculiar to certain neighborhoods, environment possibly being the mother of invention. Balls, bricks, or even mere chalk marks on the pavement, are all the equipment necessary. Many of the games played by small girls are accompanied by songs and chants. Those played by the boys, however, have merely an accompaniment of shouts and sometimes shrill whistles. More and more playgrounds are being opened, especially in the congested districts, but the sidewalks are still the main recreation grounds for city juveniles.

* * *

In Central park the other afternoon, your correspondent got a taste of that which has brought destruction, loss and suffering to residents of various sections of the country. With so much construction work going on, Central park is bald in many sections. A windstorm came along, picked up the loose earth and distributed it in a heavy cloud, coating ball players, bench sitters and other park visitors so liberally they were forced to flee. It was only a miniature dust storm but highly uncomfortable just the same. And with that, this week's report must end.

REST HOUR

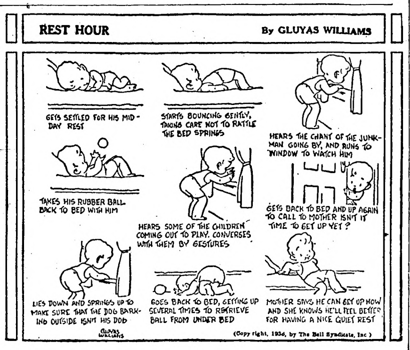
By GLUYAS WILLIAMS



GETS SETTLED FOR HIS MID-DAY REST
STARTS BOUNCING GENTLY, TAKING CARE NOT TO RATTLE THE BED SPRINGS
HEARS THE CHANT OF THE JUNK-MAN GOING BY, AND RUNS TO WINDOW TO WATCH HIM
TAKES HIS RUBBER BALL BACK TO BED WITH HIM
HEARS SOME OF THE CHILDREN COMING OUT TO PLAY, CONVERSES WITH THEM BY GESTURES GETS BACK TO BED AND UP AGAIN TO CALL TO MOTHER ISN'T IT TIME TO GET UP YET?
LIES DOWN AND SPRINGS UP TO MAKE SURE THAT THE DOG BARKING OUTSIDE ISN'T HIS DOG
GOES BACK TO BED, GETTING UP SEVERAL TIMES TO RETRIEVE BALL FROM UNDER BED
MOTHER SAYS HE CAN GET UP NOW AND SHE KNOWS HE'LL FEEL BETTER FOR HAVING A NICE QUIET REST

Marie of Guernsey

By ROBERT FOLWELL

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

SHE was just a little, clean-aproned girl of Guernsey (gem extraordinary of the Channel islands), and her grandmother had died. The grandmother who had led her through soft lanes with long lovely vistas after her hard-pushed mother had spanked her severely for some real or fanciful error. Both grandmother and mother had loved her dearly; but the mother's patience had been short, while the grandmother's was everlasting.

Her name was Marie, and after her grandmother died; after there was no one to walk and talk with, she went twice weekly to the bare little grave near St. Peter Port to render silent homage to the departed one.

Always the whispered plea as she knelt before the scant, unadorned headstone:

Which meant that her whole soul desired to place on this beloved grave one of those unique glass globes filled with artificial flowers, which mark the grave as one that is cared for and cherished. These globes were expensive. Only the well-to-do could afford them. Marie and her mother worked hard for their livlihood in the great glass houses that grow fruit for which the island is famous.

One evening, after her devout prayers for the soul of the departed one, as she was leaving the little cemetery, she came face to face with a stalwart and good looking young man.

"You, too, have come to mourn, Mademoiselle?" Guernsey, it should be known, is greatly of French origin, and nearly all its people speak French and English both.

"Ah, yes, Monsieur. And I am sorry that you also have lost a loved one."

"It was my father," the young man continued, leaning against the massive, moss-grown cemetery portals, "and it is a loss that leaves me very lonely for we always worked and laughed together."

"And with me," said Marie, "it was my grandmother. We, too, laughed together, and she taught me the little that I know of the world. Ah, Monsier," Marie spoke impulsively, "perhaps you would know what is the smallest cost for which one of the beautiful globes and its standard may be obtained in St. Peter Port. I want one for her grave—and the flowers themselves I am able to make . . . we are very poor, my mother and myself . . ."

The young man broke in upon her speech eagerly:

"It seems impossible, Mademoiselle, that we are both longing to place the same tribute on our graves. Miraculous that we meet! I work in the identical shop in St. Peter Port where the globes and their pedestals are produced. I help to manufacture them; but I am, Mademoiselle, unable to buy the artificial flowers which are most expensive. I could procure for you the globe at a trifling cost. And I would be so happy to do this for Mademoiselle."

Marie's eyes were joyous stars as her answer followed close on his revelation:

"But, yes, Monsieur; and for you I will make the flowers which you cannot afford."

He straightened from his leaning posture on the portal and held out both his hands in a winning gesture.

"Mademoiselle, my name is Jacques Langlet. Please call me just Jacques, and please see into the depth of my heart and recognize the extent of my gratitude."

As Marie walked home that night she realized vaguely and with a mysterious glow of happiness that something new and beautiful had entered her life.

And this simple companionship ripened as the weeks passed during which Marie labored lovingly at two clusters of artificial flowers and Jacuqes worked late into the night at his shop in St. Peter Port on two shining glass globes and their pedestals. A man and a girl patiently toiling at a labor of love for each other and their departed ones.

Finally arrived the evening when Marie carefully carried to the cemetery her two lovely clusters of artificial flowers fashioned for the glass globes. Down the winding lane, as she entered the cemetery, appeared Jacques seated on a tiny cart drawn by an island donkey. In the cart were the two glass globes and their pedestals. Marie expertly installed the flowers in the globes, for both, and Jacques set up both monuments with the cement and proper tools he had fetched with him.

"I have saved a little money . . ." hesitantly, "perhaps we might continue being partners and make for others what we have made for ourselves in a little shop of our own . . . Marie!"

Tears of happiness came to Marie's eyes as she caught at the sleeve of his coat.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Lengby—Frank Pelzel, mayor of Fosston and a member of the county safety committee saved the life of Miss Nelson at Spring Lake. Fully clothed, he dived into the lake after the girl sank, and brought her to the shore.

Minneapolis—A total of 15,610 modernization credit loans totaling $6,435,259 have been reported in Minnesota by lending institutions under the FHA since the program started Aug. 1 1934, Fred Schilplin, state FHA director, reported.

Minneapolis—Net earnings of General Mills, Inc., for the year ending May 31, 1936, totaled $3,602,193, or $3.40 per share on the outstanding comomn stock, after provision for perferred stock dividends, the eighth annual report of the milling company disclosed.

Fairmont—Farmer Mark Peck, living six miles east of here, had read and heard a lot about the so-called great 1936 drouth. Until now he had taken some stock in the reports. But when he harvested and threshed his 22-acre oats field, he got a shock. Peck's oats yielded 72½ bushels to the acre, he reported.

Litchfield—Pheasants will be plentiful in central western counties of the state this fall Frank Blair, state superintendent of game propagation, reported. Increase in the number, now said to be the greatest in history, is due to improved winter feeding methods, Blair said. Hatching has been satisfactory, despite hot weather, he added.

Duluth—A back-to-nature short course in Itasca park will be held by the University of Minnesota, Aug. 3 to Sept. 5. Living specimens of fish and animals will be studied in their natural habitat. Courses, are offered in botany, entomology, economic zoology, forestry and plant pathology. Alexander A. Granovsky, associate professor, will be in charge.

St. Paul.—There is no doubt of the right of individuals to file by petition for the short term for the United States senate Attorney General Harry H. Peterson informed Secretary of State Mike Holm. Holm asked for a ruling to settle any doubt about it. The only candidate on the ballot is Guy V. Howard of Minneapolis, but others are expected. Time limit for filing is October 2.

Duluth—Julius Schmahl, state treasurer, is seriously ill, confined to a summer cottage near Lutson, Minn., on the north shore of Lake Superior. With Mrs. Schmahl, he has been vacationing at the Grand View resort since July 17, he was stricken ill and his condition is termed serious. He is suffering from a severe cold and there is danger of pneumonia setting in, it was reported.

Minneapolis—The campaign to place the seven eligible Gophers on the All-Star team which plays the Detroit Lions in Chicago Sept. 1, was a success with all seven nominated. Three members of the Gopher squad will be in the starting lineup. They are Dick Smith, Vern Oech and Sheldon Beise. Everyone should work twice as hard now to place Bernie Bierman as coach of the All-Stars.

Minneapolis—Two thousand Minnesota men will be thrown out of work soon, United States Senator Elmer A. Benson charged as protests came from all parts of the state following refusal of funds by Washington officials for WPA projects. All projects, numbering about a hundred, were refused federal funds when Secretary Ickes announced a shortage of skill labor in the state. State officials say it isn't so.

St. Paul—Renewal of the fight to prevent sales tax legislation in Minnesota was undertaken here by representatives of merchant associations of the state. Stressing that such a tax would work hardship on merchant and consumer alike, that its principle is false in that it taxes that least able to pay and that it has been found faulty of operation elsewhere, the representatives formed the Consumers and Merchants Anti-Sales Tax league.

Minneapolis—Season tickets for the football games at the University will be raised from $9.90 to $11.50 this year on account of federal taxes. Single tickets will also be higher. Michigan, Purdue and Iowa tickets will jump from $2.20 to $2.50 and Nebraska and Texas tickets from $2.20 to $2.25. There will be $1.10 seats at the later two games. Minnesota still charges less for tickets than other conference schools.

St. Paul—As scattered showers brought slight relief to some sections of western South Dakota, the federal government designated 16 additional Minnesota counties as in need of drouth relief. Counties named, bringing to 25 the total number adjudged by Washington officials as facing an emergency are: Anoka, Becker, Clay, Isanti, Kanabec, Kittson, Lyon, Marshall, Mille Lacs, Morrison, Norman, Otter Tail, Sherburne, Stearns, Todd and Wadena.

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

THE weaker clubs will make a determined fight for a share the wealth plan when the major leagues meet next winter. They claim that they provide half the show even when they visit Yankee stadium. So, they argue, visiting clubs should get a better break than the 20 cents on each paid admission arrangement which has been in effect since the 1890's . . . Sam McQuade, who now makes matches at the Garden, once was an altar boy . . . Uncle Sam's roving poloists have definitely decided not to enter a team in the Olympics, but the British, seeking consolation for their Westchester Cup defeat, will send the same 32-goal side to Berlin . . . Pete Gilhooly, Scotland's celebrated all around athlete, now trains the Flushing Juniors, runners-up in the Empire State Junior (soccer) league.

• • •

Don Petrin, the light-heavyweight, wants the world to know that he now is the daddy of a nine-pound boy. Also that, because he needs more dough than can be had in his father-in-law's bakery, he would like to receive some fight offers . . . It costs $3,000 a night to stage those midget auto races in the Garden bowl . . . International league writers and managers put on even better scraps than the ball clubs. Right now Pilot Vitt of Newark is being panned because he is too hard boiled, while Guy Sturdy of the Orioles gets a blast for being too easy going . . . Al Lane, star Hill school fullback and brother of the former Princeton football captain, has just failed to receive the proper nod from the entrance committee at Old Nassau. He still has a chance to make the grade in the fall.

• • •

Dr. Bier, the Pompton Lakes health farmer, claims a record at which all other fight camp proprietors can aim. During the sixteen years he has been conducting the place, no referee ever has counted ten over a main bout performer who trained there . . . One of the more vigorous fight suqabbles now concerns the Braddock-Schmeling picture rights . . . If the Garden gets the show Harry Voller probably will get the call. If it is under Hearst A. C. auspices the break will go to the justly celebrated Bill Duffy . . . Possible successors to the late Charley Knapp as president of the International league are either Secretary Willie Manley or Umpire in Chief Bill Carpenter.

Ruppert Has Heaviest Insurance on Stadium

Colonel Ruppert

Colonel Ruppert carries more insurance (a bigger sum and more different varieties) on Yankee stadium than does any other big-time club owner . . . When Charlotte Epstein skipped the Olympic trials she set some kind of a record. It was the first major swimming meet in these parts that the very capable coach has missed in years . . . In Detroit they whisper that Mickey Cochrane and Schoolboy Rowe are so far apart temperamentally, that, for the good of all concerned, the potentially great pitcher will be traded this winter . . . Jimmy Calleran of the Bushwicks soon will dangle a little second-sacker on his knee. . . . Although he is not quite so brash when speaking for publication, Coach Al Ulbrickson confides to friends that Washington's Olympic crew will crack the record set by the 1928 California boat.

• • •

The biggest bettor at metropolitan tracks is a young man who once seemed to be headed toward golfing stardom. He plops down as much as 50 C's on a race . . . Aside from the fact that the best Cards' farm outfielder is a Joe Medwick type of kid named Lou Scoffic, the Dodgers gave away a lot of weight when they traded the giant Earnshaw. Eddie Morgan, who eventually will arrive at Brooklyn as part of that deal, is 5 feet 9 inches tall and weighs 160 pounds. It is because they are overstocked with one-base-hitting guys of that size that the Dodgers are in the cellar now . . . In addition to being a distinguished surgeon, Dr. G. Randolph Manning is one of the grand old men of soccer. He was the first president of the U. S. F. A.

• • •

At dinner recently when a group of very well-informed baseball men were discussing the merits of the two major leagues this proposition was set forth: "The Cubs won the pennant last year while the Yankees finished second in their own loop. Suppose you owned the Yankees and, during the winter, you were told that you could have the pick of the Cubs to strengthen your club. Leave pitchers and Di Maggio out of it. This is a deal where you would have to swap a regular for a regular." The unanimous answer to that was that the difference between their ages might make a Billy Herman-Tony Lazzeri deal verry attractive. Otherwise the American leaguers could not improve themselves

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Presidential Straw Votes.

BOHEMIAN GROVE, CALIF. —Every baby, as I've always heard, is born with a soft spot in its head, and once in a while there's one who never gets over it, but grows up and, in presidential years, goes around taking straw votes on railroad trains in order definitely to find out which ticket will be elected.

Irvin S. Cobb

He is a kindred spirit to the other fellow, who, to settle the whole issue right now and avoid crowding at the polls in November, offers to bet you a cool thousand that his man beats your man, and then, before leaving, tries to borrow five dollars from somebody so he can get his laundry out of hock.

Having met both types within the ten days before coming here and being fearful that both species is going to multiply rapidly during the ensuing three months, I'm thinking seriously of taking the veil until after the campaign ends. Politics certainly does breed its ticks.

• • •

The Little Red School House.

YES, in my early days we also had the little red schoolhouse. Maybe the reason we liked it then was that it got its red tone from the paint on the outside and not from the teaching staff on the inside.

Likewise, in those unprogressive times, we thought the youth of the land should be taught to cherish the American flag for something besides private hissing purposes. Hopelessly old fashioned, eh, what?

• • •

The Dictator Business.

IT LOOKS as though, when the battle dust lifts from that distracted country, Spain will have a dictator, dictators being fashionable.

It seems to be comparatively easy to make a success of it, too. Just follow a formula:

Be sure all sentences personally uttered begin with the capital letter "I" and end with the pronoun "me."

Convince yourself that, in order ever to behold any human being who is your equal in moral and mental stature, you must carry about with you a full-length mirror.

Never permit yourself to be photographed in your nightshirt, but always in full uniform.

On arising, lock the jaws and clench the fists and leave 'em that way all day.

And—this is very important—have a dependable police force and somebody to pick on, preferably somebody without any friends.

• • •

Political Claim-Alls.

SHRINKING JEEMS FARLEY announces the Democrats will carry every division of the Union, although privately he is said to be a little bit doubtful of two very backward counties in Vermont. While generously conceding the central part of Mississippi and the western end of Kentucky to the enemy, diffident John Hamilton is sure the Republicans will sweep everything else.

Congressman Lemke, most modest of the claimers, is certain he'll win in 40 states. Really, he doesn't need that many, but 40's a nice even number. If the shy Dr. Townsend also should run, he counts on 20,000,000 votes in this country, besides clean-cut majorities in Sweden, New South Wales and the Island of Yap.

• • •

Oxen Versus Onions.

WITH no aim to set up as a specialist in human behavior, I think I've stumbled on a significant, timely discovery. I found in a scientific work this statement:

"Each living growth has to begin in a single microscopic cell. Moreover, every future thing of either animal or vegetable kingdom contains in that first cell a fixed number of even more infinitesimal bodies called chromosomes. In the ox, the guinea pig, the man and the onion, the number is the same invariably."

I contend this natural kinship in classification may explain why, in campaign years, some of us are bellowing oxen, some are docile guinea pigs and most of the rest of us are just plain onions.

Mormons Made Own Sugar

Cut off from the states and harassed by Indians, the Mormons undertook the production of their own sugar. Beet sugar machinery was purchased in Liverpool, shipped to New Orleans, then up the river. Fifty-two ox teams in 1852 finally tugged the equipment from Leavenworth to Utah and 500 bushels of beet seed arrived. This was the inception of the beet sugar industry of Utah.

Chic Frock Slenderizes

Pattern 1889-B

There is nothing smarter for cool summer wear than silk linen, novelty crepe, dotted swiss, or printed silks, especially when fashioned into a slim and trim model like this stunning design. Who isn't excited about the new wider shoulder width that tends to slenderize the waistline and a pattern that goes together as quickly as a slide fastener. Note the unusual bodice lines, the panel extending to the hem, and the kick pleats that contribute dash and ease. The natty turn-down collar affords versatility and this is where your discriminating taste becomes apparent. Cost is small, yardage scant, the effect superb, and sewing simple. Send for this gorgeous frock now.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1889-B is available for sizes: 14, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 4 1-8 yards of 39-inch material. Send 15 cents in coins.

Send for the Summer Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

Household Questions

Add a tablespoon of cream to roast beef or lamb gravy. It makes it a delicious brown.

• • •

• • •

Place a glass pie plate over the top of the kettle when making a stew. The stew may then be watched while cooking without lifting the cover or allowing steam to escape.

• • •

Drain all juices from fruits or vegetables used for salads before arranging them on the plates. Placing the food in a colander for five minutes is a good idea as then all juices will drain out quickly.

• • •

To wash feather pillows soak in soapsuds for several hours, changing the water as it becomes soiled. Then put them through a washing machine or wash them by hand. Rinse them well in clear water and hang them in a sunny place to dry. Turn frequently to change the position of the feathers in the tick.

Frozen in Congress

The $10,000,000,000 in gold in the U. S. Treasury is owned by the United States and is at the disposal of congress. Congress can devote to any use it sees fit any money, in any form, "not otherwise appropriated." The gold is frozen, but it is frozen in the hands of congress and the President. Congress can repeal the legislation which produced the present situation or turn the legislation in a different direction. It can repeal the delegation of powers to the President.

WHERE LANDON WAS BORN

The house at 410 Main street, West Middlesex, Pa., where Governor Alf Landon, Republican nominee for President, was born in 1887, has become a point of national interest. Today it is occupied by the Rev. Henry Schilling, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church. In 1887 it was occupied by the Rev. Herman Mossman, pastor of the same church, when his daughter, Anne Landon, bore a boy baby named Alfred.

Landon Opens His Eastern Tour Amid Scenes of His Birthplace

Republican Nominee Will Make Many Platform Appearances to Meet People.

West Middlesex, Pa.—In this village, where he was born 49 years ago, Governor Alf Landon will start his eastern campaign for the Presidency of the United States, August 22. Governor Landon's tribute to the scene of his birth is bringing forth a response which indicates the largest turnout in the history of this quaint Pennsylvania village.

Governor Landon will deliver here the first of three major addresses scheduled for his eastern tour. The second will be at Chautauqua, N. Y., the night of August 24. The Landon family, when they visited West Middlesex during the summer holidays, spent much of the time at Chautauqua, which has been a powerful agency in moulding educational and public opinion. The third address will be given the night of August 26 at Buffalo, where Woodrow Wilson opened his successful campaign in 1912. Governor Landon will make platform appearances on the way to and from the eastern center.

The rally here will be the first important occasion in which thousands of Governor Landon's eastern friends and supporters will be able to participate. Governor Landon's birthplace is in the center of a vast industrial area—6,000,000 persons live within a radius of 100 miles, and many thousands are expected to hear the Republican nominee.

West Middlesex recalls that John M. Landon, father of Governor Landon, came to this section of Pennsylvania to enter the oil fields. The Landon family moved to Elba, O., before Alf Landon was born, but at the time of his birth in 1887, his mother was visiting in West Middlesex at the home of her father, a Methodist Episcopal minister.

Governor Landon's saying that "you can't spend what you haven't got" was taught him at parental knees in a family that knew hard times along with the good. Young Landon was taught the principles of thrift from his earliest childhood. Applying those principles as governor of Kansas, where he cut taxes and balanced the state budget during the depression, has brought national attention to the man and to his methods of government, which he proposes to install in Washington.

Crisis U. S. Faces Stressed by Knox

Vice Presidential Nominee Heartens Throng at Connersville, Ind.

Connersville, Ind.—The gravity of the present situation confronting the American people was pointed out here by Colonel Frank Knox, Republican nominee for Vice-President, in the first major speech of the campaign following his acceptance address in Chicago.

"The issues we discuss are grave," Colonel Knox said. "The American people have not faced since the Civil War an election with more at stake. We are confronted with problems that go to the very roots of the American economic system."

In continuing to stress the "crusade," Colonel Knox attacked the New Deal party with the assertion: "Whatever the government has been doing about recovery has been wrong. It has not helped recovery. It has blocked recovery. The Administration has proceeded on the theory that the business man and the farmer must be told how to run their businesses by some planner in Washington."

Vandenberg Urges Fight for Liberty

Chicago. — Declaring that the American flag "is not yet red nor even pink," Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan told the Union League Club in an address here that "it still is the personification of the Constitution; it still is the banner of a free people who propose to vote themselves a new emancipation" in November.

Asserting that the American people must "fight for their liberty," Senator Vandenberg charged that the New Deal administration is sponsoring, through Secretary Henry Wallace, an 'unwritten constitution.' "If you do not want this 'unwritten constitution' this may be your last opportunity to say so," warned Senator Vandenberg.

Wm. Paskewitz and son Bill made a business trip to Warren Tuesday.

Several farmers from here attended the horse sale at Newfolden on Saturday afternoon. Ole Tveit bought five head of horses and colts and Kenneth Swan bought one horse.

It would not hurt a bit to see somo of the people of this village go out with a scythe and cut some of the weeds that are growing up around their property. If they do not do so soon some one will have to chop them down in order to find the places.

We all want rain. Oh, why, oh why don't she rain?

Upland game bird seasons for 1936 will be under discussion this week at the regular meeting of the Conservation Commission. A. C. Hanson, director of the division of game and fish, has made a survey of sportsmen's opinions on the game bird seasons, which the Commission will consider. A Committee of Twin City sportsmen has asked to be heard in regard to the open seasons.

According to reports no one was badly hurt at the short lived free-for-all that took place here after the dance Saturday evening Boys, you must have read some of the cartoons in the papers which have the heading - "It's All In Fun."

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

Pay attention to your driving. There are certain rules and regulations that apply to all drivers. If you are not paying attention to the rules of the road and to the traffic around you, you are going to get into trouble. Window shopping while driving an automobile is an unsafe pratice. Calling to someone walking while you are driving an automobile is diverting your attention and sooner or later you are going to come to grief.

Remember that an automobile has power. It has speed. It is made of steel and can drive unmercifully into an object or a human being and not feel it. The object hit is going to be destroyed - - also the automobile and possibly the driver.

An automobile does not leave the road of its own accord. It must be directed by a human being.

That human being should be sane, senisble, and safe.

Highway Patrol Aids Thousands

Officers Serve Many Drivers In Trouble, Besides Enforcing Laws

Members of the Minnesota highway patrol traveled 1,416,714 miles during the first four months of this year, giving aid to 20,019 motorists, warning 30,785 traffic law violators, handing out 10,858 tags for illegal equipment, arresting 1,304 persons for violations of the traffic code, and attending 234 accidents.

These are only a few of the 95 items of public service included in a report to Highway Commissioner N. W. Elsberg by John P. Arnoldy, chief of the Patrol.

In aiding motorists, the patrolmen administered first aid in 118 injury cases, gave road information 7,883 times, helped children across the road on 677 occasions, made 5,759 minor adjustments and repairs, pulled 1,472 cars out of ditches, delivered gasoline 477 times to cars out of fuel, called garages 1,015 times for stalled motorists and removed 2,618 traffic obstacles of various kinds from state highways.

Violators were warned for a score of different infractions, from passing through stop signs by jay walking. There were nearly as many items for which tags were given for illegal equipment, such as improper lights, bad brakes and other faulty equipment.

Estimated receipts resulting from license corrections totaled $91,623, occasioned by motorists having one plate only, no plates at all, wrong classes of plates and lack of Minnesota plates.

The patrol anticipates a much heavier record of activities for the second four month period, as this is the heavy traffic season.

DROPS GUN TO GROUND, IS SHOT IN SHOULDER

Elmore—Shot in the shoulder when a 22-rifle he was carrying dropped to the ground and went off, Kenneth Ristau, 16 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Ristau, north of Elmore, was fortunate to escape with his life. Ristau had been out hunting rabbits and was returning to the barn on horseback. He was setting the gun down while still on the horse, and in doing so it accidentally slipped from his hand, the butt of the gun striking the frozen ground and discharging it. The bullet entered his left breast near the heart and went upward, the bullet lodging in the shoulder. Had the bullet gone straight instead of upward it is thought the boy would have been killed instantly. He rushed to a hospital, and while weak from loss of blood, is recovering.

RAILROAD PENSIONERS PAID

Washington, D. C.—Initial checks sent out by the Railroad Retirement Board ranged from $13.55 to $91.04, representing the first payment ever made to other than government employes under Federal-regulated pensions. Four thousand retired railroad workers are eligible at once for monthly payments for life, and 20,000 more have filed applications for same.

OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNTY BOARD OF EQUALIZATION OF MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA

The Board of Equalization of Marshall County, Minnesota, met as provided by law at the office of the County Auditor in the City of Warren, Marshall County, Minnesota, on July 20th, 21st, and 22nd, 1936.

Improvement Program Under Way For State Fair

The largest physical improvement program in years in under way at the Minnesota State Fair in preparation for the opening of the 1936 Exposition, to be held from September 5 to 12.

New buildings are under construction, auto parking facilities are being greatly enlarged, capacity of grandstand and bleachers is being increased and streets and grounds widened and improved.

Funs with which to carry on the program have been provided by the WPA, by state appropriations and by contributions made by the State Fair management.

Major improvement is the largest modern Swine and Sheep barn in the world being erected west of the cattle pavilion. It will be completed in time to house the sheep and swine entries for this year's Fair. It is 306 feet by 270 feet of brick, steel and concrete construction and will include hundreds of pens as well as two judging arenas.

The new auto-parking lot will more than double the parking capacity during the 1936 Exposition. Construction of two new steel and concrete bleacher units east and west of the grandstand will improve visibility for spectators who attend races and the night show production.

An exact replica of a Minnesota logging camp is being built on machinery hill by the division of Forestry of the Department of Conservation to be used as a museum for one of the state's former major industries - - lumbering. Other changes include a paddock, straightening and widening of several streets, and extensive planting of lawns and flower beds.

Inquiries received to date, indicate the greatest showing of farm machinery, home aids and industrial equipment in a decade. The Food Exposition inaugurated a year ago, promises to surpass in size and quality the initial showing. New exhibits in the poultry division will show a score or more of new type feeding rations developed during the past 12 months, as well as a number of new developments in equipment. Dairy machinery exhibits will illustrate the latest strides in the improvement of equipment for creamery and farm use.

State Fair Adds Special Features To Add Interest

Key Day Tickets Will Be Sold—Band Tournament Planned

Two special features for the opening Saturday and Sunday of the Minnesota State Fair, September 5 to 12, were approved this week by the board of managers of the exposition.

Approval was given for a repetition of last year's popular "Key Day" on the opening Saturday and arrangements were completed for the staging of the second annual state-wide band tournament in front of the grandstand Sunday afternoon.

Key Day gives patrons a plan for seeing the entire Fair, on the opening Saturday only, by means of a special combination ticket offered at a greatly reduced price. Key Day tickets valued at $1.20 will be sold for 50 cents. They will include an admission to the grounds, admission for an automobile or the Indian Village, admission to the grandstand for the afternoon championship auto races and two admissions for riding devices in the Royal American Shows on the Midway. Key Day tickets will be on sale prior to the Fair and at the outside gates until 3 p. m. the opening Saturday.

Plans have been completed for the second annual band tournament which is being sponsored to foster living music. Awards for the winners will total $2,000. Judging will take place in front of the grandstand on Sunday afternoon, Sept. 6, and bands will be scored on a basic of music, uniforms and marching ability. In addition to the cash award the championship band will be presented with a trophy with individual medals for each member.

First entry in this year's tournament is the Little Falls City Band, which won the championship in 1935. The public will be admitted to the grandstand for the event without charge.

For the government to penalize a corporation for saving money to pay its debts, or to make plant extensions or replacements, may be politically smart. But, it just doesn't make sense to the man who has to meet a Saturday pay roll.

Some Swimmers Should Not Go Near The Water

Chief Among These Are Sufferers From Sinus Trouble or Ear Infections, Doctors Say

There are many people who may hang most of their clothes on a hickory limb, like the girl in the song, must not go near the water.

Members of the Public Health Education Committee of the Minnesota State Medical Association put people who suffer from sinus trouble or ear infections first on this list.

Even healthy nasal passages are likely to be irritated when water from the lake or swimming pool is forced into them violently as it often is in diving or under water swimming. When the sinuses or passages leading to the ears are already inflamed or diseased, serious damage occurs. Many grave middle ear and mastoid infections are traced each year to unwise swimming and particularly to swimming under water.

People with head colds are particularly warned to stay out of the water until the trouble clears up.

Swimming is a healthful sport according to the physicians, if it is indulged in intelligently and with sensible recognition of the risks involved.

Even expert swimmers should not make long distance swims alone and without knowledge of anyone who could come to their assistance in case of accident. Neither should they dive into unknown waters where unsuspected rocks or timbers might be in their way. In case of illness of any kind all swimmers should be certain, first, that the trouble will not be aggrevated by swimming before they go near the water.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN

© The Safety Man

I feel it again necessary to appeal to the press for action and publicity against drunken drivers.

A newspaper in America is a powerful influence in spreading and creating public opinion. Once public opinion is aroused against drunken drivers it becomes dangerous for these drivers to occupy our highways.

In spite of all the carefulness and precaution and courtesy used by other drivers, a drunken driver who does not have clear eyesight and good judgment, is a menace to others and himself.

The laws of the state should be enforced. Drunken drivers should have their licenses revoked and should be barred from driving for a certain period. If a second offense is prosecuted, a jail sentence without the payment of a fine should be the answer.

We cannot demand too much severity to protect people who are at the mercy of these criminals.

Nobody Is Really Immune To Poison Ivy

This is the opinion of the Public Health Education Committee of the Minnesota State Medical Association which today cautions tourists and vacationists against unwise familiarities with the low, three-leaved plant which bears on its surface the troublesome, non-volatile oil.

Poison ivy belongs to an ill-favored plant family, the Rhus, of which poison sumac and poison oak are also notorious members. All of them bear this irritating oil. In Minnesota, however, this ivy is the commonest representative and, of the three, is the easiest recognized and avoided. It grows as a low, erect plant, sometimes giving the appearance of a vine. The leaves are always arranged in clusters of three, two of which are directly opposite each other with the third at the end of the main stem. The leaves are shiny, the berries at first a smooth green and later a yellowish white or ivory.

If you find you have brushed against the ivy or inadvertently picked it, the doctors advise immediate, thorough washing with plenty of soap and water to get the oil off before it does any damage. Care should be taken, though, not to irritate the skin or break it. After thorough washing, an application of rubbing alcohol is a good additional preventive. No grease or ointments should be used either as preventives or in treatment of the inflammation if it should appear, since greases seem to help it develop and spread. If the inflammation really develops, it is best to get expert advice on how to treat it since ivy poisoning is sometimes serious and painful.

The people who believe they are immune to ivy poisoning should be warned, the doctors say, that laboratory tests have shown everybody to be liable to it sooner or later if the dose of oil is heavy enough.

Jersey Unemployed Mobilize

Trenton, N. J.—For six days a constantly growing group of unemployed men and women and their families have been conducting a mock Assembly in the State House, during a recess in the Legislature. Sprawling on floors and desks they have made themselves at home, as a protest against the failure of the lawmakers to pass relief appropriations before adjournment. By the time the Assembly reconvenes this week it is feared that 5,000 unemployed will converge on the Capitol.

MINNESOTA FARMERS TO SAVE $590,000 INTEREST IN YEAR

Minnesota farmers will save more than $590,000 during the next year in interest on land bank loans now outstanding through the continuance of the 3½ per cent rate by act of congress which was approved June 25, it was learned this week from the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul.

This same rate will also affect new as well as old land bank loans made through national farm loan associations and apply to all interest payments coming due before July 1, 1937. The 3½ per cent rate which was enacted more than a year ago as a benefit to offset some of the adversities under which agriculture had been operating, was to have expired on June 30 this year.

Under the law as amended the special reduced rate is extended one year, after which time all loans will be returned to the interest rate at which they were written, as the law does not change the contract rate, but operates only as a temporary reduction.

The reduced rate applies to all of the outstanding land bank loans made through national farm loan associations, which amount to nearly 2 billion dollars.

The reduced rate on loans made directly by the land bank—not through associations—will be 4 per cent for the one-year period.

In the region served by the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul the interest saving to farmers on loans they now have will amount to more than $1,650,000 for this one year.

STRIKERS RETURN TO WORK

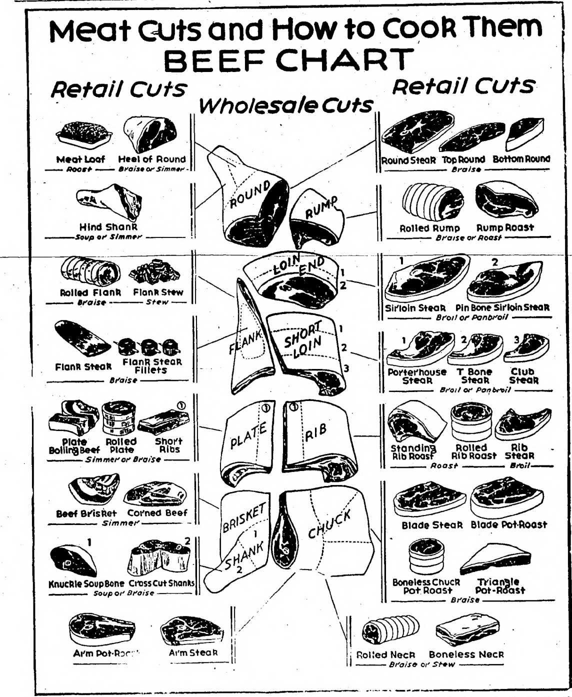
Portsmouth, O.—Ending 52 days of idleness, 5,500 empolyes of the Wheeling Steel Corporation returned to work this week. The union gained full recognition and an agreement to arbitrate wages and hours of labor within two weeks.



Every housewife is confronted with the three-a-day question of variety in the meals she serves. In beef we become addicted to roasts or steaks and forget all about the other good beef cuts which will give pleasing variation and be easy on the pocketbook, too. Perhaps our trouble lies in the fact that we are not as familiar as we should be with many of the possibilities offered by beef. If you are one of those whose use of beef is limited to a roast or a steak, the chart given above will be invaluable in learning to identify and locate the many retail cuts of beef. The chart will show you at a glance just how each one should be cooked. You will want to preserve this chart for ready reference.

PUBLIC ENEMIES

Pity him as we do, the Cross-Walk Somnambulist has no one to blame but himself. Sleep-walking pedestrians gamble with death.

While it is true that pedestrians have the right-of-way over autos making turns at intersections and that traffic should slow down for persons using cross-walks, neither of these truths can afford much comfort after an accident has occurred

Summer Ills Should Have Special Care

Keeping Sick Children In Bed Is Best Early Treatment For All Summer Maladies

The dread infantile paralysis is especially a disease of late summer and fall and, since each summer sees at least a few cases in Minnesota, physicians warn parents this week to remember it whenever there is illness in summertime.

Today's bulletin from the Committee on Public Health Education of the Minnesota State Medical Association points out for their comfort, however, that not all cases of infantile paralysis, technically known as poliomyelitis, leaving a crippling paralysis in their wake. With prompt attention and good after care many of those who do suffer a paralysis can be almost, if not entirely cured.

The extensive and important research now being carried on to find some means of preventing the disease has not yet resulted in any form of vaccination or immunization that can be safely used.

The probabilities are, according to physicians, that such a protection will eventually be discovered. In the meantime the usual rules of hygiene, that is, avoidance of people who are sick, careful washing of hands, particularly before eating; careful washing of vegetables and fruits, and care to see that milk and food supplies are all clean and uncontaminated, constitute the only reliable protection from "polio" and many other kinds of troublesome late summer ailments.

In addition, parents are especially cautioned to put children to bed immediately in case of illness. Such treatment gives them the best chance to recover quickly, whatever the trouble may be. It is especially important if the illness should chance to be poliomyelitis.

2 Out of Every 3 Farmers In State Own Land They Till

Approximately two farmers out of every three in Minnesota owned the farms they operated, according to figures of the agricultural census of 1935 made public here on Wednesday. The actal percentage of owners was put at 65.9 as compared with 68.3 in 1930, but paradoxically the actual number of owners increased from 126,570 to 134,012 during the five-year period.

The seeming contradiction was explained by a 10 per cent increase in the number of farms in Minnesota during the five years and a reduction in the average size of a farm from 167 to 161.5 acres; also by an increase of nearly 2,000,000 acres—from 30,913,367 to 32,817,911—in the amount of land farmed in the state.

Of Minnesota's 203,302 farmers last year, 134,012 were represented as owners. In the latter group, 101,307 were classified as full owners and 32,705 as part owners. Those figures compared with 97,878 and 28,692, respectively, in 1930. Managers (nonowners) operated 878 farms in the state last year, 1,047 in 1930, and tenants operated 68,412 farms in 1935 and 57,638 five years before.

NEW TAX BILL

The new tax bill, signed by the President June 22, 1936, reduces the rate of capital stock tax imposed on corporations by the Revenue Act of 1935 from $1.40 to $1.00 for each full $1,000 of the declared value, says J. R. Landy, Collector of Internal Revenues for the District of Minnesota. In filing returns for the capital stock tax year ending June 30, 1936, and which returns must be filed in his office on or before July 31, 1936, corporations are required to make an original declaration of value for their capital stock and pay any tax due at the rate of $1.00 for each full $1,000 of such declared value. Under the law an entirely new value may be declared for the capital stock on the 1936 return, without regard to any declaration of value made for any previous year.

Mr. Landy further calls attention to the requirement of the law that every corporation in existence, and whether or not actually engaged in business, between July 1, 1936 and June 30, 1936, or any part thereof, must file a 1936 capital stock tax return.

SEEK DOUBLE OF WINKING GIRL

Chicago—Search in thirteen central western states is being made for the double, or near double, of a winking girl whose picture appears on a highway billboard displayed by the Standard Oil Company of Indiana.

Girls who believe they resemble the one depicted may submit their photographs, together with name and address, before August 3rd, it was announced.

The picture submitted which, in the opinion of the Company's advestising agency, most resembles the girl on the billboard will be purchased for $100 and may be used in advertising, it was stated.

The resemblance, it was pointed out, need not extend to a similarity in the coloring of the hair and eyes, but the features should bear a marked likeness.

The search was instigated following a statement by the artist who drew the winking girl, that she represents a composite type, and that many who bear a decided resemblance may be found.

Washington, D. C.—Following a reduction in the interest charged by the Treasury Department on loans to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the latter has reduced its interest rates to banks and receivers thereof from 4 to 3 per cent, with corresponding reductions in other classes of loans to industry.

Life Of Edward Erickson

Funeral servises were conducted from the Ringbo Church on Tuesday afternoon, August 11th, for Edward Erickson, pioneer of the Ringbo community.

Edward Erickson was born in Norland, Norway, May 21, 1876 and passed away at the Physicians Hospital at Thief River Falls on Friday evening, August 7, 1936. He was 60 years old.

Burial was made in the Ringbo cemetery beside the remains of his wife who passed away a few years ago. Rev. Reinhart Pederson of Greenbush officiated.

Those left to mourn his loss are his sons, Eidean, Eli and Lester at home and Leslie of Thief River Falls, and his two daughters, Mrs. Carl Knutson of Gatzke and Mrs. Ralph Clutter of Fort Peck, Mont.

Besides the children he also leaves a brother, Pete Raftness of Highlanding in Pennington county, two sisters in Norway and a brother-in-law, Andrew Erickson of Valley City, N. Dak.

Card of Thanks

We hereby express our thanks to our neighbors and friends for their kindness and sympathy shown us during the illness and death of our father. We especially thank Rev. Peterson for his comforting words, those who sang and those who gave flowers.

The Erickson children.

New Pastor Installed Here

A crowd that filled the Nazareth Lutheran Church and left many standing out in the hallway, attended the installation services conducted here for Rev. T. C. L. Hanson on Sunday forenoon. Rev. I. T. Aastad of Detroit Lakes, president of the Northern Minnesota District of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America, preached the installation sermon.

In the afternoon Rev. and Mrs Hanson and Rev. Aastad attended the Silver Creek Ladies Aid at the Arno Stienhauer home.

The Weather

This community was treated to another good rain last Thursday night. This has helped a great deal in replenishing water supplies and also in putting the pastures in better condition.

The weather har been on the cool order since the rain.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Tice and family and Mrs. Cora Teal and daughters of Mentor visited at the G. Sanoden home Monday. Mrs. Teal and daughters stayed for a week's visit.

Your Creamery

The Creamery, organized and built by the people of this community because they saw the need of co-operative marketing of their farm products, can grow and prosper only in the same proportion as it is patronized by the people of this community. Work and boost for it. The more you patronize it the greater your profits will be. Your creamery is worthy of your most loyal support.

Drought Farmer Being Assigned

Certification of drouth-stricken farmers is being made in Marshall county since it was designated as a "drought county" by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The certifications are being sent to the district office of the Works Progress Aministration at Detroit Lakes, of which J. B. Kovarik is district director. Up to and including Monday last week, 11 farmers have been certified and assigned for work on WPA projects. In the seven counties of the district, including Becker, Clay, Kittson, Marshall, Norman, Otter Tail and Wilkin, a total of 485 farmers have been assigned and 187 are now at work.

In Marshall county, there are sufficient projects availabe at the present time to take care of all assigned farmers, according Harold Anderson, area engineer. Units of the county-wide farm-to-market roads project will be instituted in various sections of the county so farmers will not not have long distances to go to their work.

While farmers have been assigned as quickly as possible, it is probably that a number of them will first seek to salvage whatever they can of their crops before reporting for WPA projects. In a recent bulletin, received by Director Koravik, over the signature of Victor Christgau, state administrator, drouth-stricken farmers will be granted leave without pay for any periods, not to exceed two week, to take care of their crops. This will afford farmers an opportunity to sandwish in their plowing in between times that they are working on projects.

Creamery Has Record Day

According to reports made by the management of the local creamery, Monday was the biggest day the creamery had in 1936. Enough butterfat was delivered by the patrons to make 55 tubs of butter.

With each tub holding 63 pounds of butter, this amount makes 3465 pounds of butterfat delivered that day. This increase in butterfat was due to the fact that the pastures in this community were freshened up by recent rains.

4-H Club News

The Holt 4-H held their August meeting at the club room on Friday evening.

Vivian Larson presided and minutes of July meeting were read.

Miss Bierbaum discussed the annual achievement day and Marlan Augustine presented plans for the annual picnic.

Committees were chosen for September:

Lunch: Geraidine Braucht, Delores Larson, Eileen Larson.

Program: Marian Larson, Elwood Herom, Myron Johnson.

Lunch was served and a social time enjoyed.

The Annual Achievement Day will be held at Holt on Friday, August 21st. All exhibits must be in by 10 o'clock.

Mr. Ole Blooflat, Miss Myrtle Blooflat, Mr. and Mrs. Olof Brovold and daughter, Mr.s Selmer Oien of Montevedio, and Mr. and Mrs. Archie Blooflat and children of Grand Rapids, visited at the Mrs. Fred Larson and Nels Lysne homes and other relatives here over the week end.

Planted Acreage New Pay Base

Word has just been received that payments will be made to farmers for the acreage of Flax and Sugar Beets planted rather than harvested.

Before a farmer plows down any of these crops, he should have a statement signed by neighbors or committee man stating that the land was properly seeded at a proper date on land suitable for the production of these crops. Fields should be staked out.

Before a farmer becomes eligible for payments, he must meet the minimum requirements as to soil conserving crops. In other words, he must have an acreage of land devoted to soil conserving crops equal to 25 per cent of his Beet acreage plus 20 per cent of his flax acreage plus 15 per cent of the acres of Base remaining after flax and beet acreage have been deducted.

Farmers List Your Seeds

A communication has been received at the County Agents Office requesting the farmers of Marshall County to list with the County Agent any seed which they may have for sale.

The seed situation is serious. Many counties will be needing good seed next spring.

Farmers are requested to list any wheat, oats, barley, flax or rye with the County Agent on, or before August 25. They should state the amount and the variety for sale and should give their name and address.

This information will be compiled at the University Farm and will be distributed to those counties requesting this service.

Mr. Ole Blooflat, Mr. and Mrs. Olaf Brovold and daughter, Mrs. Selmer Oien and Miss Myrtle Bleoflat of Montevedio, Mrs. Fred Larson, Ludvick Larson, Mrs. Norman Peterson and children and Mr. and Mrs. Bill Sorum and children visited at the homes of Rev. and Mrs. Hanson and Mr. and Mrs. Iver Larson on Monday evening.

French Star in Lead Role of 1936 State Fair Revue

Distinguished prima donna of the 1936 Edition of State Fair Revue, grandstand night show at the Minnesota State Fair, September 5 to 12, is Anita La Pierre, French chanteuse who comes to star in the production direct from the Folles Bergere in Paris. A cast of 250, including the best talent of Broadway, Hollywood, radio and the circus, take part in this gala extravaganza.

Shoot Man From Cannon In State Fair Thriller

Vittorio Zacchini, the man who invented and perfected the thriller, "Shooting a Man from a Cannon" will perform his hazardous feat at the Minnesota State Fair, September 5 to 12.

Zacchini, the human projectile, is shot more than 225 feet through space from the fiery, smoking mouth of a huge cannon. Several men have been killed in trying to imitate Zacchini in recent months.

Rains Check Forest Fires

A report from St. Paul states that the first good rain since mid-June began falling early Tuesday in northern Minnesota, and greately aided thousands of CCC youths and men fighting forest and brush fires.

Duluth reported a steady down pour Tuesday morning, accompanied by lightning: If the rain continues, foresty men said, the fire fighters will earn their first real respite in ten days.

The rain followed reports that the fires which had burned over thousands of acres of Timber and brush lands were being held in check Monday following light rains and little wind.

Although A. B. Oppel, deputy state forester, termed the northwoods situation "still very danerous," he said all of the blazes were being controlled late Monday. However, rising winds would quickly whip the smouldering blazes into flaring activity, he said, and the entire available force of 15,000 men was being kept on the alert.

The Tom lake blaze north of Hovland on the North Shore of Lake Superior was being held within fire lines on Monday nite, as was the new blazes reported in the Markham--Palo district, where recently fires destroyed good homes.

The Frost lake fire, which caused foresters most concern Monday was being controlled on Tuesday, and rangers said the situation at McGrath was "out of danger."

Low Bidders On Bus Routes

Leo Horien, Johnnie Ness, and Leonard Larson were the successful bidders on the local school bus routes at a letting of bids for this on Monday afternoon. Larson has route 1; Horien route 2; and Ness route 3. The bids accepted were: route 1, $30.00 per month; route 2, $22.00 and route 3, $28.00 per month.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry Ellis and son Cedric of Chatfield, Minn., spent the week end at the V. E. Oakey home.

G. O. P. To Organize Club

Plans for the organization of a Marshall County Associated Republican club will be considered at a dinner meeting of interested Republicans of the county to be held at Hotel Warren, in Warren on Friday, August 28, starting at seven o'clock p. m., according to an announcement made this week by Oscar R. Knutson, chairman of the county Republican committee.

Invitations to attend the organization meeting have been extended to several Republican state ticket candidates including Arthur E. Nelson, candidate for Lieutenant Governor; Mike Holm Secretary of State; Theodore Christianson, candidate for U. S. senate; Elmer Haugen, ninth district congressional candidate; and Oscar Youngdahl, candidate for attorney general.

Several entertainment features are also being planned which will include musical selections, etc., said Mr. Knutson. Officers for the club will be elected, committees will be named and the adoption of a club constitution will be considered.

A membership drive is now under way throughout the county, with dues being $1.00 a year. Memberships may be paid to any of the officers of the county Republican committee, who are authorized to issue official receipts.

The general public is cordially invited to attend the gathering August 28. The dinner charge will be 60 cents for each person.

Has Many Paint Jobs

Hartley Peterson is at present redecorating the interior of the Pioneer School house. He has just finished the work of painting the inside and outside of the Nazareth Lutheran parsonage here and will also paint the outside of the church here and do a lot of redecorating at the church in Silver Creek.

Jeffersonian Democrats Band Together

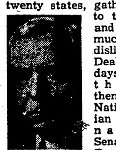
FORTY - THREE Democrats, most of them prominent nationally or locally and representing twenty states, gathered in Detroit to tell one another and the world how much and why they disliked the New Deal. After two days of conferring, they organized themselves as the National Jeffersonian Democrats and named Former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri as their national chairman. They decided to establish headquarters at once in St. Louis and to set up an organization in every state. Then they gave out a 1,500 word declaration or platform in which they declared they "will not support for re-election the candidates of the Philadelphia convention for President and vice president, and we call upon all loyal and sincere Democrats to consider the question of their duty to their country in the approaching election with the same earnestness that has guided our delibrations—joining with us if they feel that our conclusions are sound and our anxiety for the future of our party and our country is justified."



J. A. Reed

The name of Governor Landon was not mentioned in the declaration, but a number of its signers are openly supporting the Republican candidate. Among these are Joseph B. Ely, Col. Henry Breckinridge, John Henry Kirby of Texas and Robert S. Bright of Maryland. However, the avowed prime objective of the Jeffersonians is the defeat of President Roosevelt and the restoration of the Democratic party to its status before the New Dealers captured it. Their declaration is unsparing in its denunciation of Mr. Roosevelt's course and the policies of his administration.

Bar Association Split on New Deal Legislation

WHEN the American Bar association convenes in Boston soon it will receive two widely differing reports from a special committee named to study the effects of New Deal legislation on the rights and liberties of citizens. They were made public in Washington. The majority report, signed by John D. Clark, Cheyenne, Wyo.; Fred H. Davis, Tallahassee, Fla.; George L. Buist, Charleston, S. C., and Charles P. Taft II., Cincinnati, Ohio., "deplored" the action of President Roosevelt in reducing congress to a "rubber stamp" body to carry through his program.

"Novel legislative and governmental trends of the New Deal are just as uncertain today as they were two years ago," the report said. "Laws specifically proposed as emergency measures with limited life have been declared by important members of the administration to be the beginning of permanent changes in national policy.

"There has been a continuing conflict between such officials as to whether a new social and economic order is in the making or the old institutions are being perfected so that they may be preserved."

These findings were challenged by Kenneth Wynne, New Haven, Conn.; Fred L. Williams, St. Louis, Mo., and James G. McGowen of Jackson, Miss. In their minority report they said: "If the purpose of the resolution creating the special committee was to get the opinion of the American Bar association regarding legislative trends designed to meet changing economic conditions, the report is superficial. It does not deal with the problem but concerns itself with a short range attack on surface trivialities."

Congressman Zioncheck Commits Suicide

MARION A. ZIONCHECK brought to an end in characteristic manner his checkered career and his life. He leaped to his death from a window of his office in Seattle shortly after he had filed for re-nomination to the congressional seat he had held for two terms. His friends attributed the suicide to worry over a psychiatrist's advice that he take a long rest from politics. His trouble had been diagnosed as dementia praecox.

American Track Team Victor in Olympics

EIGHT days of track competition that brought out many record-breaking performances showed that the American team was unbeatable in the matter of total points. These Yankee athletes piled up a total of 203 points. Finland was second with 80 1-4, Germany third with 69 3-4 and Japan fourth with 51 13-22. Jesse Owens, the marvelous colored lad from Ohio State university, captured four gold medals for firsts in the 100 meter and 200 meter runs and the broad jump and for pacing the winning American quartet in the 400 meter relay. The decathlon was won by Glenn Morris of Denver.

Japan captured the most highly prized Olympic championship when Kitei Son, young Corean student, won the marathon race over a very tough course and in the record time of 2 hours 29 minutes 19.2 seconds. The distance was 26 miles and 385 yards.

Among the women contestants Helen Stephens of Missouri distinguished herself by breaking the world record in two heats of the 100-meter dash.

Commerce Department on Recovery and Public Debt

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE ROPER'S department has just put out a "world economic review" for 1935 which contains many interesting statements. It says, for instance, that future business prospects are conditioned in part upon the possibility of narrowing the gap between government expenditures and receipts. It asserted that "the government deficit springs from the root of unemployment, which is still the major problem confronting the country.

A. P. Sloan

As to "the part played in the recovery to date by the heavy government expenditures," the report said:

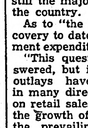
"This question is not easily answered, but it is certain that such outlays have had an influence in many directions — for example, on retail sales, on farm income, on the growth of bank deposits and on the prevailing level of interest rates."

The latter statements may well be compared with the report of Alfred P. Sloan, president of General Motors, to the stockholders. Business recovery throughout the world — in which the United States has participated — is being generated by a combination of various factors, Mr. Sloan explains. In this country the automobile industry has been helped, he says, by principal influences. Only one of these, he points out, has its roots in the New Deal financial schemes and he finds that particular influence a bad one because it creates a temporary fool's paradise in which sales and earnings are ballooned by extraordinary government expenditures.

Asserting that political extravagance has created a highly undesirable and artificial stimulus, Mr. Sloan urges that such spending be halted before it is too late to stave off disaster.

Oil Men and Companies Accused of Conspiracy

CHARGED by the government with conspiracy to violate the anti-trust law by combining to dominate the purchasing of oil in the Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma fields and to fix prices of gasoline in the Middle West, 58 persons, 23 petroleum concerns and three publishing companies were indicted by a federal grand jury in Madison, Wis. Among the prominent defendants are Edward G. Seubert of Chicago, president of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana; Henry M. Dawes of Evanston, Ill., president of the Pure Oil company, and many officials of Standard Oil, Pure Oil, Deep Rock, Socony-Vacuum and various other oil concerns and their subsidiaries. Also in the list are Warren C. Platt of Cleveland, publisher of the National Petroleum News and Platt's Oilgram; his two publications and the Chicago Journal of Commerce.



H. M. Dawes

The indictment charged that the defendant oil companies formed pools in the east Texas and mid-continent fields for the purpose of purchasing gasoline at artificially high prices from independent producers, and in furtherance of such a scheme were members of associations which included the independents. Further it was charged that independent refiners to aid the plan, had curtailed their production of gasoline.

This, said Mr. Platt, is exactly what the oil companies did with the approval of Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, administrator of the NRA petroleum code, when efforts were being made to limit the production of gasoline, prevent the flow of excess quota oil into market channels, and raise prices in that turbulent industry.

"The government's charge turns on whether a practice legally started and carried on under the recent NRA petroleum code was continued in illegal manner after the NRA was killed by the United States Supreme court," Mr. Platt said.

Two American Authors Called by Death

LINCOLN STEFFENS, long prominent as a journalist, writer and lecturer, died at Carmel, Calif., at the age of seventy. He was creator of the so-called muckraking school of journalism and in many magazine articles he exposed the corruption in municipal politics.

Another well known American writer, Arthur B. Reeve, passed away at his home in Trenton, N. J. He gained fame by his crime and mystery stories.

President Resents Charge of Politics in Relief

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was visibly aroused by Republican charges that the New Dealers were seeking to reap political profit from the drouth conditions. At his press conference he broke with the usual rule by permitting himself to be directly quoted as saying:

The President announced that he would hold a series of regional conferences with governors of states in the drouth area, and naturally Governor Landon, his Republican opponent, will be among those he will meet. It was believed they would come together about Labor day in Des Moines, with the governors of Iowa, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Missouri. Mr. Landon said he would accept the President's invitation to such a conference.

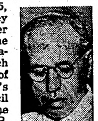
Senator Keyes, New Hampshire, to Retire From Office

SENATOR HENRY W. KEYES of New Hampshire has announced that he is not a candidate for reelection by the Republicans, prefering "to retire from active participation in public affairs." The Republicans therefore will choose between former Senator George H. Moses and Gov. H. Styles Bridges, both of whom have announced their candidacy for the nomination.

Kansas Republicans renominated Senator Arthur Capper, and the Democrats picked Omar Ketchum of Topeka. In Kentucky the Democrats renominated Senator M. M. Logan, whose Republican opponent in November will be Robert H. Lucas.

Ten "Rebel" Unions Are Suspended From A. F. of L.

UNLESS John L. Lewis and his associates in the Committee for Industrial Organization repent and cease their "rebellious" activities before September 5, the ten unions they head will be under suspension from the American Federation of Labor. Such was the verdict of the federation's executive council which passed on the charges of John P. Frey, president of the metal trades division, that the CIO was "fomenting insurrection and rebellion." David Dubinsky, head of the garment workers, cast the only vote against the suspension order.



J. P. Frey

Lewis having definitely set himself against any peace overtures, it appeared that the suspension certainly would be put into effect. The next move will be up to the Tampa convention in the fall, which will be asked to vote the expulsion of the refractory unions.

The ten unions accused by Mr. Frey and found guilty are:

United Mine Workers.

Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Sidney Hillman, president.

Oil Field, Gas Well, and Refinery Workers, Harvey Fremming, president.

Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, Thomas H. Brown, president.

Ladies' Garment Workers, David Dubinsky, president.

Textile Workers, Thomas F. Mc Mahon, president.

Flat Glass Workers, Glen McCabe, president.

Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers, M. F. Tighe, president.

Automobile Workers, Homer Martin, president.

Rubber Workers, S. H. Dalrymple, president.

Lewis characterized the council's action as one of "incredible and crass stupidity" and said that it was "dictated by personal selfishness and frantic fear."

Fierce Fighting in the Spanish Civil War

DESPERATE fighting for possession of the passes in the Guadarrama mountains north of Madrid was going on between the government forces and the rebel troops. Loyalist soldiers were hurried to that region, and Madrid claimed some victories. However, the Fascists on the northern side of the range were said to be within sight of the capital and in position for a vigorous advance.

The rebels scored in the south by landing 2,000 Moroccan troops from Ceuta after a lively sea and air fight in which two loyalist warships were driven off. The loyalists were also reported to have met defeat near Avila, losing 600 men and some tanks and trucks.

On the twentieth day of the rebellion the government announced it had captured the provinces of Catalonia, Valencia, Murcia, Malaga, Ciudad Real, Guadalajara, Badajoz and the northern resort city of San Sebastian.

CHAPTER XI

—18—

"Who murdered Mike Kelly? . . . Pat—darling—was it you?"

The Globe had answered the question, but, in Southampton, Barry Gilbert held this girl-of-all-girls in his arms, and asked it again.

For a moment, she stared at him, dazed and inert, and then she pushed him away.

"Let me sit down, please," she said, coldly.

She remained standing, however, when Barry released her, though she still clung to the chair at which she had stopped when she came into the room. "Do you really think I could kill anyone?" she asked, with just a trace of amusement tempering the wonder and resentment in her tone. "But, of course, I know why you think it. My father said he couldn't tell the truth because of a woman. The woman was my dead mother."

"I'm sorry—" Barry began.

"It doesn't matter," the girl interrupted. "Nothing much matters now. Peter says this evening's Globe completely clears young Ridder, and that they'll probably release him tomorrow. That's all you want, isn't it. And, if you don't mind, I'll go upstairs to my father. He's really ill."

She had closed the door to the hall after her and Barry opened it.

"Can I do anything?" he asked lamely.

"No, I don't think anybody can," Pat answered. "Nothing father or I could say now would help Morano, or anybody. Is Evans outside?"

"Yes."

"Then, of course, you'll see Peggy. Her worries are over. Please tell her how glad I am, and that I'll phone later about Jacky."

They were in the hall by this time and the butler appeared on the landing.

"Will you come to your father, Miss?" he said, quietly.

"I'm coming," Pat replied, just as quietly and, without looking at Barry again, turned and ran up the stairs.

Well, that was over—along with everything else. "I made a clean sweep while I was at it," Barry told himself, ruefully, on his way to the hospital. "What did I have to shoot off my mouth for, just at the last minute? 'My dead mother.' Three words, and my whole train of suspicion went off the rails."

It had taken Harwood barely more than 24 hours to get his man. "He certainly worked fast," Barry paid mental tribute; "once he'd identified that voice on the phone." Some time before the evening papers would reach Southampton. What was the difference? "Nothing much matters now," Pat had said, and it didn't. They'd probably release young Ridder tomorrow, and, two days later, old Ridder'd be in New York. "I've got plenty to do," Barry said to himself, and to Evans, "I've had a cable from Mr. Ridder. He's on the Bremen, arriving Saturday. You'd better get your wife back to town."

They were at the hospital now, and Evans made no reply.

Peggy came into the reception room. "I can't stay," she began. "Jacky's in a good deal of pain. The doctor's up there. He says everything's all right, but, somehow, I'm worried."

"I don't know. I haven't had any in so long—"

"It's about Jack."

He wanted to "break it gently," but Peg couldn't wait.

"He's— What is it? Just another clue? Or— Go on, please!"

At least her body didn't but she ran her tongue over her lips, and her hands opened and closed spasmodically.

After a moment: "No foolin'?" she said.

It was an absurd thing to say, but, in a long experience with suffering, Barry had learned that just such things are said under stress.

"No foolin'."

Tears came into the girl's eyes, and flowed down her cheeks.

"It's in tonight's Globe," Barry told her. "The papers aren't here yet, but I'll ask Evans to bring you one. There doesn't seem to be any possibility of mistake. I'll go in to town by the first train in the morning. I'll take care of everything, and keep in close touch with you."

"Thanks," Peggy said.

One syllable, but Barry thought he had never heard so much praise and gratitude before. His own eyes were threatened with moisture, so he declared, "You'd better get back to the boy. Pat's going to phone later, and I'll ring up tonight. That's all now."

"Home?" Evans asked.

Barry nodded. That word was the last straw.

"Yes, please. The instant the evening papers get to Southampton, will you bring me a copy of the Globe, and take one to Mrs. Rogers?" He gave the chauffeur a quarter. "Kelly's murderer's under arrest," he continued, "and we're through 'sleuthing.' You'll find it all in the Globe."

"Yes, sir."

Evans was thinking of something else.

"You understand — about Mrs. Evans?" Barry asked.

"Yes, sir." A pause. "You ain't staying here yourself, I take it."

"I'm leaving tomorrow."

"I was wondering," Evans said, "would you like us to come with you?"

"Very much," Barry answered, "but it can't be done."

"You ain't always going to live in a hotel—begging your pardon, sir. Mrs. Evans is a mighty good cook."

"Thanks," Barry returned, "but my cooking's going to be provided by the state of New York. You may as well know the truth, Evans. I'm not Mr. Ridder. Never was. I jimmied my way into this house for a night's shelter, and then you and Willetts came, and thought I was Ridder, and I let you go on thinking so. The game's up now. The boss gets back Saturday, and what happens then is anyone's guess."

Evans said, "Yes, sir."

"That's all, except I'd be glad if you'd tell Willetts, and the rest. It'll save me introducing the subject."

"Yes, sir."

"And better stand by tonight. I may have to drive back to the hospital."

"Yes, sir . . . I was wondering—"

Barry grinned.

"You do a good deal of that, don't you?"

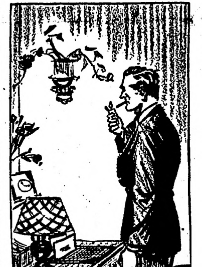
"I was wondering how you'd like to go to my sister's. You know—where I live in town. You could lay low there a while, and then slip away somewhere."

"That's swell of you," Barry responded. "Much obliged. But I think I've done all the slipping that's good for a man. Tell Willetts, when you get a chance, and remember to bring me the Globe."

It was close on to five o'clock then, and "plenty to do" before dinner. Willetts wasn't about—luckily. Barry let himself in with his key, and ran up to his room. Should he pack first, or get the rest of it out of the way?

He decided to begin with "the rest of it."

From a long envelope, in his inside pocket, he took all his vouchers. Then, on a sheet of note paper, he wrote, "Received . . . Cash $200." Beneath that, he listed the check from Mrs. Ridder, and "board, lodging, etc." Under "Disbursed," he credited himself with the same check, which had been banked for Peggy, and with whatever sums he had given her, and a few minor expenditures. "That leaves my account straight," Barry thought. "Except for unlawful entry, tampering with the mails, and pretending to be somebody I wasn't."



"That Leaves My Account Straight," Barry Thought.

It left his bank account far from straight. When he'd subtracted "Disbursed" from "Received," and made out his check for the balance, the result was a rather startling overdraft. "All right," Barry said. "I'll sell out my wardrobe. Studs, and cuff-links, and things. I guess I won't need 'em any more."

He wanted—terribly—to write a letter to Mrs. Ridder. It would have begun, "Dear Mother: (Not mine, of course.)" That was too maudlin. "Me: I'm just a sob-sister," Barry berated himself, tucking his accounts, accompanied only by his check, into an envelope, and inscribing it, "Mrs. John Clarke Ridder, Addressed." He propped the envelope against a calendar, and, for a moment, sat looking at it. "I wish I could find my mother," he had thought, his first morning at Southampton. He wished it even more fervently now, after all these weeks of "make believe."

"I've got to write Pat," he decided, at last. "I certainly owe her an apology, and a 'good-by.'" This letter certainly mustn't be "maudlin."

"Dear Pat," he started. "Dear Pat: (I suppose I should write 'Miss Hambidge' now, but I can't.) You wouldn't let me say I was sorry for what happened today, but I am. I won't try to excuse myself. You'll forget it, I hope, as quickly as you'll forget everything else in this grotesque association. I won't forget. You're the realest lady I ever knew. So this is thanks and good-by to you and your father, and—most sincerely trusting that your worries, like Peg's, are over—I remain always respectfully, Barry Gilbert."

Packing proved complicated. Most of his clothing—paid for long ago—was out here, and had to be taken in. But there was no suit-case. Neat, to the end, Barry folded his belongings into two tailor's boxes. He hadn't quite finished folding when Willetts knocked.

"Evening paper, sir."

"Thank you."

"And your key, sir. You left it in the front door."

"You'd better keep it. And there's a letter for Mrs. Ridder on the desk there. I'd like her to get it when she arrives."

"Very good, sir. Dinner at seven?"

"If you please."

That was all. No reference to Barry's packing, or the confession that—Barry felt sure—had been relayed by Evans half an hour ago. "I'm taking the 7:21 back to town tomorrow morning," Barry said, as Willetts was closing the door, but Willetts only answered, "Yes, sir," and went on closing it.

Morano hadn't been arrested. So much was clear from the screaming headlines Barry scanned. However, "that ends it," Barry felt sure. "Harwood did a swell job. Why didn't I follow up the number of that cab? It didn't seem of the least importance when the taxi-driving medico gave it to me. I might have known it was, though, when Ernie wrote it down in his notebook."

Dinner was uneventful—with Willetts remembering his "position," and behaving as any well-trained butler might have been expected to behave. Afterward, Barry phoned Peg. She had seen the Globe, but was still dubious. "Do you really think they'll let Jack out now?"

"Certainly. They're not going to get that sheet started again on Tammany Hall."

"And it'll be tomorrow, you think?"

"Probably. I'll keep in touch with you." Barry promised, and finished his packing. Then he re-read the Globe story, and marked parts of it—to ponder in town.

Throughout breakfast next morning, Barry wondered whether this remarkable butler could know he was "going for good." "I've left a few parting gifts on my desk," he ventured, at last. "For cook, and everybody. Will you take care of 'em?"

"Yes, sir."

"I shan't be back. I suppose Evans told you."

"Yes, sir."

That was too much.

Barry said, "Well, what do you think about it?"

"That's not for me to say, sir. My place is to obey orders. I've tried to do that, sir. If I've made a mistake, it hasn't been for want of trying."

"Your mistake was quite natural," Barry reassured him. "You'd been told you'd find young Mr. Ridder here, and you found me. I said I was young Mr. Ridder. That seems to let you out."

"Yes, sir."

Willetts hesitated.

"Anyway, that wasn't the mistake I had in mind sir. That was a natural mistake. I thought you were a gentleman. I still think so. It's five after seven, sir."

Barry just made the train. At Speonk, he bought a morning paper, and read of Morano's death. Even the conservative Times regarded that as the end of the case against Rogers. "Night Club Owner, Accused of Kelly Murder, Killed Resisting Arrest," its headlines began, and ended with, "Move to Free Rogers Expected Today." Barry pored over both stories—that in the Times and that in last night's Globe—all the way to New York. "Well," he reflected, "one of my suspects was guilty, anyway. Peter Winslow can't laugh that off."

"It's queer though," he said, almost aloud, to the click of the wheels. "Very queer. Very damned queer."

At the station, he stopped for a timetable. "Is there one," he asked, "that gives all the trains out of here?"

The man grinned at him, thrusting forward three thick folders.

Ten o'clock found him at Winslow's office.

"Mr. Winslow won't be in today," Peter's secretary announced. "Mrs. Winslow had a bad heart attack last night. So bad that Mr. Winslow telephoned to the Hambidges. They're with Mrs. Winslow now."

"Was that your last news?"

"No. Mr. Winslow called up half an hour ago to say that Mrs. Winslow's a little better."

"Had he seen this?"

Barry indicated the headline in the Times.

"Yes. He talked to Mr. Colton about it. Mr. Colton's one of the young men in the office, you know. He's gone to the district attorney to ask for Roger's release. Mr. Winslow said, if you called I was to tell you that would be only a matter of hours. Should you like us to phone you when there's anything certain?"

"Please. I suppose there's no use of my going to the Tombs now?"

"Not much. Mr. Colton's going there from the district attorney's. We'll phone you."

Barry phoned Peggy, and then strolled across Forty-second street. It was a delightful morning, and his rather comic bundles had been dispatched to his hotel from the station.

"No sense in my following 'em yet," Barry told himself. "I don't want to sit around that cursed room all day."

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Tries G. O. P. Relief Plan

Washington.—President Roosevelt again has changed courses on relief. This time he has launched an experiment that becomes most significant and interesting because he is trying out in a small way the very heart of the relief proposal contained in the Republican platform.

Without any ballyhoo or any detailed statement, the President has allocated $22,700,000 of Public Works Administration funds for use in direct grants to states and has laid down a formula for use of this money that takes it into the same category as the Republican plan. The President took this action personally. He has not only prescribed the conditions under which the grants will be made but has laid down rules for PWA which will, in effect, bring to his attention any completed arrangements involving these funds.

The program provides that the federal government will bear 45 per cent of the cost, a municipality or county contributing the other 55 per cent out of its own funds, and before the allocation is made definitely, the municipality or county receiving the funds must agree to employ 100 per cent relief labor.

In this manner, the "need for relief" becomes the measuring stick. If the local community is unable to supply only unskilled labor from the relief rolls and the project of construction planned for the community requires the use of skilled labor, it does not get the money. The projects considered to fall within the category of this new experiment include a great many worthwhile construction jobs such as school houses, sewage systems and water systems. The things proposed, therefore, may be said to be of permanent value and to that extent represent a veering by the President to the theory which Secretary Ickes of the Department of Interior always has held, namely, that if federal funds are expended they should be used in the construction and maintenance of permanent improvements.

Handled Locally

Although the general idea of this new experiment in relief, new to the New Deal, was practically forced upon the President by the necessity of the present relief mess, it nevertheless represents a return to a method long regarded by many students of the problem as the only way in which relief funds can be properly handled. It places back in the hands of local communities the task of looking after their own destitute and charity cases. The federal government contributes a share of the funds, of course, but it does not boss the job as has been the practice under Harry Hopkins and his Works Progress Administration further than the requirements that relief labor be employed.

As stated above, the plan now on trial constitutes the very heart of the Republican proposal for handling federal relief. The Republican platform calls for "federal grants in aid to the states and territories while the need exists upon compliance with these conditions: a fair proportion of the total relief burden to be provided from the revenues of states and local governments; all engaged in relief administration to be selected on the basis of merit and fitness; adequate provisions to be made for the encouragement of those persons who are trying to become self-supporting."

I hear much discussion around Washington that the President's experiment meets the Republican program in every way except as to the second provision which relates to the selection of the administrative personnel "upon the basis of merit and fitness." There are many who believe Mr. Roosevelt has reached the conclusion that there is considerable merit in the contention that unless steps are taken to get relief of the unemployed back into the local communities, it will become an unworkable monster, a Frankenstein.

On the other hand, some of the bitter critics of the Roosevelt administration are contending that Mr. Roosevelt seeks to try out the Republican proposal in this manner in order to demonstrate that it is unworkable. They point also to the omission of the second provision, just mentioned, and declare that the President will use political patronage rather than merit as the means of creating supervision.

* * *

Way to Dodge

While the new method has not been made fully operative so that anyone can see it in full detail, the restriction which Mr. Roosevelt has laid down that only relief labor shall be used is looked upon as providing a means of dodging complete operation of the plan. It is to be noted that the Republican plank does not limit the workers wholly to relief. In making such a restriction as the President has done, it is held in some quarters that there will not be too many communities able to take advantage of the fresh federal funds. The reason for this is that particularly in the smaller communities there is not a great amount of skilled labor. This comparatively small proportion of skilled labor, comparatively small when measured against the amount of common labor, or unskilled labor, available makes it impossible in a good many instances for the smaller communities to obtain money.

The situation is simply this: in the construction of sewage and water systems and most other construction jobs, there is more skilled labor required than will be available in the communities where these public works are to be undertaken. Further, with the pick up in industry, however small it may yet be, the skilled artisan has more chances to get jobs than has the common laborer. In addition, I think it can be fairly said that a skilled worker is of the type to be among the last to go on relief rolls. In any event, he will not go on the relief rolls until there is no other alternative. He is able to earn a much higher rate of pay than is available to him as a relief dole and naturally is not content to remain on the relief rolls longer than is absolutely necessary.

In this direction then, trouble may lie. Possibly some communities will be guilty of seeking to induce skilled workers to go on relief rolls for a sufficient length of time to enable them to carry out an agreement to employ only relief labor. This is a regrettable possibility but it is a very real one.

In all fairness to the President, I think it must be said that he is proceeding on a method to reach communities and unemployed that hitherto have been rather like stepchildren. The big relief projects under the former PWA system, and the Harry Hopkins method of handling relief in some way or other have managed to be concentrated in the great cities. While some persons may be unkind enough to say that the President is expanding his vote-getting machine to the small communities, it nevertheless remains as a fact that the system now undertaken will let some relief dribble down to those who have not had it before. In any event, since it is the Republican proposal and it is being tried out by the New Deal, it is an experiment very well worth watching.

The nations of the world find themselves in one of those peculiar and almost humorous situations that can develop only from the queer quirks of diplomacy. It has not progressed far enough yet for anyone to say what the outcome of this new diplomatic situation will be but it is not devoid, nevertheless, of possibilities both from the serious as well as the humorous side.

It may have escaped general notice that, under Mussolini's orders, King Victor Emanuel is now not only king of Italy but he is also emperor of Ethiopia. He was given this new title immediately after the conquering hordes of Italians had held their triumphant march in Rome and, as far as Mussolini was concerned, Ethiopia had gone out of existence, a dead nation.

Despite the fact that Mussolini would like to have Emperor Haile Selassie known only as a plain Mr. Tafari, most of the nations of the world still are compelled, through treaty agreement, foreign policy or plain desire to consider that Mr. Tafari still has the title of emperor of Ethiopia which he and his ancestors so long bore.

There is, however, this circumstance: since no nation has extended formal recognition to Italy as embracing Ethiopia, no diplomat can be formally received in that capacity. For example, the new Italian ambassador to the United States will come to Washington as the plenipotentiary of the king of Italy and emperor of Ethiopia but our ambassador to Italy, Mr. Welles, will go to Rome when he returns to his post this fall as the ambassador to the court of King Victor Emanuel — nothing being said about Ethiopia.

All of this results from American foreign policy and the foreign policies of other nations who oppose the taking of territory of another nation or race by force. It is a policy firmly footed, as witness the course of all of the nations excepting only Salvador in their attitude toward Manchuria which is now under Japanese control. Salvador recognized Japanese sovereignty over Manchuria largely because it was thereby enabled to consummate a great coffee sale.

Water Carried for Miles to Thirsty Cattle

A common scene now in the central New York farm district is that of farmers hauling water from reservoirs many miles away to save the lives of their parched stock. Here is Bert Cardwell, of Onondaga Hill, filling up a tank for his cattle. All springs and wells in the district went dry as the result of the greatest dry spell in the history of the country.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

JERRY HAS A SAD AWAKENING

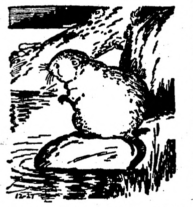
THE stranger had visited the Smiling Pool as he had been doing for more than a week. Jerry Muskrat had kept right on working on his house. All the time he had kept a bright eye on the stranger to see what he was doing. As usual the stranger visited each of Jerry's favorite eating places. It seemed to Jerry that he was at each a little longer than usual, but Jerry didn't think anything of that.

Just as soon as the stranger had left Jerry swam straight over to a certain old log which lay half in the water and half on the bank. He felt sure that on the upper part of that old log he would find some pieces of apple or carrot. He wasn't disappointed. His nose told him they were there even before he could see them. Now ordinarily Jerry climbed right up that old log out of the water, but this time he didn't. It just happened so, that was all. He climbed out on the bank beside the log and then up on the log. There he sat down and began to eat. My, how good those pieces of apple and carrot did taste! You see, Jerry had been working very hard and he had a splendid appetite.



Finally He Twisted Around to See What Held Him. It Was a Trap.

At first he sat facing the water. After a while he changed his position so that his back was to the water and his tail dropped down in the water where it covered the lower part of that old log.

Snap! With a squeal of pain and fright Jerry jumped right up in the air. He lost his balance and fell off the old log. Then he tried to scramble away. He couldn't. Something was holding him by his tail and pinching it most dreadfully. Jerry was too frightened to think. He couldn't imagine what dreadful thing had got him. He pulled and pulled until it seemed to him that he must pull his tail out by the roots. Finally he twisted around to see what held him. It was a trap! The stout cruel jaws of it were gripping his tail about an inch from the end.

Then Jerry understood. He awakened to the truth, and it was a sad awakening. That stranger was a trapper after all. He had been putting those good things there for Jerry so that he would get so used to finding them that his suspicions would be put to sleep. When he was quite sure that Jerry had grown careless and was no longer suspicious of traps he had placed a trap on that old log just under water.

If Jerry had climbed up on that old log as usual he would have stepped in that trap and been caught by a leg. As it was, he had accidentally sprung it with his tail. Being caught by the tail was bad enough, but it would have been worse to have been caught by a leg, though Jerry didn't stop to think of this at the time. So far as he could see it didn't make any difference how he was caught as long as he was caught.

Poor Jerry! He was so frightened that for the time being he hardly noticed the pain.

The Kitchen Cabinet

VARIOUS GOOD THINGS

Beat three eggs, add one cupful of cottage cheese, nine tablespoonfuls of sugar, one cupful of freshly grated coconut, one teaspoonful of nutmeg, a cupful of coconut milk and a cupful of rich milk, or use as much of the milk as the nut contains and add enough cow's milk to make two cupfuls of liquid. Add a pinch of salt and more sugar if it is not sweet enough. A grating of lemon peel may be used instead of the nutmeg if that is not liked. Pour into a deep pastry lined pie plate and bake as for custard pie.

Crisp Molasses Cookies

Take two and one-half cupfuls of pastry flour, one-fourth cupful of bread flour, one teaspoonful each of baking powder and salt, two teaspoonfuls of ginger, then sift all again. Heat one cupful of molasses, add one-half cupful of butter and two teaspoonfuls of soda. Add the flour gradually and when well mixed, chill. Roll very thin and cut with a cooky cutter. Bake ten minutes.

Orange Sponge Cake

Beat two egg yolks with four tablespoonfuls of orange juice and one-half tablespoonful of lemon juice until thick; mix three-fourths of a cupful of sugar with one-half teaspoonful of grated orange rind and add gradually to the egg yolks; add the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and cut and fold in one cupful of flour, sifted four times with one-fourth of a teaspoonful of soda. Pour into a buttered cake pan and bake in a moderate oven.

Lemon Pie

Take one and one-half cupfuls of bread crumbs, cover with one cupful of boiling water and let stand until soft. Mix one cupful of sugar and one and one-half teaspoonfuls of cornstarch, add two egg yolks well beaten and the juice and grated rind of a lemon. Combine the mixtures and make in one crust.

ALL THE SAD

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WE TALK so much about the mass,
As though the lowly were a class,
The high exempted from all care.
I stood beside a casket where
A rich man lay. I heard the sob
Of her whom death had come to rob;
It seemed to sound, that sob of pain,
Much like a widow's in a lane.

However money may appear,
There is no difference in a tear
Nor in the heartbreak of a wife.
All men are rich, all who have life,
All men are poor, whom life has fled.
For who would rather lie there dead
Within a silver casket than
To walk abroad, earth's poorest man?

To one great class my heart goes out:
The lover who has cause to doubt,
The woman with a widow's weeds,
Whatever heart however bleeds—
And you will find them, rich or poor,
Within the mansion, on the moor.
I wish our talk of classes had
Room for them all, for all the sad.

Mount Ararat Twin-Peaked

Mount Ararat is a twin-peaked mountainous area situated where Armenia and Persia meet, south of the Caucausus range. It is noteworthy for its extensiveness rather than its height, the highest peak being something under 17,000 feet. The mountain is of volcanic origin. Its lower regions are inhabited and the summits have been repeatedly ascended and thoroughly explored. The usual statement that Noah's Ark rested on Mount Arrat has no foundation in the Hebrew text, which reads "on the mountains of Ararat." In ancient times Ararat was the name of a district in eastern Armenia, and sometimes also for all Armenia and the mountain ridge in the southern part of that country.

ROBOT CHARTS HOT BELT HIGH IN AIR

See New Possibilities for Speed Plane Route.

Sydney, Australia.—Radio experiments just completed by Dr. D. F. Martyn and Dr. O. O. Pulley of Sydney university have demonstrated the possibility of exploring the entire stratosphere for a distance of 150 miles above the earth without the necessity of further dangerous ascensions.

Except for the possibility of ascertaining whether the stratosphere constitutes a medium for speedy aerial travel, the two Sydney scientists are convinced that all necessary information about the earth's upper atmosphere can now be obtained from the earth itself.

Under the system invented and thoroughly demonstrated by Doctor Martyn, the upper air can now be probed by radio signals.

His new method gives accurate data on the amount of electrification, the amount of ozone and the temperature throughout the whole thickness of the upper air from 22 up to 150 miles.

Robot Does All Work

The new type apparatus which Doctor Martyn has perfected consists of a robot that sends out signals, catches the echoes, varies the wave lengths and plots all the information obtained on a tiny chart.

One of the first discoveries made by Doctor Martyn with his new invention was that there is still another cold layer of air far above the stratosphere cold layer recently reached by Russian and American balloonists. Between the two cold layers there lies sandwiched a warm layer and it is in this latter that Doctor Martyn thinks that stratosphere flying might become a possibility.

According to the radio records made by Doctor Martyn, temperatures again dip in the second stratosphere above the warm-zone layer, reaching a minimum at 50 miles above the earth's surface.

From these upward the temperatures increase till they end in a torrid zone at 150 miles of altitude.

Former Theory Upset

On this latter heated zone Doctor Martyn's radio reports contradict the belief of Professor Appleton, who was convinced this zone was hot only in summer. Martyn's experiments show that the seasonal drop is only from 1,300 to 1,000 degrees.

As a consequence, Doctor Martyn declares, that the earth is perpetually girdled by a fiery ring of inconceivably rarefied air, in which, necessarily, no human activity could ever be hoped for.

Measurements of the upper ozone show fluctuations exactly corresponding to barometric measures on the ground, but antedating them. As a consequence weather forecasts, Doctor Martyn declares, can be made from these radio probes of the air.

Australian authorities are so impressed with Doctor Martyn's findings that modern ozone measures are now being installed at the commonwealth weather bureau, the solar observatory at Canberra and at the installation of the council for scientific and industrial research.

Separation Suit Filed 28 Years Ago Dismissed

New York.—Twenty-eight years ago Mrs. Georgia Raynor sued Valentine R. Raynor for a separation, but neglected to prosecute it, and it was never placed on the court calendar.

Through all the years the husband sent her $8 a week for maintenance of herself and a child. But recently he moved in supreme court to have the wife's suit dismissed.

Mrs. Raynor, now 54, living in Columbus, Ohio, appeared before Justice Louis A. Valente to oppose the husband's motion and pleaded that she was without means of support.

Faced with the unusual circumstances the justice regretfully granted the husband's motion, adding:

"While I am granting the motion to dismiss, I am doing so with a strong hope that he will continue to make his remittances to his wife as heretofore in the spirit which can no longer be deemed one of compulsion, and in vindication of the opinion the court on the whole has formed of his basic sense of honor."

Canada Builds Largest of Steam Locomotives

Montreal.—The world's largest streamlined steam locomotive, 94 feet long, weighing 650,000 pounds, and capable of attaining a speed of 100 miles an hour, has been completed here.

The engine is one of four being constructed for the Canadian National railway, and will be the first "streamliner" placed in operation in Canada. It is known as the No. 6400. The design follows the streamlining plan developed by the national research council at Ottawa and the motive department of the C. N. R. It was selected after an exhaustive series of wind-tunnel and other tests.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By L. L. STEVENSON

Ira Vail, former star auto race driver, was recalling old times. Among his memories is one of sailing through a barbed wire fence, which practically denuded him, and landing in the ample lap of a fat lady. He came to before the woman who acted as a cushion recovered her poise, and was bundled hurriedly into an ambulance. In the mad dash to the hospital, he was ten times more scared than he ever had been in a race! Such incidents were not uncommon in the lives of racing drivers of former days and were looked on as "funny," rather than grim. Vail chuckled when he recalled how Louis Disbrow, after a spill, had been carted to the morgue just as good as dead, only to sit up on his slab and throw the attendants into confusion by demanding a cigarette. Then there was Ralph De Palma whose car careened off a New England track. He was picked up with a cornstalk through his stomach and was thought to be fatally injured. But he married his nurse.

• • •

Ivy Overholtzer, of Los Angeles, has the most novel combination around race tracks, Vail believes. He operates an undertaking establishment and turns his hearse into an ambulance merely by changing the signs. He's a great pal of the drivers.

"People have asked me many times what makes a man become a racing driver," Vail said. "I think the best answer is a crack made by one of the boys—'you don't have to be crazy but it helps.' "

• • •

This doesn't concern Vail or other race drivers but it seems to fit in at this particular point. An out of town couple was enjoying a ride through Central park in one of those throw-backs to old days that have their stand near the Plaza—a horse and carriage. The passengers noticed that the driver called his horse Frank and finally asked him what had caused him to give his animal such a name.

"You see," replied the driver, flicking the animal's ear lightly with the whiplash, "my best friend's name was Frank."

• • •

Bob Hope, who played in vaudeville theaters all over the country before appearing in the "Follies" and other B'way musicals, believes that the present generation has forgotten that form of entertainment. Says Hope:

"The young folks of today think that 'next-to-closing' is a bankruptcy sale, that a 'sketch' is a drawing and, for all they know, the 'Two Black Crows' were a couple of birds that stole corn from farmers. They think a 'pit musician' is a guy who plays in a mine and when they hear the expression 'working in one,' they ask, 'One what?' To them 'bow music' is what comes from a violin and they believe that only a sheriff can 'stop the show.' The only 'acts' they know about are those passed by congress and to them a 'double' is a horse parlay."

• • •

Speaking of terms, it seems that swing music, now so popular, has a lexicon of its own. For the following glossary I'm indebted to John L. Gould in the Herald-Tribune: "Jamster," improviser on the melody against a rhythmic united front; "swing," the art of jamming; "jitterbug," swing fan; "digit truckin'," the art of manipulating an instrument; "long underwear gang," stooges of the old-fashioned crooner; "laid it in the groove," got hot, went to town; "spank the skin," play the drum; "licks," hot bars; "gang o' horn," plenty of trumpet; "long-haired," old-fashioned; "growl," trumpet in agony; "iron horn," trumpet; "corn-fed stuff," what the Pilgrims danced to.

• • •

Oh yes, on Great Lakes vessels, the meal gong is known as the "hash hammer."

• • •

Subway eavesdropping: "Say, he stretches things so that if he was taking the ferry to Staten island he'd tell you he was going on a 'round the world cruise."

Latest Wrist Watch Has Musical Alarm

Leipzig, Germany.—A novel wrist watch now appears with an alarm chime, ringing at any desired hour. The watch is conventional in size and design and inconspicuous.

By setting the tiny, but persistent alarm at any desired time, the wearer is reminded of engagements, late callers of the passing time. The alarm watch was demonstrated at the Leipzig fair.

Family Pride

By NELL SAUNDERS

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

A HANDSOME, expensive looking but dusty automobile slowed down on the main street of the little village of Brompton. The driver called to the only citizen who happened to be in sight, Ben Jenkins.

"Say, young feller," called he, "what sort of a place is it out there on the turnpike? Can you get a decent meal there?"

"On the turnpike?" repeated Ben Jenkins.

The driver-owner consulted the guide book. "White house at first turn to right on Romilly turnpike after leaving Brompton," he read slowly.

"Why, that would be the Romilly house. Are you sure that is what the books says?"

"Those are the words."

Ben, who kept up his family home in Brompton and spent his vacation there, walked on and presently encountered Mr. Carson, postmaster of the town.

"Funny thing," said Ben; I met some people who spoke about having meals at a white house at the first turn to the right on Romilly turnpike after leaving Brompton. That's the Romillys', isn't it?"

"Sure," said the postmaster. "Didn't you hear?"

"They haven't sold the place, have they?" inquired Ben.

"Sold, nothing. The how and the wherefore is, so folks say, that they've lost their money—every darned cent of it, and Miss Nancy had to open up the place as a kind of roadhouse for tourists."

Later Ben entered the Romilly house and took his seat at a small table. Presently a white clad waitress approached him with a list of dishes offered for that day's dinner. Ben took it with a queer thrill —it was unmistakably written by Nancy Romilly. The solitary meal followed but Nancy did not appear. After it was over Ben offered his card to the maid, and asked her to take it to Miss Romilly.

Nancy was alone in the old dining room. She rose from her desk and came swiftly to him with outstretched hands.

"How amazingly well you are looking," Ben exclaimed.

"Yes," laughed Nancy. "Work seems to agree with me."

"But why didn't you tell me? I might have helped you."

"Oh, it was too late by the time I found out," said Nancy. "Besides, it's been a wonderful experience. Aunt Susan is very feeble, now. She keeps to her room with her attendant and really doesn't know. And the work and the people keep me from loneliness. I really don't know how it will all end—"

"Don't talk about such things," Ben burst out. "Nancy, Nancy—if this had only come sooner. I was in love with you—I always have been, but I never dared to ask you, because I was afraid of your money and your pride—"

"No, Ben, I confess the Romilly pride is slipping away. I've learned a lot in five years, and this little business venture, which really has been absurdly profitable, has taught me that people are pretty much the same wherever you find them. No, Ben, the Romilly fortune has remained and I'm adding to it, but the old Romilly pride—"

"Then you didn't lose your money?" gasped Bob Jenkins.

"Why, that's the joke. People don't think I lost my money, do they? Well, that makes it all the more interesting. No, some one of the editors of the Guide Book just made a funny mistake. Probably thought our house looked like a roadhouse and assumed it was. So the people began to come, and they were hungry and it was such fun feeding them and so hard to explain the mistake every time, that I just started in."

"I never would have come to see you if I hadn't believed them," said Ben.

Nancy Romilly leaned forward and placed a pretty, capable hand over one of Ben's.

"Perhaps I could manage to lose it—if—"

"You really are—glad that I came back?" stammered Ben.

Nancy laughed and said, "What do you think, Old Romantic?"

Small Purchases

Shopping habits of American women are indicated from a novel direction, in the analysis of 30,000 weighed purchase in grocery and butcher shops, made by a scale company. Examined from the viewpoint of price, as indicated on the computing scales, it is found that the most common purchase at the butcher's costs 35 cents, the next most common 25 cents and the third most common 30 cents. At the grocery, women most often make a 5-cent purchase, secondly a 10-cent purchase and thirdly a 15-cent purchase. More than half the weighed grocery sales are below 12 cents, more than half the butcher's sales are below 36 cents. The study emphasizes the importance of honest weight to consumers.

Distinction

There is a certain difference in owing money and owing a grudge. One tries to pay his grudge.

FAMOUS HEADLINE HUNTER
FLOYD GIBBONS'
ADVENTURERS' CLUB
Hello Everybody

"Hornets and Bullets"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

CROWD over there, boys and girls, and make room for a new Distinguished Adventurer in this club of ours. He is Ralph Gewehr of South Orange, N. J.

I've got to admit, right at the start, that Ralph's yarn is a stinger. It happened to him in August, 1934, up in the Adirondacks, when Ralph and his pal, Billy, started out with a couple of .22 calibre rifles to hunt eagles.

Well, sir, that's a good enough start for any adventure. An eagle is a pretty tough proposition, and a .22 calibre rifle is a pretty small piece of hardware to try to handle one with. If they'd found any eagles on that little hunting trip of theirs, they'd have had plenty of adventure. And I guess if they hadn't run across anything more dangerous than a cottontail rabbit they'd have had an adventure, too.

Those lads were slated for trouble. Their numbers were up—especially Ralph's. Anything they did that day would have been wrong, and when Billy took a pot shot at the only game in sight, he started something worse than a whole flock of eagles and a couple of buzzards thrown in for good measure.

Boys Find Hornet's Nest Is Dangerous Target.

With their rifles in their arms, Ralph and Billy headed up the trail on foot. They trudged up to the top of Blue Ledge, a distance of ten miles from the summer camp of Ralph's folks at North river. The boys planned to spend the night in the mountains, like real hunters, and look for adventure. They were too tired to go after eagles by the time they arrived, but hornets were another thing.

Now a hornet is pretty far from an eagle, but a hornet's nest makes a nice target—if you don't care what you shoot at—and Billy didn't care. He let fly at that hornet's nest and hit it smack in the center and then adventure began in earnest. Ralph says those hornets came out of that nest like a cloud of buzzing smoke. He thinks all the hornets in the world must have been in it from the way they went for him. He took one look at the flying circus and then hit the trail as fast as he could go. But it wasn't fast enough. They dove at him in mass formation and kept right on his tail.

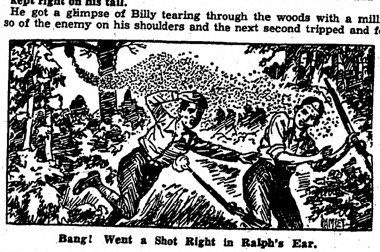
He got a glimpse of Billy tearing through the woods with a million or so of the enemy on his shoulders and the next second tripped and fell.



Bang! Went a Shot Right in Ralph's Ear.

Bang! went a shot right in his ear. He thought it was Billy's rifle for a moment because his had fallen out of his hand. Then he felt a stinging sensation in his side. That must have been a big hornet, he thought, from the way it felt.

Ralph Is Shot by His Own Rifle.

The hornets were stinging him everywhere, but none of them hurt as much as the one in his side. He put his hand on the spot and drew it away covered with blood! Ralph was shot! His own rifle had exploded on hitting the ground and the bullet must be in his body!

Hornets were forgotten in the face of this discovery. The situation was deadly serious. Here was a boy shot in the side and he was ten miles from civilization. Besides, both boys were already tired from their long walk. And, to make matters worse, the only doctor was eight miles more beyond Ralph's cabin. They could make that last eight miles in his mother's car, but how would Ralph ever survive the walk?

Ralph says their Boy Scout training came immediately to mind. The thing to do in case of a sudden shock, they recalled, was to apply heat, externally, internally and eternally. So Billy built a fire, heated some water and made coffee. Ralph drank the coffee, which heated him internally. Then Billy wrapped him in the blankets for the external heating. The boys washed the wound with hot water, bound it up as well as they could with their handkerchiefs, and started on the long trek back home.

Wounded Lad Makes Heroic 10-Mile Trek.

Did you ever try to walk ten miles with a bullet in your side? Ralph advises you not to. In addition to the mental torture of not knowing how badly he was wounded, Ralph suffered intensely from the heat. It was mid-August and hot enough without the blankets and the coffee, and he had to trudge along bundled up like an Indian papoose.

That walk, Ralph says, was a nightmare. He figures he must have lost at least ten pounds and laid the foundations for a headful of gray hair. But he kept on going, even if he did think that each step would be his last. Finally they got back to the camp where Ralph's dad had a car.

It was late at night when the boys finally staggered into the doctor's office after a ride that shook the daylights out of Ralph. The doctor looked at the wound and ordered him to the hospital. Then began another ride that Ralph will remember all his life. It was forty miles, but Billy drove it almost as fast as those hornets could fly.

State Troopers Ask the Boys Searching Questions

At the hospital another surprise was in store for them. State Troopers—called by the doctor, as they always do in cases of gunshot wounds—met the boys and questioned them. Ralph says they seemed to think that he and Billy had been shooting at each other or holding somebody up. But they cleared themselves of that suspicion and Ralph went on the operating table.

An operation is an adventure in itself, but Ralph's was one with a happy ending. The bullet—which, fortunately, was not a high powered one—had entered his side, and, striking a rib, had glanced off and missed the vital organs. The doctors, after an X-ray had been taken, picked the slug out of his shoulder and when Ralph woke up there was his mother, more scared than he was. Billy had found her and told her "Ralph had been shot."

Ralph was out of the hospital in a few days and the wound healed up in a few weeks, but, he says, he hasn't been eagle hunting since.

Darwin's Early Life

Darwin's father was a physician and wished him to adopt that profession. At the age of 16 he entered the University of Edinburgh, but disliked medicine, and later entered Christ's college, Cambridge, to prepare for the ministry. There he became acquainted with Henslow, the professor of botany, who did much to shape his career. The proficiency that Darwin displayed in every department of natural science won him such distinction that he at last obtained his father's consent that he should not enter the church.

Comets Return to Sun

Most comets return to the sun after a period of years. Biela's comet, on its return in 1846, split into two parts, and on its next visit came back as twins — two comets were traveling in almost the same orbit formerly occupied by one and on the same time schedule. There are several records of such multiple comets. The converse of this phenomenon is even more common. They break up. What causes this is unknown. Disintegration probably is caused by the same forces that cause them to split.

Debunking War's Romance

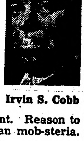
SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—Mrs. "Bud" Lighton, one of the smartest women on this or any other coast, has started a symposium of suggestions for the promotion of national sanity the next time diplomats or politicians, profiteers or professional sword rattlers, or all of these types combined, try to rush a country into futile and uncalled for war—which classification covers most wars.

Her peace formula includes these ideas:



Irvin S. Cobb

No brass bands whatsoever. No speech-making by stay-at-home orators. No recruiting except by men who have themselves enlisted for active service. No brass buttons. No shiny buckles, no gaudy regalia. Respect for the flag and, if necessary, all proper defense for it, but no cheap waving of it beforehand. No blatant emotional displays being turned off or on like a hydrant. Reason to be invoked rather than mob-steria.

* * *

Red Baiters' Field Day

A GENTLEMAN in Iowa, who presumably inquired into the matter, asserts that in this country are upwards of 4,000,000 aliens who entered illegally and that the vast majority of these —over 90 per cent, are on relief. While we're fighting corn borers and tobacco worms and boll weevils with government funds, wouldn't it be a grand idea to turn a lot of G-men loose to round up these smuggled-in human parasites and ship them back where they came from?

Locally speaking, I'm told that the average foreign-born agitator, ostensibly seeking to organize the casual workers of this state, is really a red agent spreading communistic doctrines under cover of his seeming activities in the industrial field. In other words, his real aim is not to unionize labor but to disunionize America.

Watson, the fly-swatter and the insect poison—quick!

* * *

The League's Big Moment

AT LAST here's a chance for the League of Nations to function. For the poor thing it has been an uphill pull to slide down hill so steadily, with each descending step toward the bottom marked by disappointment and failure. It had almost as tough sledding as a smooth-faced, bearded lady would have trying to get a job in a museum.

But now, the league can punish at least one small nation for persistently breaking the otherwise solid front presented by nearly all the important European powers. Surely, ere long, it will hang some sort of penalty on little, simple-minded Finland for regularly paying installments on her debt to us.

This disruptive thing cannot possibly be permitted to go on forever when the sacred principles of dishonor, ingratitude and repudiation are all at stake!

* * *

Paging the Black Legion

IT IS passing strange that the Black Legion is so slow about offering Herr Hitler honorary membership in the mother-lodge up in Michigan. Both parties seem to feel alike on the subject of persons of color.

Meanwhile just so long as they didn't try to stop him from shaking those nimble feet our brown-skinned flying squirrel, Jesse Owens, should worry because a dictator refuses to shake his hand.

With Metcalfe and other dark colleagues helping him pile up so commanding a lead for the American team in the Olympic games, it's almost time for the band to play "All Gawd's Chillun Got Wings."

Synthetic Spanish Hidalgoes

AND the famous Santa Barbara fiesta fiesting on every side and yours truly looking as much like a Spanish hidalgo as anybody born in McCracken county, Ky., could be expected to look.

Plenty of other disturbing occurrences, too. Heat wave still hanging on in spots. Fresh European complications on account of the Spanish mess.

Down at his home on the range where seldom is heard a discouraging word—except from Washington, D. C.—we behold Uncle Jack Garner, with his head over the corral bars, beginning to moo plaintively.

And now, on top of all that, it seems we must start worrying about Tommy Manville's next wife or wives, as the case may be—and probably will.

I do wish Tommy could see his way clear to hold off till fall. If memory serves me aright, the fall always was his favorite marrying season, anyhow.

Household Questions

Custard pies should first be started to bake in a hot oven to set the crust, then the heat of the oven should be quickly reduced so that the custard may cook slowly.

Cattle Imports Peril U. S. Herds

Foreign Beef Is Feared as Disease Carrier to U. S. Livestock.

By FRANK RIDGEWAY

Farmers in the United States are jealous of the disease-free condition of their herds and flocks and insist that stringent measures be maintained to prevent the reintroduction of foot-and-mouth disease and other human and animal plagues through increasing importations of foreign animals and meats.

Livestock producers have become alarmed over persistent efforts being made in Washington to lower embargo bars that aid in keeping out highly contagious foreign diseases. Through their organizations farmers and ranchmen oppose the proposal of high ranking New Dealers to change restrictions now imposed on Argentine imports. Present regulations forbid the importation of meat products from countries where rinderpest or foot-and-mouth disease exist. Federal officials propose changes that would permit the re-zoning of the Argentine and admission of meats from zones declared free of these two maladies.

Farmers' representatives say that "the efforts to break down the present embargo are wholly based on economic grounds, and are pursued with a careless disregard of possible grave consequences." Lives of human beings, as well as cattle, hogs and sheep, are involved. Foreign meat is not needed; farmers in this country even now find it difficult to sell, at a satisfactory profit, the meat animals they produce.

Officials of the American National Live Stock Association believe "no one can fairly claim that imports of meat products from any zone of Argentina under present conditions would not constitute a dangerous threat to our herds and flocks."

They point out that the disease-free condition of live stock in this country has been attained at great expense. "That condition," says the association, "should be maintained in the future at all costs. No diplomatic coup, no international intrigue, no pressure from foreign-trade enthusiasts or well-meaning but misdirected free-trade advocates should be allowed to undermine it."

Farmers wonder why this nation should spend millions to clean up diseases and then have foreign trade policies that threaten to undo all the good work. The United States is the only nation that has ever successfully stamped out foot-and-mouth disease.

Western cattlemen cannot forget the big foot-and-mouth disease outbreak in California in 1924 when nearly 100,000 of their cattle, sheep, hogs and goats were destroyed to stop it.

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

I have repeatedly warned motorists about defects in driving equipment.

About 7 per cent of the motor vehicles in fatal accidents were reported defective in some particular. Defective brakes and improper lights appear most frequently on the report.

Motor trucks constitute about 13.5 per cent of all motor vehicles and they are involved in about 70 percent of all fatal acciaccidents. Since 1927 private car operators involved in fatal accidents have increased about 40 per cent, while truck operators have declined about 2 per cent, bus operators 25 per cent, and taxi cab operators 45 per cent.

It pays to keep your car in good physical condition. There seems to be no reason for defective brakes. How can a driver leave the garage in the morning knowing that his brakes are defective.

These things should be adjusted and not added to the cripples that are on our highways.

Mr. and Mrs. John A. Swanson and children of Pontiac, Mich. visited over the week end at the A. Bennes home.

Railroad Jim
THE COLUMN CONDUCTOR
Says . . .

Freight trains nowadays act like express specials. New freight schedules are so fast, I sometimes wonder if everything has to be delivered day before yesterday.

Many of our passenger trains are running faster schedules, too. Well, one thing is sure. We make faster runs, but the first railroad commandment is still "Safety First." That's one rule they won't change.

Western railroads and allied industries provided jobs for 750,000 workers last year. Some of them live in our town. Good neighbors.

Passenger fares are now the lowest in history with substantial reductions on round trips. And no more surcharge for riding in sleeping cars.

This new Free pick-up-and-delivery of less than carload freight—I heard some traveling salesmen talking about it on the train yesterday. They said it saves shippers a lot of money and centers all responsibility on the railroad. The railroad picks up the freight at shipper's door and delivers to receiver's door. Of course, local delivery men get the haul from door-to-car and car-to-door at both ends. The railroad handles the whole transaction.

When railroads are busy, I notice towns along the railroad are prosperous. The merchants put more ads in the newspapers.

We are proud of railroad achievements, appreciate the public's good will and increased patronage, and pledge continued progress.

Sunday School Rally Day

Sunday School Rally Day next Sunday afternoon. We want all the teachers and pupils of the Sunday school to be present. This is really our first day of Sunday school. On that day the children will be enrolled and promoted. It is very important that all the children be there. To the children who come that day, we will give a Rally Day pin and will also serve free ice cream and cake.

All are asked to meet at the church at 2 p. m. and then we will decide if we are to go out in the woods. We invite all the parents and friends of the children in Sunday school to come and we will serve them Free coffee and cake. We are asking the ladies to bring cake and as there will be no formal request given for this we are sure they will cooperate in this matter. A brief program is being planned.

We plan to have a merit system whereby those who come every Sunday, including the first Sunday, will receive a merit at the close of the year for their perfect attendance.

We invite all the children of the community to come to our Sunday school this year whether or not the parents belong to the congregation.

Gov. Olson Died Saturday

Governor Floyd Bjornsterne Olson Olson, three times governor of Minnesota, died at 8:29 p. m. Saturday at the Mayo hospital in Rochester.

The 44 year old chief executive was in a coma for two hours before his death, which ended an eight month fight against the ravages of cancer.

At his bedside when he died were Mrs. Olson and their daughter, Patricia, 15, both of whom broke down.

Olson was the first Farmer-Laborite to be elected governor of Minnesota, winning the office in the state where the party had it's origin.

FLOYD BJORNSTENE OLSON

From humble birth he rose to political power and national importance. He was born to Norwegian and Swedish parents on November 13, 1891, in a little house in north Minneapolis.

His father was tall, deep voiced Paul A. Olson, who came to the United States from his native country Trondhjem, Norway, when he was 21 years old, and became a lumberjack and later a freight handler.

His mother, born Ida Maria Nelson, had immigrated from Varmland, Sweden, to Minneapolis, where she obtained work as a domestic. The couple were married in Minneapolis and still live there quiet and unasuming.

Governor Olson was married to Ada Krejce in Minneapolis in 1917.

In 1921 he was appointed to the office of Hennepin County attorney when the office became vacant thru the ouster of the county attorney there. In 1922 he was elected for a four year term. In 1924 he was defeated for the governorship of Minnesota but continued as county attorney. In 1926 he was reelected as county attorney again for four years.

1930, 1932 and 1934 he was elected governor of Minnesota and had almost served his six years when death called him away.

Funeral services were conducted from the Minneapolis City Auditorium on Wednesday afternoon and a crowd of about twenty thousand people attended.

Col. O. C. Brenna of Middle River, Minn., wishes to announce that he is ready to take care of all sales where a good experienced auctioneer is needed. adv.

The Weather

Another real heavy rain fell here last Friday afternoon and the country is starting to look real good now. The pastures have improved greatly and the cows are producing the best they have all summer.

Held 4-H Achievement Day

The Grygla, Holt, Honor Bright and Wildwood 4.H clubs assembled at Holt on Friday for their annual fall achievement day.

As part of the morning canning demonstrations were given by Eleanor and Vivian Larson. These demonstrations, as well as all home economics projects, were judged by Miss Thelma Solie, Pennington county 4.H agent.

In the afternoon the livestock was judged by Mr. Howard Grow also of Pennington county.

The main event of the afternoon program was the style revue contest for sewing girls. After this parade, Miss Solie and Mr. Grow announced the winneers for the day and Mr. T. A. Frickson, state club leader, addressed the groups, stressing the the value of the 4-H club as an organization for boys and girls.

The final event of the day was a parade in which all 4-H members took part.

Mr. Albert Locken, Wildwood club leader and Mr. Arvid Carlson of Middle River led the big parade. They were followed by members taking the calf club work Then came the style revue girls and lastly, the remainder of the "4-H family" from these four 4-H clubs.

A list of those winning awards will be published next week.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Fricker and Boy returned home on Sunday from Bemidji where they spent two weeks vacation at the lake.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Nordgren and daughter of Hunter, N. D. spent the week end at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Elliott.

Vance Surmo from New Flushing, N. Y. spent the last week and a half visiting at the home of his sister Mrs. J. H. Knutson and the home of his brother Carl Surmo of St. Hilaire and other friends and relatives ~~here~~.

He didn't want to walk all day, and he did want to see what the other papers had to say of last night's events in the Cocoanut Bar. At Fifth avenue, therefore, he turned into the public library. The reports were much alike—"Night club proprietor killed resisting arrest" and "The indictment against Jay Rogers, now held for the Kelly murder, probably will be dismissed today." Barry sat, almost alone, in the "newspaper room," turning the case over in his mind. Then he asked for old files of one of the tabloids.

He was nearly an hour finding an account of the Winslow wedding. Without any definite knowledge of the date, it was a bit like looking for the proverbial needle in a haystack. Barry's curiosity was rewarded, at last, when he stumbled upon a pictorial front page headed, "Lawyer Weds Convict's Widow." The ceremony had taken place at St. Stephen's. There were pictures of the church and of the convict—"George Selby (inset) and Love Nest Where He Took His Bride." The smudgy little "inset" might have been a portrait of Nicholas Murray Butler or Jack Dempsey, and the house might have been any house, anywhere. There was an obviously faked photograph of a holdup, and an obviously genuine one of "Mr. and Mrs. Winslow Leaving St. Stephen's." "Gosh," Barry reflected: "no wonder Mrs. Winslow had a nervous breakdown!"

The story, on the second page, was in the best tabloid tradition. "Five years ago," it began, "Peter Winslow, obscure young attorney, secured the acquittal of George Selby, charged with participating in the robbery of a candy store in the Bronx. Yesterday, Peter Winslow, rich and famous criminal lawyer, and George Selby's widow were the principal figures in what was to have been a secret ceremony at St. Stephen's."

The present Mrs. Winslow had run away with George Selby while he was a cadet in a military school. They had come to New York, rented the "love nest," and been "blissfully happy" until Selby ran out of money, and was compelled to take his wife to a boarding house. He had been arrested there, for the candy store robbery, in April, 1921. Peter Winslow had got him off, but, the following June, he was caught in another robbery in Philadelphia, and sentenced to a long term in the State Penitentiary. With two other convicts, "Lefty" Miller and "Mugs" Scanlan, he had escaped in October, 1923. Penniless, the men "staged a hold-up that same night in Fairmount Park. The victim called for help, and Selby killed him. Scanlan was shot dead by a police officer, and Selby, attempting to get away, jumped into the river, and was drowned. His body was found two weeks later, entangled in an anchor chain."

Winslow had given Mrs. Selby work in his office, and "three years after Selby's death, love culminated in the ceremony at St. Stephen's."

That explained a good deal, Barry thought, remembering the soft, round, pink little woman with worried eyes. It explained Peter's protective attitude. It might explain his quick interest in the Rogers case, in which, Barry had told Winslow, Peggy had been "putting up such a game fight to make a man of her husband."

"That sort of thing always gets me," Peter had observed. "A woman tied up to some man who's not worthy of her, and in love with him."

Peter's "Julie" had been in love with her first husband, then. And he with her, evidently, to judge by what the tabloids said of their happiness. "Must have been something good in that chap," Barry reasoned. "Probably realized what his wife was trying to do for him. We're a curious mixture."

He was still brooding over curious mixtures, and other things, when a clock struck somewhere, and reminded him that, by now, there might be a message as to young Ridder's release awaiting him at his hotel.

There wasn't.

All Thursday afternoon Barry sat in his room and, at five o'clock, he called Peter's secretary. "Nothing definite yet," she informed him. "The District Attorney's making the motion all right, but it'll be tomorrow now before anything comes of it."

Against his better judgment, then, Barry phoned Harwood. "Don't worry," the city editor said. "Have you seen tonight's Globe? Whole first page one loud yell for this kid's release. They'll be so glad to get him off their hands—"

In spite of his friendliness, Barry noticed that Ernie didn't say, "Come on down; we've something else for you." Nor even, "Of course, we'll expect you to cover Rogers getting out of jail." Why should he? "The big beat" was Harwood's "beat," not Barry's and, anyway, the old man would be at his desk the day after tomorrow. Harwood did say that, at last. "You'd better see him. I'll phone you when. Probably not before Monday. He'll be pretty busy for a day or two. Of course, you'll be around for your salary on Saturday. Might look me up then."

He was still on the pay roll, at least. That was important, what with overdrafts and hotel bills, and such things. Sober reflection, backed by experience, had persuaded Barry that he couldn't get much on his wardrobe. The studs and cuff-links were rather cheap stuff. He had sold an overcoat once—in this very town—for three dollars.

Saturday's money would just square the bank account. As for the hotel bill—"Well, I'll give them my clothes," Barry decided, "and I'll have something left in my jeans when I move out of here."

He phoned Peggy again, and then dined frugally and went back to his room. Step by step, he went over its details, seeing everything in the new light cast by the events of the past few hours. At midnight, for the fifth or sixth time, he re-read the story in the Globe. "Well, that's that," he said aloud, tossing the paper into the wastebasket and winding his silver wristwatch. "Morano's dead, young Ridder'll be free tomorrow, old Ridder'll be home Saturday, and that's that. Wonder where I'll be a week from now."

It didn't matter much. "Nothing matters much," he told himself again, dwelling on Pat's phrase, "Not without Pat, it doesn't. She's a grand girl. Out of my class, though. A week from now, she'll be playing tennis and going over to dinner at the Ridders. Wonder if Peg'll be there. Wonder what's going to happen to those two young people?"

In Friday morning's paper, under "Personal Intelligence," he found a mention of the Winslows. "Mr. and Mrs. Peter Winslow are sailing on the Aquitania next Wednesday," the item read, "for an extended tour of the Continent." That was that, too. Barry's drama was ending with all its principal characters disposed of, as well-made drama should end.

Winslow's secretary called him just before noon. "Mr. Winslow wants me to tell you that Rogers will be free in an hour or two."

"How's Mrs. Winslow?"

"And the Hambidges?"

"No; they went back to Southampton last night."

Once more, that was that, Barry thought, getting his hat and making tracks for the subway. He reached the Tombs well in advance of official orders for the release of "Jay Rogers."

"Maybe I Was," Ridder Admitted.

It was nearly five o'clock, indeed, when "Jay Rogers" appeared, looking very white and haggard, and the last train had left for Southampton. "You can talk to Peggy on the phone," Barry told him, "and then you'd better have dinner with me, and a good night's rest at my hotel. The Bremen gets in very early, and you'll want to be on the dock."

Jack looked at him quizzically.

"Will I."

"Won't you?"

"I suppose so. I'd like to see my mother."

"I'd like to see her myself," Barry said. "She's been swell to you, all right."

"Yes."

At dinner, Jack declared, "I'll take that job on the paper now, if my father'll give it to me."

"Why not?"

"You started me thinking. I can see the old man's viewpoint. He's got to be decent to Peggy, though. It's both of us, or neither. . . . What's going to happen to you?"

"Search me!"

"Look here," Jack blurted. "I'm Ridder now. Who needs to know that I was ever Jay Rogers? I've been at Southampton all the time, writing letters to my mother, and everything. You've been Barry Gilbert, working on the Globe, and likely to go on working there. What's the matter with that?"

"Willetts is the matter with it," Barry answered—"Willetts, and Evans, and Winslow, and all the camera-clickers on the newspapers. There've been several pictures of you already. I can't understand why you weren't identified long ago."

"Maybe I was," Ridder admitted. "Your old college chums don't exactly run after you while you're in jail. They don't get to be college chums until you're in Who's Who."

"Anyway," Barry continued, "your scheme's out. I want to come clean. Don't ask me why. I was going to run away a week ago, and I couldn't make it. 'Gentlemen don't do that,' I said. I've got a new picture of myself as a gentleman."

"That's what does the trick, I guess," Jack speculated. "Most of us spend our lives trying to live up to the portraits of ourselves that hang over our mental mantel-pieces. Yours was of a reckless, devil-may-care young vagabond. Then you moved into a house, and company, where that picture didn't fit. You hung up a new one, and you've got to live up to that now. It was the same way with me. The picture of myself I liked was of an irresponsible, slightly dissipated young genius. The family portraits didn't appeal to me. Yours did—your new picture of yourself, I mean. I'm going to try to be like that the rest of my life."

They were lingering over cigars and coffee now.

"What is a gentleman?" Barry asked.

Jack smiled.

"The fellow who gets the right portrait."

"I suppose so," Barry said. "Family and clothes didn't make you one—not when you were getting drunk and forging checks. I wasn't one when I took another man's name, and money, and made up to a girl who thought I was somebody else. . . . Pictures over mantel-pieces. That's another word for tradition, I guess. The tradition that makes men defend women, and go down on sinking ships, and all that sort of thing. When that stops being our picture of ourselves, 'God help all of us,' I told Pat once . . . Come on; let's go to a movie!"

CHAPTER XII

The next afternoon—around three o'clock—Harwood phoned.

"The old man wants to see you. Here at his office. I'd come quick if I were you."

So Jack had told him.

Or Evans.

"I'd be glad if you'd tell Willetts, and the rest," Barry had said to the chauffeur. "It'll save me introducing the subject." It would, too. He had dreaded his first few moments with Ridder—beginning his story with a pair of cold, calm eyes boring into him. They would be cold eyes; he felt sure of that.

And they were.

"The big chief" sat at his big desk in a big, richly-furnished office with a big door and a little one. The big double door opened into the reception room. Barry entered through that, and found himself facing Ridder and the smaller single door behind him.

Ridder was reading a radiogram, and he went on reading. A tall, thin man, with New England written all over him. A youngish man for his age, which might have been fifty. He wore gold-rimmed spectacles. His long, thin, absolutely straight mouth was higher at the right end, and his right eye was longer and narrower than his left. He had a sharp chin, and a thin nose, and a broad forehead, with thin, graying, sandyish hair. The kind of man who could say "Good morning" as though that ended the discussion.

"All right," Barry repeated to himself. "I'll take my medicine. It'll soon be over, anyway. He isn't going to give a damn what I did for his son. If I can say anything to make it easier for those two youngsters and Jacky—Wonder what's back of that little door."

He was still wondering when the big chief looked up.

"You're Gilbert?"

"Yes, sir."

"Alias Ridder, eh?"

"Yes, sir."

They were cold eyes. Very cold.

Mostly to end the silence, Barry said, "I suppose your son told you."

"Nobody told me. I've known all about you for two months."

"You've known—"

"I heard my wife's talk with my son the day before we sailed. Through the door to my bedroom. I heard her invite him to Southampton. Next morning, I arranged with Willetts to give me a full report of his doings there."

"And—?"

Barry was thinking in monosyllables.

"And, in his first letter, he mentioned your red hair."

Barry grinned.

"He also mentioned your taking a hundred dollar bill out of an envelope addressed to Mrs. Ridder."

The grin faded.

"You haven't made a move that I haven't known about."

He waited.

"Why didn't you have me arrested?"

"Because I knew that my son was in prison, accused of this murder. I read about that less than an hour after I'd satisfied myself that you weren't my son. Jay Rogers. I'd had a man following him all about Florida. The man's report agreed perfectly with the newspaper account of Jay Rogers."

"Still—"

"What was I to do? Sail? The doctor said that was out of the question. I wired Harwood 'Rogers didn't kill Kelly. Find out who did.' Twenty-four hours later, I knew you were on the Globe, and why, and that you'd succeeded in interesting Winslow."

Our Early Windows

Our windows originally were divided into small panes, because only small panes could be made economically. Glass was blown like toy balloons, and, naturally, only small areas could be cut from these glass globes to fit in a flat frame. When the art of glassmaking made large panes possible the tendency was to clear our windows of all cross pieces and have large unobstructed surfaces.

Source of Olive Oil

Olive oil comes, as its name implies, from the olive, the fruit of small tree which grows in southern Europe. In its unripe state, the olive is eaten between the courses of a dinner. When ripe, it yields olive oil, which has many uses—both internal and external. It is even used as a substitute for butter in some countries bordering on the Mediterranean.

On Success for Women—

Are They Failures Because of Lack of Something to Do?

IN A recently published symposium of twenty-eight authorities on the present status of women, one well-known writer tries to explain women's failure. She says it is natural for women to fail. For "it is out of the necessity for food and shelter and for providing for the family that most men have fashioned success, and the lack of this insistent necessity has been a great handicap on the activities of women."

"What they have had to do," we are told, "women have often done very well indeed. Crises of illness in their children call forth from mothers efforts that in other phases would be termed heroic. Likewise, during the World war, women faced danger and loss gallantly, and they were happier than at any other time in this Twentieth century. But there are today so few things that women have got to do."

If our readers find that ridiculous, I am glad they agree with me, says a noted writer on subjects pertaining to women. To call women failures because more men are in "Who's Who," because less women than men have made positions for themselves in the professions and industries of the country, is preposterous on the face of it. It leaves entirely out of account the fact that success cannot be measured by rule of thumb, that it is a relative term. Suppose a woman who might have made a successful office manager, a well-known author, or a famous psychologist, chooses instead to give the major portion of her time and interest to raising a family. Is she a failure? That phase of the question has been so often and so ably discussed that I shall not try to add to it.

However, in the statements that men have a head start for success in the necessity to provide for a family, and that women are at a disadvantage because today "there are so few things they have got to do," there is food for thought, and, perhaps, for discussion, by our readers.

While it is undoubtedly true that the success of many men has grown out of their necessity to earn a living, there are countless thousands to whom that necessity has been the obstacle between them and success. There, again, it is the question of what is meant by success. It seems to me that acquiring wealth is only one kind of success, and it is success only to the man who started out with that as an object. And I have known personally men whose connotation of success was making a worthwhile contribution in certain of the arts or sciences, men with ability and talent for the work of their dreams, who failed because of the necessity for the daily grind in a gainful occupation.

As to there being "so few things that women have got to do" — isn't the emancipation of women from complete absorption in domestic or other duties their great opportunity for growth? In Europe, the American woman is regarded as notoriously her husband's superior in matters of mental growth amd cultural attainment. The reason is obvious, of course, in his preoccupation with breadwinning which sets her free for the higher aims of self-improvement and cultural and civic betterment for her community. Isn't that one kind of success?

No New Tax Levies

Washington.—President Roosevelt has come out again with a statement that the burden of taxes is regrettable and that there must be no new levies nor tax increase by the next congress. He chose to get his views to the public by staging a conference at the White House the other day when he summoned Chairman Harrison of the senate finance committee and Chairman Doughton of the house ways and means committee for a breakfast meeting to discuss the subject. He followed this almost too quickly by releasing a statement, a letter from Secretary Morgenthau that substantiated the spoken word of his two congressional leaders.

But somehow the word from the White House prompted many observers here to pick flaws in the pronouncement; they began at once to find several places in the new picture that appeared to have been smeared over by the paint brush, and, in addition, there was a sudden yelp from the Republican national committee which did not help Mr. Roosevelt's plans to show the country that the tax burden had reached its peak.

The Republicans were quite harsh because they called attention to the fact that Mr. Roosevelt on three previous occasions had assured the country there would be no new taxes, and that in each instance new tax legislation somehow or other had been enacted by congress.

Aside from the presidential declaration that there would be no new taxes nor increases in the present levies and that there would be a study of the general tax structure, the President made the point through Secretary Morgenthau's letter that there were a good many hundred millions in "recoverable assets." He also urged upon the country that business has improved so rapidly that additional federal income may be expected from the present tax rates. This latter, of course, is true providing business holds its own or moves to higher levels but it is with respect to the recoverable assets that many questions now are being asked. For the sake of clarity, it may be explained that the recoverable assets to which Mr. Roosevelt referred consisted of the loans of federal money by the various emergency agencies for relief and recovery purposes. There are the millions loaned by the Reconstruction Finance corporation; the equally large amounts loaned by the Works Progress administration and the Public Works administration to states, counties and cities for relief or for job-making construction. In addition, there are loans by the Home Owners' Loan corporation, the Federal Farm Credit administration, loans for crop production, for marketing and countless other types. These are all carried on the books as recoverable assets and their total may amount to as much as $8,000,000,000.

The policy of the New Deal administration is to consider these at their face value. It is the claim of the White House consistently that these loans will be repaid and that they can be used to retire an equal amount of the national debt, which, indeed, is true if the loans ever are repaid.

So, whenever the New Deal is called on to defend itself against charges of imposing a gigantic burden of tax or an equally gigantic burden of public debt, its spokesmen attempt to demonstrate that the public debt figure as well as the taxes must be considered in their relationship to these recoverable assets.

To explain the Roosevelt position further, one may recall that a month ago when the public debt reached the staggering total of $33,779,000,000 the Treasury secretary contended in a public statement that against this sum there should be offset the cash assets in the general fund of the Treasury, then totaling $2,681,000,000 and the $2,000,000,000 of gold that is sterilized in what is known as the exchange sterilization fund.

"In addition," Mr. Morgenthau added in his statement, "we have certain assets representing obligations due us upon which the Treasury will realize cash and which will ultimately be available for debt retirement. These recoverable assets—millions to home owners, to farmers, to railways, to banks and insurance companies, to states, and cities—now total more than $4,000,000,000. These three items—cash on hand, stabilization fund and recoverable loans—provide an offset of $8,750,000,000 to the $33,779,000,000 public debt."

It thus is made to appear directly in issue how completely the Roosevelt administration calculates using these recoverable assets in retiring the public debt. Having gone so thoroughly on record, it is difficult to see how there could have been such a mistake made as developed from the White House conference on taxes. I refer to the inclusion in Secretary Morgenthau's letter of a reference to the recoverable assets as one of the reasons why no new taxes will not have to be levied. Some critics have stated boldly that the White House statements on the recoverable assets cannot be justified. Their assertion is that if the Treasury properly included recoverable assets as a thing to be used in offsetting the public debt, then by the same token those recoverable assets, or repayments of them, cannot be used to reduce the tax burden. In other words, the money represented by those assets cannot be spent in two different ways. Either it must be used to retire public debt or it must be used for current spending by the administration. It seems to be simply a refusal to believe the old adage that you cannot have your cake and eat it too.

If I should attempt to analyze the situation in the light of a personal equation I think I might properly say that if I loaned $500 to a friend and at the same time if I borrowed $500 from a bank, I might properly say the $500 loaned to the friend could be used to pay off the bank loan. So far, so good. But if the friend repaid $250 to me and I spent that $250 and had no other resources, I can't quite figure out how I would pay the bank the $500 I had borrowed from that institution.

Although perhaps my worries as an individual about government policies may not be very important because I am just one individual, I entertain considerable fear about those recoverable assets in another respect. For some reason—and I think I can state it—I doubt that a very large portion of those recoverable assets ever will be collected. I have a hunch that in the next fifteen or twenty years the bulk of those debts which the Roosevelt administration counts as repayable will be cancelled or defaulted. In either event, I think I see how politics is going to play an important part and I am convinced further that Mr. Morgenthau and Mr. Roosevelt as well, if he shares Mr. Morgenthau's belief, is overlooking that very vital influence when he holds these loans as likely to be repaid.

• • •

Default Likely

I recall that the late Albert C. Ritchie, four times a Democratic governor of Maryland, predicted that the money loaned for the various purposes outlined above, would never be paid back. Indeed, Governor Ritchie, who was a very practical man and who thoroughly disliked deluding himself, used the word "repudiation" in connection with these debts. He said they would be handled just like the $11,000,000,000 of war loans made to European nations.

It is a noble thought, of course, that the loans will be repaid, yet it is quite apparent that a cancellation drive is already under way. I think most of those who do me the honor to read my column will recall that more than a year ago I directed their attention to the reduction in interest rates which congress had ordered on many of the loans. That is simply the first step. Cancellation proposals, undisguised, are bound to follow.

Unless I am mistaken, the astute Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation and a man who never kids himself, already has kissed good-by to many of the millions that have been loaned by his agency. Of course, the Reconstruction Finance corporation carries those loans on its books and counts them still as valid. But I am of the opinion that Mr. Jones probably regards those items as dead debts.

But to go further with the idea of cancellation, it takes no stretch of the imagination to say that the Home Owners' Loan corporation, for example, will soon have a good many thousand foreclosed properties on its hands. It takes no more imagination to say that politicians who have ridden into office with promises to help those people whose homes have been foreclosed will carry out their promises by further voting interest reduction or curtailment of principal.

A more striking illustration, it seems to me, can be found in the case of the loans to states, cities and towns. Who among the politicians is going to have the courage to resist the tumult and the voting of their constituents to avoid increase in their local taxes when they call for cancellation of the loans?

While the bonus for the ex-service men is a dead issue, every one knows how representatives and senators capitulated to the demands of the veterans' lobby. Picture for yourself, if you will, how much stronger the demand will be when a whole community sets up a howl to have the funds it has borrowed from the federal government finally declared to have been just a gift and not a loan.

A Smartly Simple Frock

1933-B

Swingin' down the lane with a bit of a zip and a full quota of what it takes, this smartly simple frock goes places without effort—an engagingly youthful and chic affair which can be made in a trice (first cousin to a jiffy) and make you the belle of the campus.

Its simplicity is totally disarming, yet it has all the aplomb of a professor in English — just one of those frocks which can't miss. Delightfully cool and as chipper as a breeze, it requires just seven simple pieces in the making, in any fabric from the A's to the Z's. The yoke and sleeves cut in one and the collar is just long enough to take the prize.

Send for Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1933-B designed for sizes 12, 14, 16 18 and 20—bust 32 to 38. Size 14 requires 4 yards of 39-inch fabric. Send 15 cents in coins.

Send for the Fall Pattern Book containing Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

Household Questions

A mixture of one part vinegar and two parts linseed oil, applied with a soft cloth to suitcases and bags will clean and polish them.

• • •

If you want your glassware to sparkle, add a little lemon juice to the water in which it is rinsed.

• • •

To remove colored candle wax stains from table linen, first remove wax as completely as possible, then remove the dye remaining in the linen with denatured alcohol.

• • •

If your garden peas get too hard for serving in the regular way, cook them until tender, press through a sieve and use the pulp in soup.

• • •

To make white curtains ecru dip in a solution made by boiling one tablespoon of black tea in one quart of water. Strain solution before using.

• • •

Scorch on cotton or linen may be removed with soap and water. Wet the spot with water and expose to the sun for a day or longer if necessary. The scorch disappears more rapidly if the material is moistened first.

THE TICKET-BOOTH TRAP!

AN INSIDE STORY OF MELVIN PURVIS FORMER ACE G-MAN
MELVIN PURVIS, the young lawyer who became America's ace G-Man. In these inside stories Mr. Purvis reveals the methods used in catching desperate criminals. Names have, of course, been changed. Here is the story of "Gyp" Gollick and his gang, who run a gigantic stolen automobile—or "hot car"—racket in the Mid-West, as Melvin Purvis told it to his friends Paul and Joan. The "G-Men" had traced Gollick to a Mid-Western city where he was "hiding out."

BERTILLON MEASUREMENTS
(First perfected by M. Alphonse Bertillon of Paris.) These consist of careful measuring and classification of characteristics of the head and body which cannot be disguised. G-Men must take a long course of training in these measurements, so that they can spot instantly such features. At the right are some simple examples of head types:
TYPE A LONG-HEADED, OR DOLICHOCEPHALIC SKULL. FULL RIMMED, LONG LOBED EAR. JAW THAT JUTS OUT.
TYPE B SHORT-HEADED, OR BRACHYCEPHALIC SKULL. FLATTENED RIM, EAR WITHOUT A LOBE. RECEDING JAW.

MISS MILLER, THIS IS A JOB ONLY A WOMAN MEMBER OF OUR FORCE CAN HANDLE. WE BELIEVE GOLLICK IS HIDING OUT IN THIS SECTION OF THE CITY. WE KNOW HE'S CRAZY ABOUT MOVIES--GOES TO ALL OF THEM. YOU ARE TO TAKE A POSITION AS CASHIER OF THE ONLY MOVIE HOUSE IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD.
I'M READY, CHIEF.
NOTICE IN THESE BERTILLON MEASUREMENTS THAT GOLLICK'S SKULL GOES UP ALMOST STRAIGHT FROM THE BACK OF HIS NECK. NOTICE ALSO THE FLAT-RIM EARS, AND RECEDING JAW.
I SEE, CHIEF. NO MATTER WHAT KIND OF DISGUISE GOLLICK WEARS, THOSE THINGS WILL BETRAY HIM.
NOW REMEMBER GOLLICK'S DESCRIPTION------WHEN HE ARRIVES AT THIS TICKET BOOTH, SIGNAL BY FLASHING YOUR COMPACT MIRROR AT THOSE WINDOWS ACROSS THE STREET. MY G-MEN AND I WILL BE THERE!
I UNDERSTAND, CHIEF. THE BRIGHT LIGHTS OUTSIDE THE THEATRE WILL MAKE A MARVELOUS REFLECTION IN MY MIRROR.
FOR THREE DAYS NOTHING HAPPENED--THEN A NEW FEATURE PICTURE WAS ANNOUNCED AT THE GRAND THEATRE. AND AT 8:30 THAT EVENING...
HURRY UP, THERE --DON'T STOP TO POWDER YOUR NOSE!
THE SIGNAL! MOVE FAST MEN!
NO PARKING
WE'VE GOT YOU, GOLLICK! THAT DISGUISE CAN'T FOOL A G-MAN!
PURVIS AN' TH' G-MEN! YUH CAN'T GET AWAY FROM 'EM!
...AND "GYP" GOLLICK WENT TO PRISON FOR A LONG TERM. NOW, PAUL AND JOAN, SINCE YOU'RE BOTH MEMBERS OF MY JUNIOR G-MAN CORPS, I WANT YOU TO FOLLOW MY BREAKFAST-TIME RULE--EAT LOTS OF POST TOASTIES!
YOU BET WE WILL, MR. PURVIS! THEY SURE TASTE GREAT!

School Opens September 14

The local school will open for the 1936-37 term on Monday, September 14th. This is a week later than in previous years, at the recommendation of the State Department of Education. The school plant has been thoroughly cleaned and the necessary repairs have been made so everything is in readiness for the opening day. Pupils are urged to enroll on the opening day so complete enrollment figures will be available.

Limited financial aid is available for needy high school pupils thru the National Youth Administration and the State Emergency High School Pupil Aid Program. Pupils who are eligible to such aid may secure application blanks at the Sugerintendent's office on Saturday, Sept. 12th or at any later time. To be eligible for the National Youth Administration funds a pupil must be sixteen years of age.

All the members of the last year faculty have signed contracts for the coming year, except Mr. Jenson who taught the upper grades. Final selection for this position will be made this week.

Colbjorn Thompson Died

Funeral services for Colbjorn Thompson, who died Friday, August 21, at his home in Agder Township at the age of 78, were held at the Silver Creek Lutheran church Tuesday, Aug. 25, at 2 p. m. with Rev. ## Going To The State Fair

Twenty-three boys and girls will be representing Marshall County at the State Fair September 5 to 12 as a result of the Achievement Days August 21 and August 22 at Holt and at Warren. The following persons were selected on basis of their exhibits, stories and records:

Dairy calf-Albert Michalek of Boxville, and Lawrence Nygaard, Grygla; pure-bred ewe lamb-Clyde Munger, Boxville; pure-bred gilt-Harold Copp Boxville; breeding pen of poultry-Harold Rosendahl of Boxville; colt-Thomas Dziengel, Middle River; agricultural demonstration team-Alvin Grandstrand and Alfred Jenson, Happy Corner; health-Lillian Stoltman, Bloomwood, and Harry Poolman of Warrenton; clothing exhibit-Carmen Lokken, Wildwood; county style queen-Dorothy Evans, Honor Bright; canning individual-Eleanor Larson, Holt.

As a result of the sub-district Home Economics contest which was held at the Northwest School, Crookston, August 11, five girls won honors of representing the northwest district, in which there were 19 contestants competing. At the State Fair, only 3 cake individuals from the 19 contestants can go, and Doris Cheney of the Boxville 4-H club was selected as one of the three.

Marlan Augustine of the Holt club and Edwin Willey of the Boxville 4-H club were previously selected to go to the Farm Boy's Camp.

As a result of the July County Home Economics Achievement Day, Marian Larson of Holt, Helen Dahlquist of Boxville, and Edith Styrlund of Viking, will take part in the individual bread baking contest at the State Fair.

Left For The West Coast

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Hoffman and two daughters and Miss Palma Johnson, Olaf Johnson and Elmer Nohre left on Saturday with two cars and a trailer full of camping equipment for the west coast. They will locate in Oregon. They expected to spend about three weeks on the trip going out, camping along the way and looking over the scenery.

Motored To Winnipeg

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carlson and family spent Saturday and Sunday motoring from here to Baudette and then across the Rainy River to Canada where they followed the new Hennan Highway around Lake of the Woods to Kenora and on to Winnipeg. Mr. Carlson reported seeing a lot of fine scenery along this route.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Ben Maijala a 10 pound baby girl on August 27.

Given Reception Friday Night

Members of the Nazareth Lutheran congregation here gathered at the church on Friday evening and gave Rev. and Mrs. Hanson a reception. The church was filled to capacity with the crowd which turned out to bid them welcome to this community.

A very fine program had been arranged for the occasion. Rev. Fjelstad of Thief River Falls came up for the evening and gave a fine talk on the work a pastor has to do in his charge. Other speakers were Mrs. A. B. Anderson who spoke for the Ladies' Aid and Supt. E. O. Nybakken who spoke welcome from the community. Several song numbers were given the outstanding of them being the numbers given by the Johnson sisters, radio stars from Moorhead. A letter of greeting from Rev. and Mrs Redal was also read.

After the program the ladies of the community served a bounteous lunch in the church basement. Rev. and Mrs. Hanson were presented with a cash purse as remembrance of the occasion.

Organized G. O. P. Club

With State Senator Alfred E. Solstad, Fisher, and Elmer A. Haugen, Pelican Rapids, Republican candidate for the Ninth District Congressional seat as the principal speakers, nearly 70 Marshall County Republicans perfected a county associated Resublican club at a dinner meeting held at Hotel Warren in Warren last Friday evening.

The new organization elected officers of the county committee to serve as the officers of the associated club, including Oscar R. Knutson, Warren chairman, Mrs. Carl Olson, Newfolden, chairwoman; Ira H. Burhans, Stephen secretary and Odin T. Olson, Stephen, trersurer. Vice presidents are being named for each precinct of the county who will aid in directing the campaign.

Drive More Carefully

When the Morrow Castle disaster was broadcast throughout the world, newspapers carried headlines of this tragedy.

People were astounded that in this modern day and age we would have such a sea disaster which would snuff out 130 lives within such a short time.

One day's death toll of automobile accidents equals the death toll of the Morro Castle disaster. Is this astounding? Is this flashed from coast to coast by radio, newspaper, magazine, and periodical?

The newspapers have taken a very decided action in writing stirring editorials about accident prevention and urging and pleading with people to drive safely. Are you doing your part?

Johnson-Hoffman

Paul Hoffman and Clara Johnson, both of this place were united in marriage on Tuesday evening, August 25. Rev. Myhrer reading the ceremony at his home in Newfolden. Friends and relatives of the newlyweds gave them a party the same evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Nils Johnson.

Seed Winter Rye New

Wherever recent rains have afforded enough soil moisture to germinate the seed, drouth-stricken Minnesota farmers should lose no time in seeding winter rye for fall pasture, says Ralph F. Grim of the Agronomy division, University Farm, St. Paul. The sooner it is seeded, the more growth it will make before fall.

Record breaking heat and severe prolonged drouth have caused a general shortage of forage and feed crops throughout a large part of the country, and the price of hay and other feedstuffs will, without doubt, be very high. It is impartive, therefore, that feedstuffs be conserved and pasture provided in order that animals may have sufficient feed until winter sets in.

Rye is hardy, grows vigourously and produces excellent pasture for spring and fall. Seeding for pasture purposes, should be at the rate of at least one and one-half bushels per acre, though one and one-fourth bushels per acre are considered sufficient for grain production. Although the price of rye is advancing, it has been relatively low, and there should be good quantities of seed available, asserts Mr. Grim.

The rye crop may be pastured this fall and also be available for a seed crop the following year. Unless there is a very liberal quantity of rain from now until fall, it will be necessary to supplement pastures in the spring to allow the old permanent pastures to revive.

In addition to furnishing pastures for fall and spring, winter rye affords an excellent winter covering to hold snow and prevent erosion, says Mr. Grim.

Returned To Seattle

Christ Birkeland of Seattle, Washington, has spent the past few days here visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Johnson and other relatives in this community. His son, Happy, has spent the summer here and returned to Seattle with his father yesterday.

He wiped his glasses, and went on. "I'd written a cable ordering your arrest. There didn't seem much sense in sending it. I was stuck in Bad Nauheim. My son was locked up in the Tombs. You seemed bent on getting him out. It was a chance. I telegraphed Harwood to give you every possible aid. I told him to raise your salary, and I signed a check for my wife to send you. She didn't know that you weren't her boy, and she didn't know I knew anything. Nobody knew. I kept my mouth shut, and the wires busy.

"Two weeks ago, I learned that you'd accomplished nothing and that the date of the trial was set. I went to my doctor, and he said I could make the trip. After I'd booked passage Harwood cabled about the Morano clew. Then I told my wife everything, and came home."

"To deal with me?"

"Yes."

Apparently that was all. Ridder had made his statement, coldly, calmly, as a judge might have spoken in charging a jury. The charge over, he waited again—so long that the pause became unendurable. Barry was standing—like a prisoner in the dock. After a moment, he said: "What are you going to do?"

"Listen to your explanation."

"I haven't any."

"There's a police officer in the next room."

"Yes," Barry answered. "I felt sure there would be."

"Is there any reason I shouldn't turn you over to him?"

"None that you don't know about."

He was as cold and as calm as Ridder. Two cold, calm men, looking at each other. Ridder knew everything. He knew what Barry had done for his son, and had "a police officer in the next room." Knowing everything, he waited until Barry could be of no further use and then sent for "the cops." A hard man and a mean one. That was that.

"I'm not going to beg off, if that's what you want," Barry blurted. "You know what I did—"

"I want to know why you did it."

"I don't know myself."

"No?"

"No."

"I think I do know," Ridder said. His glasses were still in his hand, and he was scrutinizing Barry through naked, narrow eyes. "Half a dozen people have been here to plead for you. One of 'em's still here. To listen to them, anybody'd suppose you broke into my house to do me a good turn. You didn't exactly do that, did you?"

"No," Barry answered. "I didn't."

"The obvious thing seems to be that you broke in to help yourself. The servants arrived and mistook you for my son. That enabled you to stay on. Then my son's wife appeared. You silenced her by undertaking to get the boy off. That's the story, isn't it?"

"Pretty nearly."

"And then you remained to face me because you thought you could bluff your way out. That was the game, wasn't it? Blackmail?"

Barry was getting angry. It was unbearable; this hard, mean old man twisting his motives, incapable of admitting that a single one of them might have been honest. Why should he remain silent? He was in for it, anyway.

"As a matter of fact," he found himself saying, "that isn't my game. The story you told isn't my story. It's merely what happened, with all the truth left out of it."

"Then why don't you tell me the truth?"

"You wouldn't believe me. You couldn't, because you couldn't understand. I broke into your house because I was cold, and wet, and hungry. I stayed, at first, because I was nuts about a girl, and wanted to be near her. Then Peggy came—she's your daughter-in-law, you know—and told me her story. I was sorry for her. Terribly sorry. But, of course, you don't believe that."

"Why not?"

"Because you knew the story, too. You had 'em trailed all about Florida. You knew the fight he'd made, and she'd made for him, and you didn't give a damn. 'I haven't got a friend in the world,' she said. 'Just a sick kid, and a husband I'm strong for shut up in the Tombs.' That's why I stayed on in your house, using your name, to help her. At least, I think it is. You don't. You couldn't. You never felt sorry for anybody. You've got the truth now—the whole truth. Send for your cop, and let's have it over."

The old man sat watching him.

And then, suddenly, he thrust forward the paper he'd been reading when Barry entered.

"How do you explain that?" he asked.

"What is it?"

"The wireless you sent my wife two days after you broke into my house. To make her think that you were her son. When you wrote that, you'd never seen Peggy. You didn't know you could help anybody. You were perpetrating a cruel hoax to stay on in my house, and feather your nest. Is that true, or isn't it?"

"It isn't."

"Then why did you send that message?"

Barry didn't answer.

How could one answer—to that hard, mean old man—"I sent it because I never had a mother, and liked pretending that I had?" How could one say, "I felt sorry for her, too. I wanted her to believe that her boy loved her?" One simply couldn't, and so Barry remained silent.

The old man was waiting.

"Go on," Barry said. "Get your cop."

"If I have you arrested, the cat's out of the bag."

"I don't get you."

"Every one's going to know that the man in my house wasn't my son—that my son was in the Tombs."

Barry's eyes flashed.

"You would think of that. Well, go ahead; ring. My mouth's shut, too. I did this to give those two kids a break. I'm not likely to spoil it now, am I? Go on, ring, and let's have it over."

Then the big door opened, and a secretary entered.

He glanced at Barry, and whispered to Ridder.

"All right. We're finished."

The secretary glanced at Barry again and left the room.

With cold, calm eyes, Ridder indicated the door behind him.

"In there," he said, rising and walking away.

Barry looked after him.

Then he braced himself and opened the door.

It was dark in the next room.

Quite dark, after the dazzling sunlight of Ridder's office.

Barry closed the door behind him and stood trying to accustom himself to the new dimness.

There was only one window here, and that heavily curtained. No way in or out, except that by which Barry had come. A smallish board room, this was, for staff meetings. Barry made out a long table, with chairs about it, and several file cabinets. Beside these, some one was waiting.

The "cop"?

Before Barry could answer his own question, the figure turned and came forward.

Patricia.

Patricia Hambidge, in a blue tailored ensemble.

Barry laughed.

"Pat!" he exclaimed. "I thought you were a policeman."

"No," she replied, grimly. "There's one outside, though. My father warned you about Mr. Ridder but I didn't think anybody could be as—as granite as that old man."

Then, Pat Said, "I Love You."

"You're tellin' me?" Barry grinned.

"We've been at him ever since he arrived—his son, Peggy, father and I, Peter Winslow, his own wife. We didn't expect friendship to count—not after the way his paper went after father. But we talked reason. Peter, with his wife sick at home—Peter said you couldn't've worked harder for your brother."

"What was Ridder's answer to that?"

"'He had to. This girl'—meaning Peggy—'This girl wouldn't've kept her mouth shut if she hadn't thought he was her one chance.'

"'Yes,' Peter argued, 'but he was really working.'

"'He was getting a good salary for doing it. And good clothes, and a good home, and servants he wasn't paying for. I'd've worked in his place.'"

"So my mother pleaded, too," Barry reminded himself, swiftly, with curious satisfaction. Then he grinned again at having thought of that old man's wife as his mother.

"I'd like to meet Mrs. Ridder," he said aloud. "I'd like to thank her And Winslow, of course, and all of you."

"It didn't do much good," Pat responded. "But Peter's going to take your case, and fight to a finish. He says he'll stay home from Europe, if necessary."

"I don't want to fight," Barry answered. "I'm not exactly eager to go to jail, but it looks as though I was booked for it. And I don't want to make any rumpus. That would only hurt Jack and Peggy. I want to wipe all this off the slate, and start fresh."

Pat nodded.

"I know. You kept saying, 'Let's have it over.'"

"You heard?"

"Of course. I listened shamelessly."

"Did it matter so much to you?" Barry asked.

And then was sorry he'd said it.

"We've all been long on eavesdropping," he added, quickly. "Old Ridder, your father—"

"We've all had good reason."

She was standing beside the long table.

"You asked if it mattered to me," she said. "Don't you know?"

"Why should it matter?"

"Don't you know that?"

"We've been good pals—" he began.

She was staring at him fixedly.

"Don't talk nonsense," she commanded.

Barry sat next to her.

"Listen," he said. "You're a lady—"

She laid her hand on his arm.

"I've only one question to ask," she declared, "and I count on your answering that honestly."

"You can."

"You said—to Ridder—'I stayed, at first, because I was nuts about a girl.'"

"Yes."

"Was that true?"

"Yes."

"Who was she?"

"I told you a month ago."

"Under considerable stress. And you never repeated it. Are you still nuts about her?"

She used the absurd colloquialism as gravely as though it were Shakespearian English.

An invisible hand clutched at Barry's throat.

There was a lump there—something that had to be swallowed immediately. He felt an hysterical desire to laugh, or to cry. Then, "We won't talk about that now," he said, calmly.

"Why not?"

He couldn't answer.

"Was that pretense, too?"

Suddenly, he couldn't bear it.

"You know damned well it wasn't," he burst forth, inexcusably. "You know exactly how I feel. You've always known. Everybody's always known everything about me, it seems. I'm as much a failure at faking as I am at everything else. What sense of discussing it now?"

"This may be our last chance to discuss it."

They were both standing. Looking straight at each other.

Then, Pat said, "I love you."

"For God's sake—listen—I'm the son of a ne'er-do-well."

"I love you."

"I'm a bum and a vagabond."

"I love you."

"Before night, I'll be a jail-bird."

"I love you."

"Pat—"

"I'll wait for you," Pat said. "And then we'll both start fresh."

She was smiling now.

"Will you marry me, Mr. Gilbert?"

For answer, he caught her up in his arms.

He was still holding her when the old man came through the door.

"Will you step in here, please?" the old man asked, as unemotionally as though he had seen people embracing one another in this board room every day of his life.

Without replying, Barry released Pat.

Then he pressed her shoulder, reassuringly, and followed Ridder.

At the big desk, Mrs. Ridder was standing. He recognized her at once, though she was younger—and prettier—than he had expected. "Forty," Barry guessed, glancing at her wavy, dark hair, and then realized that she must be more than that. She looked very much like her son, Barry thought. Curious. That was the stronger strain, then, even though she seemed as soft and gentle as her husband was hard and domineering.

She was a small woman, with plump arms, and tiny wrists and ankles. She had large, brown eyes, with shadows under them. They had shown suffering, those eyes, though they were bright enough now. "Snappy," Barry described them.

"My wife," Ridder nodded toward her, curtly.

She came forward, her hand extended to Barry.

"I want to thank you," she said, quietly.

"All what?"

"Your accounts," Mrs. Ridder explained. "Evans gave them to me this morning, but I didn't open the envelope until just now. Then I brought it straight to Mr. Ridder."

"What's this mummery about paying your board? . . . Come in, Miss Hambidge."

Washington Inspected Steamboat

On September 7, 1784, George Washington, in a certificate stating that he had inspected James Rumsey's steamboat model, wrote, in part: "I . . . do give it as my opinion . . . that the discovery is of vast importance—may be of greatest usefulness in our inland waters." Rumsey's idea of propelling his craft by forcibly ejecting a stream of water from its stern never proved practical. Fulton and others were to bring Washington's optimistic prediction to fulfillment. The incident demonstrates, however, that as early as 150 years ago, a few far-sighted men like Washington clearly saw the importance of taking advantage of all possible means of improving communication between the widely separated sections of the new American republic.

What Kind of Salad Shall We Have for Lunch, or for Dinner?

That Seems to Be All-Important Question on These Warm Days.

And what kind of a salad? That's the usual question in warm weather both for lunch and for dinner. Whatever you choose, it must, of course, be crisp and well chilled. For dinner, it will probably have French dressing. This mixture of oil and vinegar can, however, be varied by different blends of seasoning.

The most important seasoning is, of course, the oil itself, and next to that is the vinegar. You may have your preference between Italian and French olive oil or you may be American enough to prefer one of the salad oils made from a corn or cottonseed base. A malt, a cider, a wine vinegar or one of these vinegars flavored with tarragon will each give a different character to your dressing. Lemon or lime juice used instead of vinegar will lend an individual note.

Whatever acid you use, be sure that you do not overdo it. Many dressings are too sour. While the standard proportions are supposed to be three tablespoons of oil to one tablespoon of vinegar or lemon juice, four to one often makes a more desirable combination. Besides salt, pepper and sugar, which are always used for seasoning, a little mustard, chile sauce, ketchup, or a dash of one of the sauces of the Worcestershire type are good additions. Some prefer to have the bowl rubbed with garlic or add some sliced onions or onion juice.

Chiffonade Dressing

½ cup French dressing
2 tablespoons minced celery
1 teaspoon minced parsley
1 tablespoon minced onion
1 hard-boiled egg, finely minced
2 tablespoons minced green pepper, or cooked beets

Mix other ingredients and add to French dressing.

Special French Dressing

1 cup salad oil
1 cup sugar
¾ cup malt vinegar
1 teaspoon grated onion
½ cup ketchup
1½ teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce

Mix ingredients and beat until thick. Store in refrigerator and beat before using.

GROUND GRIP TIRES
First Choice
OF FARMERS EVERYWHERE

Firestone Farm Exhibit, Great Lakes Exposition, Cleveland, Ohio

OUTSTANDING performance has made Firestone Ground Grip Tires preferred equipment for farmers, who have proved that Ground Grip Tires save 25% in time and fuel, and greatly reduce repairs and upkeep costs.

The self-cleaning tread gives the greatest traction ever known. Gum-Dipping gives the cord body strength to stand the extra stresses of super-traction. The special construction of two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread binds the tread and cord body into one inseparable unit. With Firestone's new demountable rim and cut-down method of applying the rim on the original wheels, one set of Ground Grip Tires will fit several implements.

Go to your nearest Firestone Tire Dealer or Implement Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store today and ask to see these money-saving tires. And when you order a new tractor or implement, specify Firestone Ground Grip Tires.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Duluth—The state convention of the Minnesota Library association will be held here October 1, 2 and 3, Miss Jane Morey, chief librarian, announced.

Minneapolis — Continued business gain in Minneapolis and the northwest were reflected in July carloadings, the Minneapolis Traffic Association reported. The combined received and forwarded cars showe an increase of 14,143, or 46.5 per cent, over July, 1935.

Winona—A survey of southeastern Minnesota sportsmen indicated a vehement protest is in the making to the state conservation commission against the proposed uniform season for upland game. Hundred of letters opposing the suggestion have already been mailed from Winona, Rochester and other points in the territory.

New Prague—The contest against Fred A. Curtis, Democratic nominee for governor, is to be withdrawn, Dr. E. E. Novak of New Prague, losing candidate, announced. He said friends started it because of certain false and malicious statements in the primary campaign, but no constructive purpose will be served by a continuance of the action.

Newport—Old showboat days on the Mississippi are in for a revival this fall when Roy Joies of Newport takes the Mantou, last of the floating palaces on the river, down the Mississippi with a floating zoo. Jones recently bought the boat at Guttenberg, Iowa, where it was stranded for two years with a for sale sign on it. It is being towed to St. Paul.

Minneapolis—With the opening of high school football practice less than a month away, it was learned that the 1936 Minneapolis champions may have a real prize to shoot at through the regular schedule. Arrangements are in the making now to send this year's prep title holders to Lincoln, Neb., to meet the leading team of that city in a special post-season affair.

St. Paul—Frank Knox, Republican vice presidential candidate, will invade Minnesota soon after President Roosevelt has been here on his drouth-inspection tour, it was announced. Mr. Knox will be in the state Sept. 9 winding up the day with a big meeting, following a parade, at St. Paul auditorium at 7:30 p. m. His speech will be heard on a radio hookup.

Inver Grove—Minnesota's little red school houses are doomed. Modern equipment and structures erected under WPA auspices will gradually replace the one-room buildings. Two Dakota county towns are now witnessing the metamorphosis. They are Inver Grove and Empire. Black paper blackboards will no longer be the writing slate of countless children in the rural communities.

Wayzata—An unauthorized bite out of a sandwich of a fellow diner started a series of exciting episodes that reached justice court with George Gillettee, Wayzata, accused of discharging firearms contrary to law, Gillette, the sandwich biter, allegedly provoked a row in the Wayzata Diner when he grabbed a sandwich from one of six youths eating in the place and took a size-able bite of the delicacy.

Milan—Plans are being made here to accommodate an increased crowd at the third annual Lefse day celebration Thursday and Friday September 10 and 11 according to Henry Thorson president of the Milan Booster Club sponsors of the event The program will include addresse, free movies, a full sports program, free acts, a parade, and concessions of all kinds. Free Lefse and coffee will be served to everyone.

St. Paul—More than 500,000 game fish, including 202,000 crappies, 213,600 sunfish, 6,500 bass and 4,600 pickerel, have been rescued from drying lakes this season, according to George Weaver, state superintendent of fish propagation. All fish are carefully sorted by fishery employees to remove carp and other rough fish, and the game fish are restocked in lakes that are not already infested with rough fish.

Brainerd—F. B. Andreen of New Ulm was elected commander of the Minnesota department, American Legion, to succeed Harald Rogers, Minneapolis. Andreen won with 348 votes on the fourth ballot after a spirited three-cornered contest. J. L. Whelan, Albert Lea, was elected first vice commander; Carl Mousky, Sauk Rapids, second vice commander, and A. C Shaefer, Duluth, third vice commander. The Rev. Bernard H. Wessling Fergus Falls was chosen department chaplain. Delegates to the national convention will be Harold N. Rogers retiring commander, Andrew Anderson, Eagle Bend, and Michael B. Hurley, Pine City. Mrs. C. F. Moore, Jr., of Minneapolis was elected president of the Auxiliary

Fort Snelling—Responding to requests of horse lovers throughout the northwest, Brig. Gen. David L. Stone, commanding Fort Snelling, announced a horseshow will be held at the fort Sept. 27, the closing day of the Twin Cities polo tournament, being held Sept 20 to 27. Classes will probably include lightweight and ladies' hunters, best individual polo pony, best string of four ponies, officers' charger class and designation of the best playing pony of the tournament.

Washington. — As the political campaign waxes warmer, it becomes painfully evident that the fight in 1936 for the suffrage of the people is going to be very dirty. It is going to be bitter and there is no way now apparent that such a characteristic can be avoided.

Mud Slinging Ahead

I do not believe that either Governor Landon, the Republican candidate, or President Roosevelt, seeking re-election as a Democrat, can prevent the hurling of invectives that are going to be very close to mud-slinging. Naturally the President of the United States seldom makes a mud-slinging speech and Governor Landon personally is a mild-mannered man who believes in discussing issues rather than individuals, but the intentions or the desires of these two candidates cannot control the bitterness that is, to my mind, certain to be found in this campaign in a large measure.

As typical of the sort of thing to which I have referred is the recent speech of Secretary Ickes who, in a national radio broadcast, became quite ill-tempered in his attack on Governor Landon. Mr. Ickes is not known for his composure anyway and when he gets heated up on any subject he is likely to be guilty of remarks that are not becoming to an official of our government or any other.

I have not the slightest doubt that before the campaign has proceeded much further there will be similar speeches attacking Mr. Roosevelt personally and that, while Governor Landon may not approve, there will be unworthy charges hurled at the President.

Mr. Ickes skated pretty close to the line in his attack on Governor Landon by various adroit phrases which were designed to create the impression that the Republican candidate was either ignorant or dishonest. I do not know Governor Landon personally but I can offer this thought: No man is going to be nominated by any political party in a national convention, nominated by acclamation, unless his record is pretty clear. For Mr. Ickes to say, therefore, in effect, that Governor Landon had sold out to "Wall Street" was not the sort of campaign discussion likely to produce confidence among all the people in their government. It is comparable, in my opinion, to a charge that the President of the United States, who advertises himself continually as a friend of the common man, was guilty of increasing his own personal fortune through presidential acts—and every one knows this is not true. But to get back to the theme song of the Ickes' speech, it seems to me that the tragedy of his radio pronouncement lies in the fact throughout his discussion he was preaching class hatred. Every one knows, of course, attacks on "Wall Street" are very common in any political campaign. The demagogues use it every hour of every day everywhere they can find any one to listen to them. It is ridiculous, but it has happened for a good many years. So when Mr. Ickes made the charge that Governor Landon was either unwittingly or knowingly leading a "rich man's fight" against President Roosevelt he was descending to a rather low level of campaigning.

* * *

I have seen indications of a reaction against the Ickes' speech in another way. John Hamilton, the Republican national chairman, on his recent organization tour of the western states, propounded the inquiry that seeks to identify the "economic royalists" about which President Roosevelt spoke several weeks ago. If the Roosevelt campaigners continue this class hatred propaganda, I rather suspect from what Mr. Hamilton said in his speeches there will be a perfect barrage of demands to know the names of these economic royalists. It may not seem important; indeed, it seems like it probably is inconsequential, but if the Republicans let down a barrage on the President of the United States, he is likely to be put in a bad corner.

May Cause Showdown

Without attempting to forecast what the Republican opposition is likely to say, I can recall as an observer close to the wheels of government during the Roosevelt regime that Mr. Roosevelt frequently was a guest on the Astor yacht and that one of his chief advisors for many months was the multimillionaire, Bernard M. Baruch. It seems also that a very rich man, Henry L. Doherty, was in charge of the nation-wide dance program held on the President's birthday and Mr. Doherty, be it said, is head of one of the great utility chains.

These are just samples. It may be good politics for the President to encourage these attacks without approving them, but those of us who knew the late Louis McHenry Howe, are convinced that he never would have agreed to that sort of attack, had he been alive and serving as the President's closest political advisor as he did for a quarter of a century.

* * *

There is a situation in the federal government that threatens to be quite nasty. I refer to the row that has developed between the Department of Justice bureau of investigation (the G-men) and the Treasury's secret service corps. It is all very much under cover, quite secret, but the row has come to the surface sufficiently to result in a demotion of two long-time members of the secret service.

Probe G-Men

J. Edgar Hoover has been well press-agented as chief of the G-men. Joseph E. Murphy has had almost no advertising as assistant chief of the Treasury secret service in which he has served for more than a quarter of a century. Mr. Murphy and one of his subordinates have been reduced in rank, their record stained for life.

The two departments have kept the facts well covered up. It seems that something was going on among the G-men that the Treasury secret service thought they ought to know about. They conducted their own inquiry, their own investigation into the other staff of investigators. That is as much as has been made public except Secretary Morgenthau's announcement of the demotion order. I have known each of these men equally twenty years. Each is entitled to the utmost respect. But each operates along an entirely different line—Hoover with some willingness for publicity; Murphy with an absolute policy of never letting his name get into the papers. It is unfortunate that Joe Murphy was the goat.

* * *

The board of governors of the Federal Reserve system took an action recently that probably is quite mystifying to the average person. They ordered all of the banks of the country which are members of the Federal Reserve system to keep a deposit reserve with the Federal Reserve banks 15 per cent greater than ever has been required before.

Action Mystifies

With the technical phases of reserve requirements and the mechanical operation of this particular order, I think we need not be very much concerned. But with the principle upon which this action is taken I think every one with a bank account, however small, ought to be vitally interested. They ought to be interested for the very simple reason that this action illustrates better than any words I can write how far the centralization of control of the banking structure has gone. This action was taken under the National Banking act of 1935, a statute that has been frequently criticised as a "political banking act."

In the instance I have just reported, the change in the reserve requirements probably will have no serious reaction on us as individuals. It probably will not hurt the banks because few banks in the country have had calls for loans in any quantity since business is at such a low level. But the point is that under this law, the Federal Reserve board of governors can alter banking conditions over night. It can issue new rules and regulations that are wholly impossible of understanding by the average individual, but which are almost riotous in their effect upon the management of individual banks throughout the country.

To state this proposition in another way, may I describe it in the terms of a private business enterprise. If a storekeeper in a small town were subjected to regulation from Washington and the regulatory power in the federal government had such discretionary authority as the Federal Reserve board of governors, could that storekeeper ever feel that he was managing his own business? I think not. Then, in the case of the Federal Reserve board of governors, it must be added that the president of the board is Marriner S. Eccles who is known far and wide for his radical ideas about banking. It can be further said that Mr. Eccles has the ear of President Roosevelt. This has been criticised many times of course where opponents of the Roosevelt banking policies have contended that the banks can be utilized in any way the administration desires to use them. As an illustration of this, the federal government has been borrowing billions. Most banks are chock full of government securities. While I do not say it has happened, yet because I do not believe it has happened yet, nevertheless there is a possibility that government borrowings can be forced on the banks under such conditions. That is the course of action that has ruined the currency in half a dozen European nations.

For the Little Princess

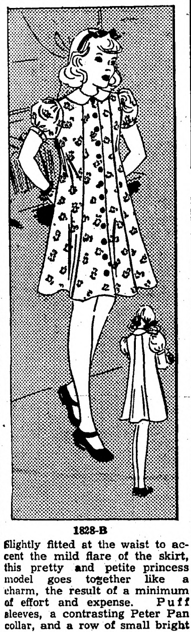
The simplicity but irresistible charm of princess frocks accounts for their undiminished popularity and appeal for those who sew, and this one will make an instant hit with the mothers of growing daughters as well as with the daughters themselves.



1828-B

Daughter will love to choose her own fabric — a printed muslin, percale, challis or sheer wool —and with a tiny bit of coaching she can make the frock herself!

He wiped his glasses, and went on. "I'd written a cable ordering your arrest. There didn't seem much sense in sending it. I was stuck in Bad Nauheim. My son was locked up in the Tombs. You seemed bent on getting him out. It was a chance. I telegraphed Harwood to give you every possible aid. I told him to raise your salary, and I signed a check for my wife to send you. She didn't know that you weren't her boy, and she didn't know I knew anything. Nobody knew. I kept my mouth shut, and the wires busy.

"Two weeks ago, I learned that you'd accomplished nothing and that the date of the trial was set. I went to my doctor, and he said I could make the trip. After I'd booked passage Harwood cabled about the Morano clew. Then I told my wife everything, and came home."

"To deal with me?"

"Yes."

Apparently that was all. Ridder had made his statement, coldly, calmly, as a judge might have spoken in charging a jury. The charge over, he waited again—so long that the pause became unendurable. Barry was standing—like a prisoner in the dock. After a moment, he said: "What are you going to do?"

"Listen to your explanation."

"I haven't any."

"Yes," Barry answered. "I felt sure there would be."

"Is there any reason I shouldn't turn you over to him?"

"None that you don't know about."

He was as cold and as calm as Ridder. Two cold, calm men, looking at each other. Ridder knew everything. He knew what Barry had done for his son, and had "a police officer in the next room." Knowing everything, he waited until Barry could be of no further use and then sent for "the cops." A hard man and a mean one. That was that.

"I'm not going to beg off, if that's what you want," Barry blurted. "You know what I did—"

"I want to know why you did it."

"I don't know myself."

"No?"

"No."

"I think I do know," Ridder said. His glasses were still in his hand, and he was scrutinizing Barry through naked, narrow eyes. "Half a dozen people have been here to plead for you. One of 'em's still here. To listen to them, anybody'd suppose you broke into my house to do me a good turn. You didn't exactly do that, did you?"

"No," Barry answered. "I didn't."

"The obvious thing seems to be that you broke in to help yourself. The servants arrived and mistook you for my son. That enabled you to stay on. Then my son's wife appeared. You silenced her by undertaking to get the boy off. That's the story, isn't it?"

"Pretty nearly."

"And then you remained to face me because you thought you could bluff your way out. That was the game, wasn't it? Blackmail?"

Barry was getting angry. It was unbearable; this hard, mean old man twisting his motives, incapable of admitting that a single one of them might have been honest. Why should he remain silent? He was in for it, anyway.

"As a matter of fact," he found himself saying, "that isn't my game. The story you told isn't my story. It's merely what happened, with all the truth left out of it."

"Then why don't you tell me the truth?"

"You wouldn't believe me. You couldn't, because you couldn't understand. I broke into your house because I was cold, and wet, and hungry. I stayed, at first, because I was nuts about a girl, and wanted to be near her. Then Peggy came—she's your daughter-in-law, you know—and told me her story. I was sorry for her. Terribly sorry. But, of course, you don't believe that."

"Why not?"

"Because you knew the story, too. You had 'em trailed all about Florida. You knew the fight he'd made, and she'd made for him, and you didn't give a damn. 'I haven't got a friend in the world,' she said. 'Just a sick kid, and a husband I'm strong for shut up in the Tombs.' That's why I stayed on in your house, using your name, to help her. At least, I think it is. You don't. You couldn't. You never felt sorry for anybody. You've got the truth now—the whole truth. Send for your cop, and let's have it over."

The old man sat watching him.

And then, suddenly, he thrust forward the paper he'd been reading when Barry entered.

"How do you explain that?" he asked.

"What is it?"

"The wireless you sent my wife two days after you broke into my house. To make her think that you were her son. When you wrote that, you'd never seen Peggy. You didn't know you could help anybody. You were perpetrating a cruel hoax to stay on in my house, and feather your nest. Is that true, or isn't it?"

"It isn't."

"Then why did you send that message?"

Barry didn't answer.

How could one answer—to that hard, mean old man—"I sent it because I never had a mother, and liked pretending that I had?" How could one say, "I felt sorry for her, too. I wanted her to believe that her boy loved her?" One simply couldn't, and so Barry remained silent.

The old man was waiting.

"Go on," Barry said. "Get your cop."

"If I have you arrested, the cat's out of the bag."

"I don't get you."

"Every one's going to know that the man in my house wasn't my son—that my son was in the Tombs."

Barry's eyes flashed.

"You would think of that. Well, go ahead; ring. My mouth's shut, too. I did this to give those two kids a break. I'm not likely to spoil it now, am I? Go on, ring, and let's have it over."

The old man's hand descended upon the button.

Then the big door opened, and a secretary entered.

He glanced at Barry, and whispered to Ridder.

"All right. We're finished."

The secretary glanced at Barry again and left the room.

With cold, calm eyes, Ridder indicated the door behind him.

"In there," he said, rising and walking away.

Barry looked after him.

"Tough guy," Barry muttered quite audibly, quoting Peggy. His hand was on the knob now. "Tough guy—that bird."

Then he braced himself and opened the door.

It was dark in the next room.

Quite dark, after the dazzling sunlight of Ridder's office.

Barry closed the door behind him and stood trying to accustom himself to the new dimness.

There was only one window here, and that heavily curtained. No way in or out, except that by which Barry had come. A smallish board room, this was, for staff meetings. Barry made out a long table, with chairs about it, and several file cabinets. Beside these, some one was waiting.

The "cop"?

Before Barry could answer his own question, the figure turned and came forward.

Patricia.

Patricia Hambidge, in a blue tailored ensemble.

Barry laughed.

"Pat!" he exclaimed. "I thought you were a policeman."

"No," she replied, grimly. "There's one outside, though. My father warned you about Mr. Ridder but I didn't think anybody could be as—as granite as that old man."

Then, Pat Said, "I Love You."

"You're tellin' me?" Barry grinned.

"We've been at him ever since he arrived—his son, Peggy, father and I, Peter Winslow, his own wife. We didn't expect friendship to count—not after the way his paper went after father. But we talked reason. Peter, with his wife sick at home—Peter said you couldn't've worked harder for your brother."

"What was Ridder's answer to that?"

"'He had to. This girl'—meaning Peggy—'This girl wouldn't've kept her mouth shut if she hadn't thought he was her one chance.'

"'Yes,' Peter argued, 'but he was really working.'

"'He was getting a good salary for doing it. And good clothes, and a good home, and servants he wasn't paying for. I'd've worked in his place.'"

"So my mother pleaded, too," Barry reminded himself, swiftly, with curious satisfaction. Then he grinned again at having thought of that old man's wife as his mother.

"I'd like to meet Mrs. Ridder," he said aloud. "I'd like to thank her And Winslow, of course, and all of you."

"It didn't do much good," Pat responded. "But Peter's going to take your case, and fight to a finish. He says he'll stay home from Europe, if necessary."

"I don't want to fight," Barry answered. "I'm not exactly eager to go to jail, but it looks as though I was booked for it. And I don't want to make any rumpus. That would only hurt Jack and Peggy. I want to wipe all this off the slate, and start fresh."

Pat nodded.

"I know. You kept saying, 'Let's have it over.'"

"You heard?"

"Of course. I listened shamelessly."

"Did it matter so much to you?" Barry asked.

And then was sorry he'd said it.

"We've all been long on eavesdropping," he added, quickly. "Old Ridder, your father—"

"We've all had good reason."

She was standing beside the long table.

"You asked if it mattered to me," she said. "Don't you know?"

"Why should it matter?"

"Don't you know that?"

"We've been good pals—" he began.

She was staring at him fixedly.

"Don't talk nonsense," she commanded.

Barry sat next to her.

"Listen," he said. "You're a lady—"

She laid her hand on his arm.

"I've only one question to ask," she declared, "and I count on your answering that honestly."

"You can."

"You said—to Ridder—'I stayed, at first, because I was nuts about a girl.'"

"Yes."

"Was that true?"

"Yes."

"Who was she?"

"I told you a month ago."

"Under considerable stress. And you never repeated it. Are you still nuts about her?"

She used the absurd colloquialism as gravely as though it were Shakespearian English.

An invisible hand clutched at Barry's throat.

There was a lump there—something that had to be swallowed immediately. He felt an hysterical desire to laugh, or to cry. Then, "We won't talk about that now," he said, calmly.

"Why not?"

He couldn't answer.

"Was that pretense, too?"

Suddenly, he couldn't bear it.

"You know damned well it wasn't," he burst forth, inexcusably. "You know exactly how I feel. You've always known. Everybody's always known everything about me, it seems. I'm as much a failure at faking as I am at everything else. What's the sense of discussing it now?"

"This may be our last chance to discuss it."

They were both standing. Looking straight at each other.

Then, Pat said, "I love you."

"For God's sake—listen—I'm the son of a ne'er-do-well."

"I love you."

"I'm a bum and a vagabond."

"I love you."

"Before night, I'll be a jail-bird."

"I love you."

"Pat—"

"I'll wait for you," Pat said. "And then we'll both start fresh."

She was smiling now.

"Will you marry me, Mr. Gilbert?"

For answer, he caught her up in his arms.

He was still holding her when the old man came through the door.

"Will you step in here, please?" the old man asked, as unemotionally as though he had seen people embracing one another in this board room every day of his life.

Without replying, Barry released Pat.

Then he pressed her shoulder, reassuringly, and followed Ridder.

At the big desk, Mrs. Ridder was standing. He recognized her at once, though she was younger—and prettier—than he had expected. "Forty," Barry guessed, glancing at her wavy, dark hair, and then realized that she must be more than that. She looked very much like her son, Barry thought. Curious. That was the stronger strain, then, even though she seemed as soft and gentle as her husband was hard and domineering.

She was a small woman, with plump arms, and tiny wrists and ankles. She had large, brown eyes, with shadows under them. They had shown suffering, those eyes, though they were bright enough now. "Snappy," Barry described them.

"My wife," Ridder nodded toward her, curtly.

She came forward, her hand extended to Barry.

"I want to thank you," she said, quietly.

"All what?"

"Your accounts," Mrs. Ridder explained. "Evans gave them to me this morning, but I didn't open the envelope until just now. Then I brought it straight to Mr. Ridder."

"What's this mummery about paying your board? . . . Come in, Miss Hambidge."

Washington Inspected Steamboat

On September 7, 1784, George Washington, in a certificate stating that he had inspected James Rumsey's steamboat model, wrote, in part: "I . . . do give it as my opinion . . . that the discovery is of vast importance—may be of greatest usefulness in our inland waters." Rumsey's idea of propelling his craft by forcibly ejecting a stream of water from its stern never proved practical. Fulton and others were to bring Washington's optimistic prediction to fulfillment. The incident demonstrates, however, that as early as 150 years ago, a few far-sighted men like Washington clearly saw the importance of taking advantage of all possible means of improving communication between the widely separated sections of the new American republic.

What Kind of Salad Shall We Have for Lunch, or for Dinner?

That Seems to Be All-Important Question on These Warm Days.

And what kind of a salad? That's the usual question in warm weather both for lunch and for dinner. Whatever you choose, it must, of course, be crisp and well chilled. For dinner, it will probably have French dressing. This mixture of oil and vinegar can, however, be varied by different blends of seasoning.

The most important seasoning is, of course, the oil itself, and next to that is the vinegar. You may have your preference between Italian and French olive oil or you may be American enough to prefer one of the salad oils made from a corn or cottonseed base. A malt, a cider, a wine vinegar or one of these vinegars flavored with tarragon will each give a different character to your dressing. Lemon or lime juice used instead of vinegar will lend an individual note.

Whatever acid you use, be sure that you do not overdo it. Many dressings are too sour. While the standard proportions are supposed to be three tablespoons of oil to one tablespoon of vinegar or lemon juice, four to one often makes a more desirable combination. Besides salt, pepper and sugar, which are always used for seasoning, a little mustard, chile sauce, ketchup, or a dash of one of the sauces of the Worcestershire type are good additions. Some prefer to have the bowl rubbed with garlic or add some sliced onions or onion juice.

Chiffonade Dressing

½ cup French dressing
2 tablespoons minced celery
1 teaspoon minced parsley
1 tablespoon minced onion
1 hard-boiled egg, finely minced
2 tablespoons minced green pepper, or cooked beets

Mix other ingredients and add to French dressing.

Special French Dressing

1 cup salad oil
1 cup sugar
¾ cup malt vinegar
1 teaspoon grated onion
½ cup ketchup
1½ teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce

Mix ingredients and beat until thick. Store in refrigerator and beat before using.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Duluth—The state convention of the Minnesota Library association will be held here October 1, 2 and 3, Miss Jane Morey, chief librarian, announced.

Minneapolis — Continued business gain in Minneapolis and the northwest were reflected in July carloadings, the Minneapolis Traffic Association reported. The combined received and forwarded cars showe an increase of 14,143, or 46.5 per cent, over July, 1935.

Winona—A survey of southeastern Minnesota sportsmen indicated a vehement protest is in the making to the state conservation commission against the proposed uniform season for upland game. Hundred of letters opposing the suggestion have already been mailed from Winona, Rochester and other points in the territory.

New Prague—The contest against Fred A. Curtis, Democratic nominee for governor, is to be withdrawn, Dr. E. E. Novak of New Prague, losing candidate, announced. He said friends started it because of certain false and malicious statements in the primary campaign, but no constructive purpose will be served by a continuance of the action.

Newport—Old showboat days on the Mississippi are in for a revival this fall when Roy Joles of Newport takes the Mantou, last of the floating palaces on the river, down the Mississippi with a floating zoo. Jones recently bought the boat at Guttenberg, Iowa, where it was stranded for two years with a for sale sign on it. It is being towed to St. Paul.

Minneapolis—With the opening of high school football practice less than a month away, it was learned that the 1936 Minneapolis champions may have a real prize to shoot at through the regular schedule. Arrangements are in the making now to send this year's prep title holders to Lincoln, Neb., to meet the leading team of that city in a special post-season affair.

St. Paul—Frank Knox, Republican vice presidential candidate, will invade Minnesota soon after President Roosevelt has been here on his drouth-inspection tour, it was announced. Mr. Knox will be in the state Sept. 9 winding up the day with a big meeting, following a parade, at St. Paul auditorium at 7:30 p. m. His speech will be heard on a radio hookup.

Inver Grove—Minnesota's little red school houses are doomed. Modern equipment and structures erected under WPA auspices will gradually replace the one-room buildings. Two Dakota county towns are now witnessing the metamorphosis. They are Inver Grove and Empire. Black paper blackboards will no longer be the writing slate of countless children in the rural communities.

Wayzata—An unauthorized bite out of a sandwich of a fellow diner started a series of exciting episodes that reached justice court with George Gillettee, Wayzata, accused of discharging firearms contrary to law, Gillette, the sandwich biter, allegedly provoked a row in the Wayzata Diner when he grabbed a sandwich from one of six youths eating in the place and took a size-able bite of the delicacy.

Milan—Plans are being made here to accommodate an increased crowd at the third annual Lefse day celebration Thursday and Friday September 10 and 11 according to Henry Thorson president of the Milan Booster Club sponsors of the event The program will include addresse, free movies, a full sports program, free acts, a parade, and concessions of all kinds. Free Lefse and coffee will be served to everyone.

St. Paul—More than 500,000 game fish, including 202,000 crappies, 213,000 sunfish, 6,500 bass and 4,600 pickerel, have been rescued from drying lakes this season, according to George Weaver, state superintendent of fish propagation. All fish are carefully sorted by fishery employees to remove carp and other rough fish, and the game fish are restocked in lakes that are not already infested with rough fish.

Brainerd—F. B. Andreen of New Ulm was elected commander of the Minnesota department, American Legion, to succeed Harald Rogers, Minneapolis. Andreen won with 348 votes on the fourth ballot after a spirited three-cornered contest. J. L. Whelan, Albert Lea, was elected first vice commander; Carl Mousky, Sauk Rapids, second vice commander, and A. C Shaefer, Duluth, third vice commander. The Rev. Bernard H. Wessling Fergus Falls was chosen department chaplain. Delegates to the national convention will be Harold N. Rogers retiring commander, Andrew Anderson, Eagle Bend, and Michael B. Hurley, Pine City. Mrs. C. F. Moore, Jr., of Minneapolis was elected president of the Auxiliary

Fort Snelling—Responding to requests of horse lovers throughout the northwest, Brig. Gen. David L. Stone, commanding Fort Snelling, announced a horseshow will be held at the fort Sept. 27, the closing day of the Twin Cities polo tournament, being held Sept 20 to 27. Classes will probably include lightweight and ladies' hunters, best individual polo pony, best string of four ponies, officers' charger class and designation of the best playing pony of the tournament.

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mud Slinging Ahead

Washington. — As the political campaign waxes warmer, it becomes painfully evident that the fight in 1936 for the suffrage of the people is going to be very dirty. It is going to be bitter and there is no way now apparent that such a characteristic can be avoided.

I do not believe that either Governor Landon, the Republican candidate, or President Roosevelt, seeking re-election as a Democrat, can prevent the hurling of invectives that are going to be very close to mud-slinging. Naturally the President of the United States seldom makes a mud-slinging speech and Governor Landon personally is a mild-mannered man who believes in discussing issues rather than individuals, but the intentions or the desires of these two candidates cannot control the bitterness that is, to my mind, certain to be found in this campaign in a large measure.

As typical of the sort of thing to which I have referred is the recent speech of Secretary Ickes who, in a national radio broadcast, became quite ill-tempered in his attack on Governor Landon. Mr. Ickes is not known for his composure anyway and when he gets heated up on any subject he is likely to be guilty of remarks that are not becoming to an official of our government or any other.

I have not the slightest doubt that before the campaign has proceeded much further there will be similar speeches attacking Mr. Roosevelt personally and that, while Governor Landon may not approve, there will be unworthy charges hurled at the President.

Mr. Ickes skated pretty close to the line in his attack on Governor Landon by various adroit phrases which were designed to create the impression that the Republican candidate was either ignorant or dishonest. I do not know Governor Landon personally but I can offer this thought: No man is going to be nominated by any political party in a national convention, nominated by acclamation, unless his record is pretty clear. For Mr. Ickes to say, therefore, in effect, that Governor Landon had sold out to "Wall Street" was not the sort of campaign discussion likely to produce confidence among all the people in their government. It is comparable, in my opinion, to a charge that the President of the United States, who advertises himself continually as a friend of the common man, was guilty of increasing his own personal fortune through presidential acts—and every one knows this is not true. But to get back to the theme song of the Ickes' speech, it seems to me that the tragedy of his radio pronouncement lies in the fact throughout his discussion he was preaching class hatred. Every one knows, of course, attacks on "Wall Street" are very common in any political campaign. The demagogues use it every hour of every day everywhere they can find any one to listen to them. It is ridiculous, but it has happened for a good many years. So when Mr. Ickes made the charge that Governor Landon was either unwittingly or knowingly leading a "rich man's fight" against President Roosevelt he was descending to a rather low level of campaigning.

* * *

May Cause Showdown

I have seen indications of a reaction against the Ickes' speech in another way. John Hamilton, the Republican national chairman, on his recent organization tour of the western states, propounded the inquiry that seeks to identify the "economic royalists" about which President Roosevelt spoke several weeks ago. If the Roosevelt campaigners continue this class hatred propaganda, I rather suspect from what Mr. Hamilton said in his speeches there will be a perfect barrage of demands to know the names of these economic royalists. It may not seem important; indeed, it seems like it probably is inconsequential, but if the Republicans let down a barrage on the President of the United States, he is likely to be put in a bad corner.

Without attempting to forecast what the Republican opposition is likely to say, I can recall as an observer close to the wheels of government during the Roosevelt regime that Mr. Roosevelt frequently was a guest on the Astor yacht and that one of his chief advisors for many months was the multimillionaire, Bernard M. Baruch. It seems also that a very rich man, Henry L. Doherty, was in charge of the nation-wide dance program held on the President's birthday and Mr. Doherty, be it said, is head of one of the great utility chains.

These are just samples. It may be good politics for the President to encourage these attacks without approving them, but those of us who knew the late Louis McHenry Howe, are convinced that he never would have agreed to that sort of attack, had he been alive and serving as the President's closest political advisor as he did for a quarter of a century.

* * *

Probe G-Men

There is a situation in the federal government that threatens to be quite nasty. I refer to the row that has developed between the Department of Justice bureau of investigation (the G-men) and the Treasury's secret service corps. It is all very much under cover, quite secret, but the row has come to the surface sufficiently to result in a demotion of two long-time members of the secret service.

J. Edgar Hoover has been well press-agented as chief of the G-men. Joseph E. Murphy has had almost no advertising as assistant chief of the Treasury secret service in which he has served for more than a quarter of a century. Mr. Murphy and one of his subordinates have been reduced in rank, their record stained for life.

The two departments have kept the facts well covered up. It seems that something was going on among the G-men that the Treasury secret service thought they ought to know about. They conducted their own inquiry, their own investigation into the other staff of investigators. That is as much as has been made public except Secretary Morgenthau's announcement of the demotion order. I have known each of these men equally twenty years. Each is entitled to the utmost respect. But each operates along an entirely different line—Hoover with some willingness for publicity; Murphy with an absolute policy of never letting his name get into the papers. It is unfortunate that Joe Murphy was the goat.

* * *

Action Mystifies

The board of governors of the Federal Reserve system took an action recently that probably is quite mystifying to the average person. They ordered all of the banks of the country which are members of the Federal Reserve system to keep a deposit reserve with the Federal Reserve banks 15 per cent greater than ever has been required before.

With the technical phases of reserve requirements and the mechanical operation of this particular order, I think we need not be very much concerned. But with the principle upon which this action is taken I think every one with a bank account, however small, ought to be vitally interested. They ought to be interested for the very simple reason that this action illustrates better than any words I can write how far the centralization of control of the banking structure has gone. This action was taken under the National Banking act of 1935, a statute that has been frequently criticised as a "political banking act."

In the instance I have just reported, the change in the reserve requirements probably will have no serious reaction on us as individuals. It probably will not hurt the banks because few banks in the country have had calls for loans in any quantity since business is at such a low level. But the point is that under this law, the Federal Reserve board of governors can alter banking conditions over night. It can issue new rules and regulations that are wholly impossible of understanding by the average individual, but which are almost riotous in their effect upon the management of individual banks throughout the country.

To state this proposition in another way, may I describe it in the terms of a private business enterprise. If a storekeeper in a small town were subjected to regulation from Washington and the regulatory power in the federal government had such discretionary authority as the Federal Reserve board of governors, could that storekeeper ever feel that he was managing his own business? I think not. Then, in the case of the Federal Reserve board of governors, it must be added that the president of the board is Marriner S. Eccles who is known far and wide for his radical ideas about banking. It can be further said that Mr. Eccles has the ear of President Roosevelt. This has been criticised many times of course where opponents of the Roosevelt banking policies have contended that the banks can be utilized in any way the administration desires to use them. As an illustration of this, the federal government has been borrowing billions. Most banks are chock full of government securities. While I do not say it has happened, yet because I do not believe it has happened yet, nevertheless there is a possibility that government borrowings can be forced on the banks under such conditions. That is the course of action that has ruined the currency in half a dozen European nations.

For the Little Princess

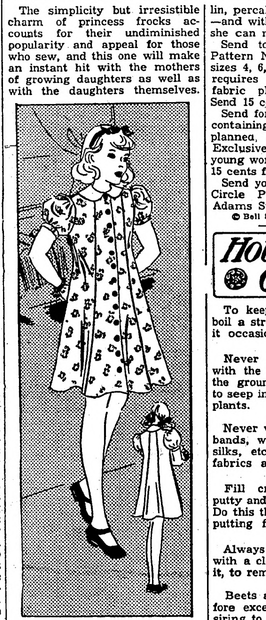
The simplicity but irresistible charm of princess frocks accounts for their undiminished popularity and appeal for those who sew, and this one will make an instant hit with the mothers of growing daughters as well as with the daughters themselves.



1828-B

Slightly fitted at the waist to accent the mild flare of the skirt, this pretty and petite princess model goes together like a charm, the result of a minimum of effort and expense. Puff sleeves, a contrasting Peter Pan collar, and a row of small bright buttons down the front complete the picture.

Daughter will love to choose her own fabric — a printed muslin, percale, challis or sheer wool —and with a tiny bit of coaching she can make the frock herself!

Send today for Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1828-B, available in sizes 4, 6, 8 and 10 years. Size 8 requires 2¼ yards of 35-inch fabric plus ¼ yard contrast. Send 15 cents in coins.

Send for the Fall Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

NEW REVUE TOPS STATE FAIR BILL

Broadway, Hollywood and Radio Contribute Stars to Night Production.

World-wide in scope, universal in appeal, packed with drama and thrills the Minnesota State Fair, September 5 to 12, will present the finest entertainment program in history.

Headlining the galaxy of attractions will be the 1936 Edition of State Fair Revue, the night grandstand production. All new from the first note in the stirring overture to the smashing fireworks finale, this super-production brings together the cream of the show world and presents a musical extravaganza so mammoth and far-reaching that it can be seen only at the State Fair. It features outstanding talent from Broadway, Hollywood, radio and the circus and offers a unified and unequalled presentation.

New Sliding Stages

The cast of 250 includes the American Ainsworth dancers, a colorful ballet of 40, Anita LaPierre, French chanteuse as prima donna, the Eight Nordic Nightingales, the Royal Swedish Bell Ringers, Kaye George and a host of others. For the first time in any outdoor production both sliding and revolving stages will be introduced, permitting the transformation of the elaborate scenic settings before the very eyes of the audience. New effects have been achieved in both scenery and lighting.

New Fireworks Finale

The smashing fireworks finale has been modernized to include the thrilling combination of huge bombs, mammoth shells and stratospheric rockets with 20 thirty-million candle-power searchlights, giving unique effects which rival the dazzling splendor of the Aurora Borealis.

Thirty of the world's leading speedway and dirt track pilots will compete for the official dirt track auto racing championships on four great days: Saturday, Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, September 5, 7, 9 and 12.

Horse racing will again play an important part in the Exposition entertainment program. Harness and running horses will hold the spotlight on Tuesday and Thursday, September 8 and 10. Purses totalling $6,000 with added money are offered the trotters and pacers.

Shoot Down Balloon.

Popular demand has prompted the designation of Friday, September 11, as Thrill Day. The management has arranged an unprecedented program of thrills for this great feature.

The season's smartest and most spectacular equestrian event will be the Evening Horse Show, five nights from Monday through Friday, September 7 to 11. The tan-bark ring in the colorful and brilliantly lighted Hippodrome arena will resound to the thud of hoofs of horsedom's bluebloods. The nation's best riders will compete for $10,000 in prizes and trophies. Added to the regular competitive classes will be special entertainment features.

Indian Village

Construction of birch bark canoes, exhibits of needlework, preparation of wild rice and maple sugar, tribal war dances and other events depicting the life of its members will feature the Indian Village.

The Royal American Shows, with 44 new rides and attractions, and presenting the largest, most brilliantly illuminated midway in the world, have been engaged for the entire Fair.

BALLOON TO BE SHOT IN FLAMES AT STATE FAIR

Headlining the Thrill Day program, Friday, September 11, at the Minnesota State Fair will be the shooting down in flames of a mammoth observation balloon, of the type used by the U. S. Army during the world war.

The 109th Aero Squadron will attack the big "sausage balloon" which Captain R. J. Walters is bringing to the State Fair. Capt. Walters, who was in the balloon division of the Signal Corps, U. S. Army, in the world war, declares that State Fair visitors will see the greatest of all thrills when the gigantic "eye" of the army is shot down in flames.

In addition to the great aerial battle there will be a score of other death-defying feats on the Thrill day program, including a multiple parachute leap in which 12 "bird-men" will leave a cabin plane at the same time; a board wall crash, a roll-over car, the shooting of a man from a cannon, a motorcycle chariot race and maneuvers by the State Highway Patrol.

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

H. O. Hanson, Editor and Publisher — Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota, Friday, Sept. 11, 1936. — Volume 26, Number 20

School Opens September 14

The local school will open for the 1936-37 term on Monday, September 14th. This is a week later than in previous years, at the recommendation of the State Department of Education. The school plant has been thoroughly cleaned and the necessary repairs have been made so everything is in readiness for the opening day. Pupils are urged to enroll on the opening day so complete enrollment figures will be available.

Limited financial aid is available for needy high school pupils thru the National Youth Administration and the State Emergency High School Pupil Aid Program. Pupils who are eligible to such aid may secure application blanks at the Sugerintendent's office on Saturday, Sept. 12th or at any later time. To be eligible for the National Youth Administration funds a pupil must be sixteen years of age.

All the members of the last year faculty have signed contracts for the coming year, except Mr. Jenson who taught the upper grades. Final selection for this position will be made this week.

Sisters Meet After 44 Years

Mrs. Annie Erickson, her daughter Mrs. Hay, and granddaughter of Belloit Wis. spent a week here at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Olson. Mrs. Erickson and Mrs. Olson are sisters and had not seen each other for 44 years.

Millions Honor Landon on His 49th Birthday

TOPEKA, KAS.—"Landon day" was celebrated for the first time on September 9 by millions of Americans who expect that Alf M. Landon, governor of Kansas, will be the next president of the United States.

It will be the 49th birthday of Alf Landon, Republican nominee for president and governor of Kansas, a "typical prairie state." In the nation - wide Landon celebration many friends and admirers in Pennsylvania, the state of his birth, and Ohio, where he spent his boyhood, sent greetings to Gov. Landon.

The Republican National Committee celebrated the day by issuing a new Landon campaign poster. This will be distributed throughout the country. It shows a recent portrait of Gov. Landon. Besides the usual heading, "Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican nominee for president," it carries the following caption which holds him up as a new national leader:

"That leadership along the trail,
Which we have loved long since,
And lost awhile,
Has come to us again."

"Sunflower Salad" Is Campaign Dish

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Even a luncheon dish can come out for Gov. Alf M. Landon for President. Mrs. Thomas Coyle, of 4144 Locust street, delights Republican guests by serving her "Sunflower Salad". Here's her recipe:

Dice contents large can "fruit salad" and drain into bowl. Remove rind from two oranges, cube and add to fruit. Add juice of one lemon to fruit juices.

Add juices and required amount of warm water to contents of two packages of gelatine, stirring mixture till clear. When almost set, add fruit. Mold mixture in shallow sauce dishes.

Unmold on lettuce leaves. Around each mold place sliced canned peaches for sunflower petals. Chopped dates and pecan meats, moistened with mayonnaise to make a paste, form the center (which should be big enough to look like a sunflower and not a daisy, says Mrs. Coyle). Garnish with mayonnaise and vote for Landon and Knox.

Your Creamery

The Creamery, organized and built by the people of this community because they saw the need of co-operative marketing of their farm products, can grow and prosper only in the same proportion as it is patronized by the people of this community. Work and boost for it. The more you patronize it the greater your profits will be. Your creamery is worthy of your most loyal support.

Auto Owners Aid In Survey

More than half a million Minnesota automobile owners, including half of those in Marshall County will receive questionnaires by mail within the next ten days from the United States Bureau of Public Roads relative to their use of the highways in the past year.

The questionnaire is being sent out as part of the highway planning survey being conducted by the United States Bureau of Public Roads and the Minnesota Highway department. The questions asked relate to mileage driven in Minnesota and in other states, and to other phases of motor vehicle operation and owneship. Different questionnaires will be sent to passenger car owners and truck owners.

Highway planning surveys such as the one in progress in Minnesota are being conducted in most of the 48 states under direction of federal road authorities. The surveys are intended to aid the states in getting the most out of the public road funds by planning future highway expenditures in accordance with definite needs.

The state highway department asks the cooperation of citizens who receive the questirnaires, and the prompt return of the requested information.

New Deal Spending Would Buy All Land in 3 States

KALAMAZOO, MICH. — Money spent by the Roosevelt administration this year is enough to purchase, at $100 an acre, all the 36,000,000 acres of land in Michigan, the 24,000,000 acres in Indiana and the 35,000,000 acres in Wisconsin, David W. Davis said here in an address before the Kalamazoo County Republican club.

"As a nation, we are wealthy beyond the dreams and comprehension of man but we cannot yet comprehend the meaning of a billion dollars and the least appreciation of this vast sum is held by the men in Washington who are distributing the taxpayers' billions," said the speaker, former governor of Idaho and assistant secretary of the interior during the Coolidge Administration.

Youths Oppose Roosevelt

Chicago, Ill.—Young Republican voters of the nation will concentrate their campaign against President Roosevelt upon three major issues—taxes, debt, and extravagance, Henry A. Bubb, vice chairman at National Republican Headquarters, declared.

"Nine out of every ten letters we receive here at Headquarters stress these three evils of the New Deal," Mr. Bubb said.

"Young Republicans realize that the New Deal [illegible] at the very foundation of [illegible] for you[illegible]."

From what We have been told there will be wedding bells ringing from about three different places here in the next two weeks or so.

The Business Of Farming

The business side of farming and home making will be emphasized in courses to be offered at the Northwest School during the coming school year. One course in Farm Marketing will be presented thoughout the year by Superintendent A. A. Dowell. This course will include a review of recent farm legislation together with analysis of problems confronting the farmer in the marketing of his products.

Work in Farm Management and Comparative Agriculture will be presented by Prof. R. S. Dunham, agronomist. Prof. E. R. Clark will offer a course in Farm Accounts, which includes practical farm records for the farmers of this region. Rural economics and rural sociology will be offered by Prof. R. J. Chrisgau, while courses in typewriting, offiice training, and bookkeeping will be given under the direction of Miss Fae Hughbanks.

In the home economics section Miss Reta Beda will have charge of the house planning, household accounts, and home managements.

It is felt that the increasing complexity of social relationships has multiplied problems relating to the business side of farming; consequently, courses dealing with these complex problems are of utmost importance.

Radio Commencement Exercises

More than 200 widely separated chapters of the American Institute of Banking, the educational section of the American Bankers Association hold annually in September a simultaneous commencement exercise at which they listen to the speaker of the evening by radio. This is said to be the most extensive graduation ceremony held by any educational institution. The aggregate membership of the chapters, which are located in cities and towns throughout the United States, totals about 35,000 bank employees and officers. The graduates number each year more than 2,500, and total graduates are now over 25,000.

The Business Outlook

NEW YORK.—The natural forces of recovery have demonstrated their strength and have a momentum which may reasonably be expected to carry the country into new high ground, says "Banking," the publication of the American Bankers Association, in its August issue. The momentary stimulation following the distribution of bonus funds to the veterans has practically died away and is no longer an important business factor. A certain degree of uncertainty arising from the national political campaign is unavoidable, the magazine says.

Foreign Trade

The Commerce and Marine Commission of the American Bankers Association has made a report which shows that the foreign trade of the world for the year 1935 on the basis of its estimated physical volume was 78.9 per cent of the 1929 level. This was 2.1 per cent above the volume of 1934 and is the highest since 1929. The gold values of world trade were much lower due to the lower commodity prices in January, 1936. The combined index of 75 countries showed 35.7 per cent of the 1929 average.

National Bank Growth

Comptroller of the Currency O'Connor announced recently that total deposits of the 5,374 national banks in the United States on June 30, 1936, the date of the last call made for statements of condition, aggregated $26,200,453,000. The figure is a new high record for national banks, exceeding by $1,340,998,000, or 5.39%, the amount reported as of March 4, 1936, the previous high record. The current figures show also that deposits increased $3,682,207,000, or 16.35%, over the amount reported as of June 29, 1935, the date of the corresponding call a year ago.

Rev. T. C. L. Hanson called at the H. O. Hanson home Tuesday evening.

Auction Sale September 10

We are this week advertising the auction sale for V. E. Oakey to be held on his farm east of Holt on Saturday, Sept. 19. He will dispose of all his personal property and move with his family to the west coast.

Mrs. K. Tideman of Fargo, spent the week end at the Paul Olson home. She was accompanied by Mrs. McCallough who visited at the home of her brother Oliver Grondahl.

Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Sorenson of Roseau called at the Rev. and Mrs. T. C. L. Hanson home Monday afternoon.

Culver Dean, son of Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Bottem, was baptised at the parsonage Sunday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Johnny Ness were the sponsors.

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
© The Safety Man

The motorist who burns me to a cinder and no doubt irritates thousands of others is the individual who makes a left turn to turn right.

Have you ever seen a motorist swing into the left lane of the highway to turn right at an intersection? That is the bird I am talking about.

Instead of signaling you that he is going to slow down so that you can at least pass him, he makes a movement to turn left at the intersection and suddenly turns rightr This means that you are directly behind him and in swinging right suddenly find Mr Motorist directly in front of you at an angle.

These people either have no concern or feeling for other motorists or are asolutely ignorant of the right way to drive.

These people must be educated to turn corners correctly and to signal before they turn.

Mrs. Oppegaard Visiting Here

Mrs. Martha Oppegard of Milan, arrived from Crookston, Friday to spend some time visiting at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Rev. and Mrs. T. C. L. Hanson. She was accompanied here from Crookston, where she had spent some time visiting, by Mrs. O. E. Locken and daughters Helene and Mary Ellen and Misses Janna and Nancy Oppegaard who spent the afternoon visiting here.

Card of Thanks

I hereby express my thanks to my relatives, friends and neighbors for the fine birthday party and gifts given me on Sunday, August 23.

Mrs. J. H. Knutson.

One of the largest crowds that have turned out for an auction sale here for some time, was in attendance at the sale at the T. B. Folden farm on Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ener Enerson and children of St. Paul, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Smith and children and Miss Eunice Johnson spent Tuesday afternoon of last week visiting at the Otto Johnson home.

Martin Swenson and Walter Stienhauer have been engaged during the past week in building a woodshed and remodeling the foundation of the schoolhouse in District 20.

We Are All Pupils In Life's School

Again—the familier school bells and the merry noises of the playground.

We go to school, it has been said, not to learn so many facts, but to learn how to learn. For all life is a learning processs.

It is one of the missions of this bank to guide its friends in solving financial problems. The banker's ideas help them—the ideas of the patrons, in turn, help the banker. That is why our little friendly visits are so mutually profitable, as well as enjoyable.

Miss Hambidge was "in."

"Mummery?"

"Play acting," Ridder snapped. "I observed that you'd feathered your nest. I was wrong. Why didn't you say so?"

"I did."

"Can you write?" he asked.

"I don't know."

"Harwood thinks you can. He just left here. He says you earned what we paid you. Well, you'd better go on earning it."

"You mean I'm hired—"

"Hired?" Ridder repeated. "You were hired two months ago. Who ever fired you?"

There didn't seem to be any answer to that.

"Mr. Ridder wants you to work with Jack," Mrs. Ridder remarked. "Keep an eye on him."

"You're going to take Jack—"

"We're taking him home tonight. And Peggy. We hope you'll come out sometimes."

"I want Jack to carry on," Ridder declared, "when I'm through."

He was back at his desk now, and he looked up, almost smiling.

"You said I was a tough bird," he told Barry. "I heard you. Don't apologize. The world needs tough birds. You don't win battles with pigeons. Somebody's got to do a little clear thinking. Somebody's got to know what he's about. We're a soft race. Coddled. Self-indulgent. We need hard going and discipline."

His voice was crisp and sure.

"What's the matter with this young generation? It's fathers had too much money. I was a tough bird because I knew the fight Jack had made, and I didn't help him. I'd tried that, hadn't I? The other way was my only chance to make a man of my son."

There was no lack of emotion in his tone now.

"And you. How did I know you weren't just a cheap swindler? By listening to a lot of warm-hearted generalities? How did I know you weren't a blackmailer—until I saw you were going to give yourself up without squealing?"

"Then you were play-acting?"

"Not on your life. I was watching you like a hawk, but there was a cop out there, and I thought you had a date with him, until I saw your face when I asked you why you sent that wireless to Mrs. Ridder."

Again, he almost smiled.

"There was a cop waiting behind that door, and a girl behind that one. A nice girl. I had to be sure I wasn't messing things up for her."

He glanced at his watch.

"Four o'clock. You people have got to get out of here. I can't spend the day being a sentimental idiot."

"You're neither," Mrs. Ridder said.

"Neither what?"

"Neither sentimental nor an idiot. You're 'a tough bird,' but I like 'em that way."

She was holding on to his arm when Barry closed the big door behind them.

Barry thought she was crying.

"She is my mother, after all," Barry thought. "She's all the mother I never had."

He told Winslow most of it, late that same afternoon.

Peter sat at his desk, looking restless and tired, but happier than he had seemed in some time.

"Pat said she was going to propose to you," he smiled. "Meant it, too; we knew that. Women are funny. Snooted you while things were going right, didn't she?"

Barry laughed.

"I was coming back for her when I got out of jail."

"Your dope on the old man was all wrong," Winslow commented. "He has been cold and hungry. Trucked on a dock once. And as to being 'nuts about anybody,' can't you see that's why he went into reverse when the boy disappointed him?"

He opened the right top drawer of his desk, probing its inscrutable jumble for something to play with.

"You had a close call, though. Ridder knew what he owed you. People forgive what you do to them, but rarely what you do for them."

"Nonsense!"

"It's all ended well," he remarked; "even for Luis Morano. He cheated the chair, and that's what he wanted to do."

"I thought you were so sure of his innocence."

"His innocence of this crime, yes," Peter answered.

Then he rose and touched the magnet to his thermometer.

"When are you sailing?"

"Wednesday."

"Good luck," Barry said, extending his hand across the desk.

Peter turned to take it, freeing his own hand by trying to slip the magnet over the hook from which the thermometer hung.

The magnet promptly fell into the open desk drawer.

"Damn!" Peter exclaimed, probing again.

He retrieved it, at last, from somewhere near the bottom of that astounding accumulation of rubber bands, penwipers, and what not.

Clinging to the metal, held by its magnetic attraction, was another bit of metal.

As Peter dropped the magnet onto his desk, that other bit of metal detached itself, and fell almost at Barry's feet.

Barry picked it up, looked at it, looked again, and then looked at Peter.

Peter was staring at him.

"A 66152," he said. "Yes, that's Kelly's latch-key."

Peter nodded.

"I must have thrown it here weeks ago, and forgotten it."

"I'd throw it somewhere else now," Barry advised. "Somewhere just a little bit safer. Well, good luck, again, and good-by."

He had reached the door when Peter said: "Wait a minute."

Barry waited.

"How long have you known?"

"That you killed Mike Kelly?" Barry asked. "Since last Thursday. I was on the train coming in from Southampton, and I'd just read of Morano's death. 'One of my suspects was guilty,' I thought. 'Peter Winslow can't laugh that off.'"

"I Doped That Out, Too."

He was back in the room now.

"I remembered," he went on, "how you did laugh when I suggested Morano. And how sure you were that I was wrong about every one else. But you never said anything that might've started me on the right track. On the contrary, when I asked you if there was a Mrs. Kelly, you answered, 'Yes. She sued for divorce recently and withdrew the case.' You'd just read that in the Herald Tribune, and the same sentence revealed that, at the time of the murder, Mrs. Kelly was in Harlem. But you didn't mention that. Why? Only one explanation occurred to me, and that was your willingness to keep me on the trail of some one who couldn't possibly be convicted."

Barry sat down again, the other side of the desk.

"Go on," Peter urged. "I'm very much interested."

He was sitting, too, now.

"My interest," he continued, "is strangely impersonal. Almost wholly professional, I think it is. That's very curious. I'm just a criminal lawyer interested in a crime."

His weariness explained that, Barry thought. As Hambidge had been, and Morano, and Barry himself when talking with Ridder, Peter Winslow was "glad it's over."

"As a criminal lawyer," Barry said, "and a shrewd one, you'd be surprised to know how much you overlooked. Bits of evidence that fitted like a jigsaw puzzle the moment suspicion started anyone putting them together."

"As for instance?"

Barry smiled.

"You told me Morano phoned you at one o'clock the morning of the murder 'to say that one of his girls was in jail,' and would you 'take the case.' But Peggy wasn't in jail, at one o'clock. She'd been released hours before, and Morano knew it. I know ~~that~~ he did phone you. What about? Why, about Kelly's visit to the Cocoanut Bar, of course, and the threat of something in his pocket that was not only a menace to Morano but Kelly's hold over Judge Hambidge. A paper every one seemed to want, and that had disappeared when the body was found.

"What had that paper to do with you?

"If this were a detective story, and you read it, you'd find twenty answers to that question. Judge Hambidge said he couldn't tell the truth because of a woman. Pat said the woman was her dead mother. And, plainly, that had something to do with Morano."

He leaned forward across the desk.

"I couldn't see any link between the two. And then I remembered that Pat's mother was your wife's sister. Pat told me her mother was 'brought up in a little town called Warrenton.' That meant your wife came from Warrenton, too. And Morano had told me he came from Fauquier county. I went to my atlas. Warrenton's in Fauquier county. There used to be a military school there. Mrs. Winslow ran away with her first husband while he was a cadet in a military school."

Peter leaned forward, too.

"And Morano—" he began, tensely.

"I don't know whether Morano went to a military school or not.

"But George Selby did.

"Morano and George Selby were the same man, weren't they?"

It was after six o'clock now.

The outside offices were deserted and silent.

But the noise of traffic drifted up from the street.

For almost a minute, that was the only sound in the room where these two men sat facing each other.

Then Peter said, "Yes, they were the same man."

"I was sure of it," Barry resumed. "The papers reported that Selby was drowned in Philadelphia. But the body they identified had been in the water two weeks. Fresh water. So that identification didn't amount to much. Violet Fane had told me Morano bought the house down town because he was 'married onct,' and he and his wife lived there. The sob-story I dug out of the tabloids said Selby was 'blissfully happy' with his bride in a house he'd rented down town. Obviously, the same house. Sentimental? Yes, but Morano was a sentimental cuss. So sentimental that he might have died rather than have it discovered that your wife was really his wife."

Barry saw Peter wince, but went on.

"Of course, he had another reason for resisting arrest—that 'hot spot' with which Kelly threatened him. If Morano had been arrested, and fingerprinted, they'd've learned that he was George Selby, and wanted for murder. Morano made certain of that. The 2:12 train he caught at the Penn station went to Philadelphia. That's where he was all the next day—checking up on the finger-prints taken when Selby was sent to the State penitentiary, and, perhaps, trying, through underground channels, to have them removed from the files.

"I had the motive for the murder now.

"Kelly knew Morano was Selby, and so that your wife was technically a bigamist. That was the threat he held over Morano, and Judge Hambidge. The threat that persuaded the Judge to write a 'crooked decision.' The paper Kelly had in his pocket was a marriage certificate, or something of the sort, he'd found somewhere."

"In an old trunk," Peter said; "in the house he bought at 24 Jefferson street."

Barry nodded.

"I doped that out, too. Both Morano and Hambidge had plenty of reason to kill Kelly.

"But neither had as much reason as you had.

"If you knew of the existence of that paper.

"And you did, didn't you? That's where Morano's telephone message came in. That's why he called you up from the Cocoanut Bar. To tell you he'd seen the paper, and Kelly had it."

"Right," Winslow said, simply.

"My inquiry was narrowing down to you and Morano. But how did either of you get in to Kelly? And then I remembered that, the day I first saw Mrs. Kelly, she came into that house and left her key in the door. I did the same thing this week. Anybody might. Especially a drunken man. That would explain why the key wasn't on Kelly's body. It would explain how our third caller entered while Kelly was talking to Judge Hambidge."

"Right," Winslow repeated.

Salt Mine Clean

Totally unlike a coal mine, a salt mine is a perfect example of cleanliness and orderliness, observes a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Although the mine is in full operation, neither workmen nor machines are to be seen, for salt mining consists of nothing more than a series of water pipes which continually spray the sides of the mine with water under high pressure. This water, bringing with it the salt from the walls of the mine, falls to the bottom of the shaft. It is accumulated in reservoirs and then pressed overhead where the salt crystals are retained in large pans. About 120,000,000 pounds of salt are extracted every year from the Salsburg mine in Austria, one of the most famous in the world.

Cider Like Champagne

Just as wine is the drink of France, so cider is the drink of Normandy. This northern part of France does not have summers warm enough for grapes, but the gnarled apple trees which dot its fertile countryside give it a nectar just as sweet, and one that, prepared carefully, will sparkle and bubble like champagne.

Normandy's greatest attraction is Mont-Saint-Michel, which rises like a great pyramid just off the coast. Originally built as a fortification, it was later made an abbey of the Benedictine fathers.

Cross Stitch Sampler

Pattern 1187

No matter what the Season—a sampler's always fun to do, especially when it offers as colorful a picture, as quaint a verse, as this. You'll find it a grand way to use up scraps of cotton or silk floss, and a design that works up in no time, for the background is plain. Wouldn't it go beautifully in a young girl's room? Perchance that Young Miss will want to do this easy cross stitch design herself!

Pattern 1187 comes to you with a transfer pattern of a sampler 12 1-4 by 15 1-4 inches; color suggestions; material requirements; illustrations of all stitches used.

Send 15 cents in stamps or coins (coins preferred) for this pattern to The Sewing Circle Needlecraft Dept., 82 Eighth Ave., New York, N. Y.

Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

The Gift of Instinct

SURELY no instinct was ever given in vain; without an appointed end, and that end involving good. And if so, it cannot be supposed that man is so mocked of his Maker as to have been gifted with capacities for intellectual inquiry, and inspired with an inextinguishable thirst for knowledge; so constituted, also, to derive from its acquisition a pleasure quite unaccountable as that produced by the harmony of sounds—to no purpose—with no results, but that when he dies all his thoughts perish.—Mrs. Alfred Gatty.

Smiles

Simple Error

"Whatever has happened?" asked the puzzled husband. "Why have you got that plaster over your left eye?"

"Plaster? That is my new hat."

Seven Soups

Sailor (to waiter)—Hi, waiter, is this soup?

Waiter—Yes, sir.

Sailor—Well, would you believe it! To think I've been sailing on soup all these years, and have just found it out! — Pearson's Weekly.

Simplification

Teacher — What does fortification mean?

Willie—A big fort.

Teacher — Correct. What does ratification mean?

Jack—A big rat.

Sentimental Arithmetic

Norman had come upon Elsie dozing in a deck chair on the sands, and when she woke up she accused him of stealing a kiss.

"Well," said Norman, "I admit the temptation was too strong to be resisted. I did steal one little kiss."

"One!" exclaimed Elsie, indignantly. "Why I counted seven before I woke up."

"Golden Rose"

The only gift in the world that is made exclusively to royalty is the "Golden Rose," which is presented by the Pope to a sovereign or a member of a reigning family who merits it through pious deeds. It is a solid gold replica of a spray of roses in a vase which, through essential oils concealed in the petals, possesses a lasting fragrance. — Collier's Weekly.

NEW PRESSURE LAMP PROTECTS EYESIGHT

Provides 300 Candlepower "Live" Natural Brilliance For Only 1c a Night

A new mantle lamp that protects your sight with 300 candlepower "live," air-pressure light is bringing "eye-health" to thousands of homes, especially in rural communities. This lamp gives 5 times more light than any mantle lamp which has no provision for air pressure. Special laboratory tests prove its brilliance is nearest like natural daylight . . . kind to eyes!

W. C. Coleman, pioneer inventor of gas-pressure appliances, has spent 36 years perfecting this lamp. It makes its own gas . . . burns kerosene or gasoline. It operates for only 1c a night! It is clean, safe, and is an ornament in any home.

Eyestrain is caused by poor and insufficient light, and often results in serious damage to the eyes. Now, nobody need take chances with their precious sight. This new Coleman Lamp is so inexpensive that no one can afford to be without it. It provides plenty of light for every home need . . . for reading, sewing, studying, playing.

Readers of this paper can get full details of this remarkable lamp, including illustrations of the many beautiful models, by simply sending a postcard to W. C. Coleman, Dept. WU-171, Wichita, Kansas.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as nature intended—fail to remove impurities that poison the system when retained.

Then you may suffer nagging backache, dizziness, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, puffiness under the eyes, feel nervous, miserable—all upset.

Don't delay? Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are especially for poorly functioning kidneys. They are recommended by grateful users the country over. Get them from any druggist.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

'Social Defense' in Russia

Washington. — The Associated Press carried a dispatch from Moscow a few days ago that had more in it than just the announcement that certain oppositionists among the Soviet leaders were to be executed. The dispatch reported that 16 confessed conspirators against the Soviet state were sentenced to death by the firing squad as the "highest measure of social defense" of a government.

It reported a new stage in the so-called progress of Communism in the Russian state. For the first time since the Bolsheviks came into power they ordered the death penalty for some of the leaders who marched in the Revolution of October, 1917.

So we have a clean sweep now of the men who sat next to the dictator, Lenin; the men who were his closest advisors in council are out of the way, and in their place remains the extensively practical and strong-willed executive, Stalin, who has in this instance declined to allow theory to interfere with a condition.

Here is the picture. Leon Trotsky in exile and under sentence of death if he returns into Russia. Zinoviev shot to death. Kamenev also executed by a firing squad (he will be remembered as an outstanding pillar of Bolshevism). Tomsky, a suicide. Rykov, Bukahrin and Rodek under investigation by the dreadful Ogpu. A hated secret service is looking into the records of Sokolnikov and Pyotakov. The latter two have been important advisors to Stalin. But what is all of this about? The answer is simple. While these men were charged with plotting the murder of Stalin, with conspiracy, beneath it all lies the thirst of men for power. Through all of this since the fall of the Russian empire and the execution of Czar Nicholas, the Communists have pushed forward. The strongest of them have traveled. That is the why of Stalin. Yet as most always happens under any circumstance where the will of a few men runs free, they have inflicted to the last degree the power that they have gathered unto themselves. In so doing they have not failed to reserve unto themselves such considerations as they thought necessary—a perfectly human trait of character answerable only where a whim becomes a will and there is power to carry it out.

Between Stalin, who was able to enforce his will, and Trotsky, who dwelt in the starry heavens of theories and dreams, there is only a theoretical difference. Each wanted Communism. Trotsky considered the problem in the terms of world revolution; Stalin thought of it as the Russian state and recognized his capacity to carry his plans through in that jurisdiction. So the Stalin-Trotsky feud, as it has turned out to be, has become ferocious and any one who has gone contrary—even entertained thoughts contrary to the will of the mighty Stalin—committed a sin against the state. And a sin against the Russian state under Stalin means to disappear.

Lesson for Americans

It seems to me there is an important lesson for the American people in that situation. Stalin, along with Hitler and Mussolini, is always right. It matters not what the people may desire, what their philosophy of life and living may be, how they propose to encourage or accept responsibility for self-government, the dictatorship continues.

Many times in these columns I have criticized bureaucracy in the federal government. There are so many bureaucrats in Washington now that some one has bitterly described them as locusts. It may seem quite a jump from bureaucracy to dictatorship but the difference actually is very small. When the people of the United States concede to the federal government such rights as the federal government attempted to exercise in NRA and even to a greater extent in the AAA, they are taking the first step to grant to a centralized government the authority that leads to absolute control of the person and everything that person does.

There are conditions undoubtedly that need to be remedied before our form of government is anything like perfect. There is always to be considered changing conditions and the changing whims of people themselves. But I entertain the conviction that so long as the American people are unwilling to accord increasing powers to the federal government, the nation as a whole will go forward, civilization will progress and we will enjoy having a government.

Bullitt's Big Job

The transfer of William C. Bullitt from his recent post as ambassador to Russia to a similar assignment in France upon the resignation of Ambassador Straus has occasioned but very little comment, but it seems to me in view of all conditions and circumstances that it should attract attention. He will take up the job as the chief American diplomat at Paris in most troublesome times, the most difficult, perhaps, that have confronted an American diplomat anywhere since the days of 191: to 1916. Appointment of Mr. Bullitt then, it would appear, is a move that calls into consideration not only the conditions which he will meet as our ambassador but also his qualifications for the job.

It is to be remembered, first, that the post of ambassador to Paris is the second highest in rank among our foreign diplomats. It is a post that always has called for about the best that our nation can turn out in the way of tactful representation even though we always count the assignment to London as the No. 1 ranking post. The reason is that we seldom, if ever, have had the problems to deal with in the case of the London government that continuously arise between the United States and France. We always have been friendly with France in modern times, but it can not be denied that there has been constant friction between the two peoples. The same has not been true concerning Anglo-American relations. Hence, the job at Paris has always been regarded as more difficult than that at London.

As for Mr. Bullitt's capacity, there is a general feeling that he is not an outstanding diplomat. He has achieved success in some lines, yet I believe the consensus is that in so far as his recent service at Moscow is concerned, the Russians can claim much greater success in dealing with the United States than we can in dealing with the Soviet.

Those of us who were present as observers in Washington during the days when Foreign Commissar Litvinov met with President Roosevelt in the series of conferences that resulted in recognition of the Union of Soviet Socialistic Republics can not fail to recall how Mr. Bullitt labored to accomplish that recognition. It will be recalled as well that Mr. Bullitt insisted throughout these negotiations how trade would follow recognition. He urged that the 13-year old policy of non-recognition, held by Wilson, Harding, Coolidge and Hoover, should be cast aside in the interest of trade, predicting a great flow of commerce between the nations. President Roosevelt eventually made that the real basis for granting recognition.

None of the predicted trade has come about. None will be possible until the Soviet finds means of paying for American goods. American business men are a bit old fashioned. They want to be paid for what they sell.

After what some critics have called Mr. Bullitt's "dismal failure" at Moscow, he is promoted to the French post. The selection comes at a time when French internal politics are boiling. It comes likewise at a time when the Washington government is striving to expand American exports and when it is hoped that there will not be a further decline in outbound shipments such as official figures of the Department of Commerce show has taken place in trade with Russia.

Upsets Apple Cart

Senator James Couzens of Michigan who is up for re-election this fall has sort of upset the apple cart for the Republicans, although they profess not to be particularly worried. The senior senator from Michigan has always served in the senate as a Republican but now he makes the announcement that he is going to support President Roosevelt for re-election and that brings the senator's regularity as a Republican into question.

Senator Couzens has been a powerful man politically in Michigan in years past. He has served his city, Detroit, and his state and the nation in a distinguished way. Obviously, such service builds up an important political following but, according to superficial indication, no one knows exactly how much remains of that following. This statement assumes that the senator's strength is not as great as it used to be and all current information supports that view. Yet, in politics, nothing is certain and that is the reason why Senator Couzens's action has proved disturbing.

Former Gov. Wilbur M. Brucker is seeking the Republican nomination for the senate in Michigan and thus the incumbent has his difficulties in getting the nomination because the Democrats will have a candidate of their own. Be it said in favor of Senator Couzens, however, he was fair with the voters of his party by announcing before the primaries what his attitude would be respecting the presidential candidates and his sincerity in this regard may have some effect. On the other hand, it is difficult to say how dyed-in-the-wool Republicans can remain with Senator Couzens after an announcement by which he virtually has read himself out of the party.

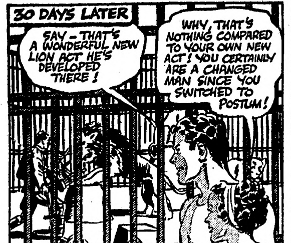
SID, I CAN STAND YOUR BAD TEMPER, BUT YOUR INDIGESTION AND LOSS OF SLEEP WILL MAKE YOU MISS THAT TRAPEZE SOME DAY — AND I'LL BE A WIDOW!!
YEAH? BUT WHY DID YOU HAVE TO TELL THAT ANIMAL TRAINER ALL ABOUT IT? WHAT BUSINESS IS IT OF HIS?
HE'S NO ANIMAL TRAINER! WHY, IT TOOK THOSE LIONS THREE WEEKS TO TEACH HIM THE ACT!!
MR. COFFEE-NERVES
I WANTED SOME ADVICE ABOUT YOU! ONCE HE GOT NERVOUS AND JITTERY, JUST AS YOU ARE NOW, AND HE LOST CONTROL OF HIS LIONS!
YEAH, BUT HE GOT OUT ALIVE — WHICH PROVES THAT LIONS WON'T EAT HAM!
THE DOCTOR WHO DRESSED HIS TORN ARM SAID HE HAD COFFEE-NERVES — MADE HIM QUIT COFFEE AND SWITCH TO POSTUM!
THAT'S A LOT OF BUNK!
— AND NOW I SUPPOSE A LION WOULDN'T BITE HIM EVEN IF HE BIT IT FIRST!
WINTER Q
IT'S NOT BUNK! YOU DO DRINK TOO MUCH COFFEE, — AND I'LL BET YOU'VE GOT COFFEE-NERVES! WHY DON'T YOU TRY POSTUM?
OH, ALL RIGHT, I WILL! — IF YOU'LL KEEP QUIET ABOUT THAT ANIMAL TRAINER!
CURSES! I'M LICKED AGAIN!



30 DAYS LATER
SAY — THAT'S A WONDERFUL NEW LION ACT HE'S DEVELOPED THERE!
WHY, THAT'S NOTHING COMPARED TO YOUR OWN NEW ACT! YOU CERTAINLY ARE A CHANGED MAN SINCE YOU SWITCHED TO POSTUM!
Paul ARTHUR

OF COURSE, children should never drink coffee. And many grown-ups, too, find that the caffein in coffee disagrees with them. If you are bothered by headaches or indigestion or can't sleep soundly...try Postum for 30 days. Postum contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. Try Postum. You may miss coffee at first, but after 30 days you'll love Postum for its own rich, satisfying flavor. It is easy to make, delicious, economical, and may prove a real help. Some people fail to realize that it takes a longer distance to stop a car driven at a high speed. Night driving at 60 to 80 miles an hour is exceedingly dangerous. The present automobile lighting system does not take into consideration excessive driving speeds and the distance automobiles require to stop.

Sir Malcolm Campbell has powerful brakes - several sets of them - yet from top speed it takes five miles to bring his car to a stop.

Control your speed where conditions require it to be controlled You will then be able to stop.

School Opened Here Monday

The local school opened on Monday of this week, with an enrollment of 115 pupils. This is about the same number as enrolled on the opening day last year. A few additional pupils are expected to enter next week.

There is one change in the faculty. Mr. George Karvonen of New York Mills was selected to fill the position of upper grade teacher. Mr. Karvonen is a graduate of the State Teachers' College at St. Cloud, Minnesota, and holds a Bachelor of Education degree from that institution in addition to his elementary school training. He will also teach a class in tenth grade Biology while Miss Hamlin will teach mathematics in the Junior High school grades in addition to the classes in English and Mathematics in the High School Department. This arrangement gives opportunity for the teachers to give instruction in the fields of their major training.

High school pupils who have reached their sixteenth birthday and are from needy families may apply for financial aid from the National Youth Administration. Application blanks may be obtained at the office of the Superintendent. If there are any such pupils in this vicinity who have not enrolled, they are urged to do so as soon as possible as it may be the means of aiding them to secure high school training.

For Sale—3 Registered Shorthorn Bull calves. 3 to 6 months old. 1 white, 1 Red and 1 Roan. Sold cheap if taken soon. Also One Gray Gelding coming 10 years, and Poultry millet $2 per 100 lbs.

Returned From State Fair

Twenty-two boys and girls returned very tired but happy after a week at the Minnesota State Fair. Edwin Willey, Boxville club and Marlan Augustine of Holt 4-H club left Thursday evening September 3 and did not return until Sunday, Sept. 15 They perhaps were the two busiest people at the fair, helping with the ushering at the grand stand and the horse show.

The livestock club members, Harold Rosendahl - poultry, Harold Copp - pig, Albert Michalek - dairy, Lawrence Nygaard - dairy, Clyde Munger - sheep, and Thomas Dziengel - colt, had their animals ready for judging Monday.

Monday morning at 9 started a full week of demonstration with Doris Cheney of the Boxville club giving her individual cake demonstration. Doris placed third in the state' St. Louis county, first, and Lac-Qui-Parle, second. Wednesday Gladys Quantock, Marian Larson, and Helen Dalquist took part in the silent individual bread baking contest. Alvin Grandstrand and Alfred Jensen gave their demonstration "fitting a dairy calf for show."

Glakys Quantock and Sylvia Loyd also gave their bread team demonstration. Wednesday evening all of Marshall County club members took part in the parade formation before the grandstand helping to form a huge four-leaf clover. Dorothy Evans took part in the style revue contest Monday and Wednesday afternoon. Thursday morning Eleanor Larfon gave her demonstration, "canning meatballs", and Vera Grandstrand and Sarah Hanson gave their demonstration on "collars". Thursday was also a busy day for health contestants, Lillian Stoltman and Harry Poolman.

Again Marshall County club members were part of the 1400 who were entertained at the banquet sponsored by the Minnapolis Civic and Commerce Association.

Carmen Lokken of the Wildwood 4-H club did not have any special duties to perform since she represented the county in the clothing project.

Mrs. G. L. Iverson, advisor of the county council was in attendance a whole week.

For Sale — 300 rods of woven wire. 6 old ewes and one purebred buck, with papers. Inquire at Ludvig Sagstuen Holt, or see Sam Leiran, Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

Tow Important Dates

Thursday evening, Sept. 17 at Warren, Friday evening, Sept. 18 at Grygla are two important dates for junior and adult leaders of Marshall County in September These are the dates of the county council and eastern council 4-H club meetings at which time we hope to make plans fort he 1937 4-H club year.

The American Legion trophy which is awarded by the American Legion of Warren will be awarded to the club in the county making the highest rating during the year of 1936.

Announcements will be made as to the winners of the special medals awarded in the various project work.

Two boys will be selected to represent Marshall County at the Conservation Camp at Itasca Park September 24 to 27.

Many Auction Sales Soon

We are this week advertising two auction sales to be held in a few days. The first one is the Herman Heinze sale on Friday, Sept. 25th in the afternoon, and the second one is the J. O. Nelson sale northwest of Newfolden on Monday, September 28.

Don't forget about the big auction sale at the V. E. Oakey farm tommorrow. The sale will start at 11 a. m. Lunch at noon.

Threshing Big Alfalfa Crop

Some time ago W. F. McMurray purchased the largest type Case tractor and brush breaking plow that he could get. He has since also bought a second hand separator and is at the present time busy threshing and breaking up new land for crops next year.

Mr. McMnrray has one of the largest afalfa crops in this community and is giving the grass seed farmers to the counties north of us a close call when it comes to bushels per acre and quality of seed.

Miss Irene Wegge who came Sunday to visit with her mother, Mrs. Louis Wegge, and with Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Wegge and Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Wegge for a few days, returned to Fargo Wednesday. Mrs. Dennis Wegge accompanied her to Thief River Falls where they visited with Miss Lucy Wegge.

Safetygrams BY FRED W. BRAUN The Safety Man

I am going to ask a question here on the consumption of gasoline, as it is considered in the speed your car is traveling.

When do you consume the least amount of gas?

(a) At 6o miles an hour, because you are getting somewhere?

(b) At 50 miles an hour?

(c) At 30 miles an hour?

Statisticians have given this considerable thought. Gasoline companies report that a car which gets 18 miles per gallon at 30 miles an hour gets only 13 miles at 50 and 10 miies at 60.

Some of you speeders who brag about covering mileage at unusual speed to the discomfort of pedestrians and the passengers in your car are doing so not only at an increased cost but also at increased hazsrds.

Take it easy.

Homer's Story of Trojan War Found Historically True

Legend of Achilles Had Foundation in Fact

London.—When Homer sang that Greek warrior Achilles raided the isle of Lesbos at the start of the Trojan war, he was repeating history, not legend.

So Miss Winifred Lamb, archeologist of the Fitzwilliam museum, Cambridge university, is inclined to think after excavating the ancient town of Thermi, on the island of Lesbos.

Hesitantly advancing this romantic theory in a sober and technical report of her excavations, Miss Lamb tells the evidence. She found a great fire blackened and reddened the soil around the mound where the town stood in Bronze Age days.

Evidence Is Convincing.

Pottery the towns folk used is identified as archeological evidence that the fire occurred no later than 1200 B. C. That would be just before the Trojan siege, according to the most usual dating.

"If we turn to Book Nine of the Iliad," says Miss Lamb, "we find an allusion to Achilles' raid on Lesbos, which may, as Professor Myres points out, have been a necessary strategic prelude to the capture of Troy. This event also is believed to have occurred about 1200 B. C. Readers may press the attractive coincidence or point out its weakness according to their taste."

Whether the latest discoveries uphold Homer or not, they have revealed a town not far across the water from Troy, that came under the influence of powerful Troy and acquired its styles and ideas of culture.

Largest Cyclotron Being Constructed at U. of Michigan

Ann Arbor.—Ninety-five tons of iron and copper form the giant electro-magnet which is the foundation of the world's largest cyclotron, now under construction at the University of Michigan.

Alteration of atomic structure, already accomplished with other cyclotrons, may be carried much farther with the Michigan apparatus. It will have practical application in the preparation of radio-active salts for use in the treatment of cancer, in addition to offering an opportunity for scientific investigation of the composition of atoms.

30,000 Volts Impact.

The magnetic field the electromagnet produces, the greatest integrated field ever developed, causes the rotation of ions, electrified particles, introduced into the duants, or halves, of a flat cylinder. The speed of these ions is accelerated by a 30,000-volt impact each time they cross the dividing space between the duants.

In 200 revolutions, according to Dr. James M. Cork, who is directing the construction of the cyclotron, the ions attain a speed equal to that which would result from an impact of 10 to 12 million volts.

As an ion accelerates, its orbit grows larger, until it reaches the outer edges of the duants, where a deflecting blade diverts it against the desired target.

School Boy Discovers Traces of Dinosaur

Berkeley, Calif.—To a California high school student goes the honor of finding the first evidence that dinosaurs once lived on the West coast. Western scientists have for years searched for remains of these great prehistoric reptiles, which lived in the Cretaceous period of geological time some 65 million years ago.

The keen-minded high school student was Allan Bennison, who reported his discovery to paleontologists at the University of California here. Assistant Field Directors Curtis J. Hesse and S. P. Welles of the University's Museum of Paleontology have just confirmed the discovery and made their report in the recent issue of the journal Science.

The discovery, report the University of California scientists, was made in an Upper Cretaceous rock formation near Patterson, Calif., and consisted of over 500 bone fragments which seem to have once been the hind quarters of the gigantic, meat-eating reptile, that walked around on its huge hindlegs.

"Was the third caller you or Morano? And then I remembered two things. Morano took the 2:12 to Philadelphia to check on those finger-prints. He wouldn't've done that if he'd known Kelly was dead. The house was dark and silent when Morano got to Sixteenth street. He thought Kelly'd gone to bed, and so he went to Philadelphia. I was sure of that. And I was sure that the man who killed Kelly wore gloves.

"On a hot night.

"Not because he'd thought of finger-prints, but because he was accustomed to wearing gloves, even in summer.

"It was red-hot the day I came here to tell you about Nolan.

"And your gloves were lying there with your hat."

Peter smiled, faintly.

"I remember, too," he said. "You picked one of them up. But, of course, I might merely have been carrying them."

Barry smiled, also.

"You might," he admitted. "But the glove that fell on the floor was turned inside out. People don't carry gloves that way."

"Well," Winslow observed, "Harwood didn't make any mistake when he said you were a good newspaper man. You're right about everything. My wife was Mrs. Selby. She thought Selby was dead, of course, when she married me. Two or three years ago, I met him on the street. He was d—d decent. 'Believe it or not, I was terribly in love with Julie,' he said. 'I still am. But God knows I'm no husband for her, and you are. You've nothing to fear from me,' he said.

"But I did fear. All my life, I've had one conviction. Murder will out. Everything comes to the surface sooner or later. I urged Julie to get a divorce. 'I can't,' she said, 'without more dreadful publicity. It would ruin your career,' she said. Always thinking of me, Julie is."

He touched the tell-tale magnet, almost lovingly.

"We were still talking about it," he continued, "when Julie went all to pieces again. Just as she had when the tabloids printed the story you saw. I took her to Europe. When we came back, Selby'd disappeared. I didn't even know his new name, and, of course, I didn't look for him. I persuaded myself the danger was over.

"Then came the Jefferson street grab.

"I was upset about what the newspapers said of Judge Hambidge. I'd no idea of what was back of that, of course, and he didn't tell me. I figured that they'd got to him, somehow. And then Morano telephoned, the night of the murder, to say Kelly'd been to the Cocoanut Bar. He'd had the marriage certificate some time, and, through an underworld connection, he knew Selby was alive, but he'd only just found out that Selby was Morano. Someone had told him that afternoon—probably the same man who tipped off Luis' telephone message to Harwood. Kelly had said to Morano, 'Now I've got you, and Hambidge, and Winslow.' 'He has, too,' Luis added, 'unless you can find a way out of it.'"

Winslow's hand closed tightly.

"Julie was upstairs, asleep," he said. "She'd left me an hour before, radiantly happy. I went to see Kelly. Heaven knows what I intended to do. Certainly not murder. I was about to ring the bell, when I saw the key in the door, and used it. Kelly was talking to Hambidge. I recognized the Judge's voice, and slipped into the dining room. Listening, I learned why he had written that decision. And I heard Kelly say, 'If it ain't filed by noon today, I'll have your sister-in-law arrested for bigamy.'

"Hambidge said, 'You can do what you like; I won't file it.'

"The cut-glass decanter was on the table in front of me. I picked it up, almost mechanically. Kelly was in the hall then, shouting 'squealers' and 'beat it.' I suppose I had some vague idea of helping my brother-in-law. I don't know. Anyway, I opened the door between the dining room and the drawing room. And, as I did so, Kelly came in from the hall, closing that door behind him. His left hand was still on the knob when he saw me.

"'More squealers!' he shouted. 'Witnesses! So you heard, did you? Well, by God, you're not going to tell anybody!'

"He lifted his right hand, and there was a revolver in it.

"Another instant, and he'd've fired.

"I hurled the decanter.

"It was just instinct. I didn't take aim. There wasn't time. If I meant to do anything, it was to hit his pistol arm. I don't really know where the bottle did strike. The side of Kelly's head, probably, for it landed against a metal door-hinge, rebounded, fell into a chair, and rolled off to the floor. A moment afterward, Kelly went down in a heap.

"He wasn't dead. A long way from it, for the gun had dropped out of his hand, and he reached for it. I picked it up. Ten seconds later, Hambidge was on the other side of that door, trying to open it, and calling Kelly. I turned the lights out. Hambidge left. I put the revolver into my pocket, and got the certificate out of Kelly's. There was a white push-button in the frame. I pressed it—or thought I did.

"It never occurred to me that Kelly was anything more than stunned. I went home, and burned that marriage certificate. There was no other record; I'd made sure of that. A few hours later, Hambidge phoned to say he'd filed his decision. There was nothing about Kelly in the morning paper. I'd no idea he was dead until long after dinner that night at Southampton."

Barry nodded.

"Of course, my first impulse was to give myself up," Winslow said. "But what good would that've done? They couldn't convict me. I'd killed in self-defense, and could come mighty near proving it. But, in doing so, I'd've given away the secret I'd struggled to keep all these years. I'd've smashed Julie utterly, and ruined Hambidge, and Pat. Nobody was harmed by my keeping my mouth shut. There wasn't a chance of their finding Ridder guilty, or anyone else. If they'd done that, I'd've confessed in a moment."

"I know," Barry declared. "That's what you meant when you said, 'If we have to get the guilty man to free Rogers, we'll do it, but let's give the court a chance first.'"

"Yes."

Peter rose, and went to the window.

"The difficult thing," he continued, "was not to confess. With that boy in jail. But it was letting an innocent man suffer a few weeks, or an innocent woman all her life. If you'd seen Julie's face, when she collapsed, after hearing of Selby's arrest—" He paused. "Of course, neither she nor Hambidge knows I killed Kelly."

Barry said, "They'll never know it through me."

"Bon voyage," he added, blithely, an instant later, his hat in his hand. "And come back soon. I'd like to have you two at my wedding."

[THE END]

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

Never prune climbing roses in the fall. Cut out all dead canes but wait until next spring before cutting out dead shoots.

• • •

If a thick cloth is placed at the bottom of a pan or bowl in which delicate china or glass is being washed the danger of chipping will be lessened. This will also prevent silver from being scratched.

• • •

To clean glass in oven doors rub over with vinegar then wash with soap and water.

• • •

In pressing never put an iron on the right side of any goods except cotton. Always lay a cloth between the iron and the goods.

• • •

If the soil in which bulbs are to be planted is acid, work hydrated lime into the top soil two weeks before planting.

When It Is the Other Fellow

Have you ever noticed that when the other fellow is set in his way, he's obstinate; when you are, it's just firmness? When the other fellow doesn't like your friends, he's prejudiced; when you don't like him, you are a good judge of human nature?

When the other fellow tries to treat someone especially well, he's toadying; when you try the same game, you are using tact?

When the other fellow picks flaws in things, he's cranky; when you do, you are discriminating?

When the other fellow says what he thinks, he's spiteful; when you do, you are frank?

TWO SPECIALS FOR BANANAS

Tasty Ways of Serving One of Our Best Fruits.

By EDITH M. BARBER

AMONG the best of our fruits we rate the banana. Perhaps you question the classification of the banana as such. It has, of course, the advantage of being in season the year around. It always seems to me, however, to be at its best, so far as flavor is concerned, at this time of the year.

This is fortunate because what would the picnicker do without it? How they fill in for the hungry ones who wait for lunch to be ready! At the same time they will furnish a dessert.

Do you like your bananas red or yellow? Some like the flavor of one and some of the other. Red bananas are slightly more juicy and a little more tart. They are not so plentiful as the yellow fruit and therefore are often more expensive. By the way, I had a different type of banana in Jamaica where it is a specialty and very popular. It is too fragile for export, so you will have to go to the tropics to taste it.

On the fruit boats which bring bananas from Central and South America to New York, two specialties found on the menu are bananas broiled in bacon and prepared for dessert with a rum sauce. This, by the way, is a good chafing dish dessert which may be prepared at the table. The bananas are sliced lengthwise, put into the dish with melted butter, sprinkled liberally with granulated sugar and then drenched with rum, which is then set on fire. While they are cooking they should be basted with the sauce formed by the other ingredients. The cooking should be short—just three or four minutes for the sale of texture and flavor.

Apricots with Bananas.

½ pound dried apricots
Sugar
3 bananas

Soak apricots in just enough water to cover for several hours. Cook until very tender. Force through strainer and stir in sugar to taste. Cut bananas in halves and arrange in a greased baking dish. Pour apricot pulp over the bananas. Bake in an oven 375 degrees fifteen minutes. Serve hot or cold. For serving hot, two tablespoons of whipped cream may be put on top of the fruit just before serving.

Fried Bananas.

Peel bananas, cut in halves crosswise or in quarters and roll in softened dry bread crumbs or in rolled cornflake crumbs. Fry in very deep fat, 395 degrees F. until light brown. Drain on soft paper and serve with broiled chops, steak or ham.

Pineapple Mousee.

1 teaspoon gelatin
2 tablespoons cold water
1½ cups crushed grated pineapple and juice
1-3 cup sugar
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 cup cream

Soak gelatin five minutes in the cold water. Heat pineapple and juice to boiling point, add sugar, lemon juice and gelatin. Cool. When it begins to stiffen, fold it into stiffly whipped cream. Pour into tray and freeze without stirring.

Bisque Ice Cream.

1 cup condensed milk
¾ cup water
1½ teaspoons vanilla
1 cup cream
Salt
1 cup macaroon crumbs

Mix milk with water, add vanilla and salt. Whip cream until stiff. Fold into mixture. Turn into refrigerator freezing trays and freeze from three to four hours. Fills two pint trays.

English Shortcake.

6 slices buttered bread
1 quart berries or fruit
1 cup granulated sugar
Whipped cream

Trim crust from bread and line a greased bowl with the slices, cutting corners so that the pieces meet. Pour in the berries, crushed, with sugar, cover with bread, set plate on top of this, press down with a weight and put in the refrigerator twenty-four hours. Turn out of mold, garnish with whipped cream and serve.

Cardamom Cookies.

1 cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs, well beaten
4 cups flour
1 ounce cardamom seeds, crushed
Rind of 1 lemon, grated

Cream the butter with the sugar until light. Add eggs. Add flour, cardamom seeds and grated lemon rind. Chill dough, roll, cut with cookie cutter and bake in a hot oven, 400 degrees F. about eight minutes.

Pleasing Dining Room

A charming old English dining room has walls and woodwork painted Delft blue and a white ceiling cross-beamed with dark oak. The furniture is also of dark oak, while the floor covering has deep rose tones in it. The draperies at the windows are dark blue with a pattern containing the lighter blue of the walls and the rose tones of the floor.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

DECORATING the boy's room is something every mother who has a son finds intriguing. The lad spurns anything that savors of daintiness. He wants a real man's room. It is up to the mother to make the room as masculine in its character as she would make her daughter's room feminine in type.

Most boys delight in boats and boating, and this suggests a nautical room for home, school or college. Fortunately there are many emblems that lend themselves admirably to ornamental use, ships and boats, anchors and ropes, sea creatures and seaweed, lighthouses and rocky shores with waves and breakers, fishermen and oarsmen, etc.

Banks of Galley Oars.

One of the ancient ornamental conceits for weaving, rug-craft, and other craft arts is the galley oarsman. When you know the motif the stylized row of oars or banks, as they are termed, is readily distinguished in what seems to be a maze of design. The motif is, of course, adapted to the necessities of the craft, such as the warp and weft, or filler, as it is frequently termed today.

A large anchor with its chain and fastening done in applique or tufting makes an excellent center motif for a bedspread, and in somewhat smaller size, for the center of sofa cushion covers. Strips of undulating applique supply the wave motif to use as bands for a border. Or if tufting is employed, the wave motif can be done in this work. In plain embroidery chain stitch done in heavy yarns is quick and correct for chains.

Fish and Seaweed.

The fish and seaweed design is just the thing to use on towels, bureau scarf, and table covers. This printed pattern for filet crochet or cross stitch by counted threads, can be had while it lasts, by sending ten cents together with self-addressed, stamped (3-cent) envelope with a request directed to Lydia Le Baron Walker care of this paper.

Wall papers come in lighthouse patterns, seascapes, and ship designs. Or a plain wall paper can be the background for pictures featuring water, wharf, and marine scenes.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Camels and Communists

FLAGSTAFF, ARIZ.—There's nothing new about the fable. The only novelty is in the moral.

One night a camel came and begged to be allowed to poke his cold nose inside an Arab's tent.

So the Arab, being a good-hearted Arab, says yes. Pretty soon the camel claimed his ears were chilly and could he shove in as far as his ears? And the Arab said that was O. K.

Irvin Cobb

Next the camel got permission to put his neck in out of the weather, and, after that, his forelegs and then his front hump, closely followed by his rear hump, and finally his hindquarters.

When morning came the camel was inside the tent, completely filling it, and the Arab had been crowded outside and there he was—poor shivering wretch, as homeless as a ha'nt.

Moral—Every time I hear of an imported Communist smuggling himself into our midst, I think of a cold-nosed camel.

Holding the Bag.

UP TO now our government has declined all invitations to jump into the Italian-German-French-Russian-British snarl, but watch for an effort to induce America to join in when the time comes for dividing up control over poor old Spain's ports, islands and remaining colonial possessions.

Not that we'd want anything out of the grab-bag and not that they'd give us anything. They'd merely expect us to hold the bag afterwards, which would make two bags in all—this little new one and the big one we've been holding ever since 1918.

Travelers' Homecoming.

CALIFORNIA travel bureaus report an increase of incoming tourists. But then again, on the other hand, part of it may be due to returning residents who went hurriedly away when the papers started printing a certain romantic diary. If your sins do not always find you out, at least they frequently find you getting out.

It's all over now and peace and quiet have been restored to our home circles, but at the height of the rush one involuntarily was reminded of the ancient story of the Frenchman who bet with his friend he could prove every man, however outwardly pure, had a dreaded secret in his life. So, to test it, he sent to each of the ten most respected notables in Paris an anonymous telegram reading as follows: "All is discovered. Flee at once."

And next morning nine of them were gone and the tenth had committed suicide.

"Backward" British Justice.

ENGLISH news-reel producers have been fined $10,000 — and that's important money in any language — for titling a film "An Attempt on the King's Life."

Mind you, they weren't punished for any injury this title might do his majesty. Incredible though it sounds to us, the charge was: "Contempt of court for prejudicing the case against McMahon (the man who tried to shoot King Edward) before he was brought to trial."

For contrast, take a not altogether forgotten criminal case.

Possibly you may remember a certain murderer's trial and what sort of publicity went before it, and what actually occurred whilst 'twas being held, and what the aftermath has been, with attorneys and key-witnesses and—yes—actually some of the jurors peddling their private views for public consumption; and the governor of a great state displaying curious and violent activities, even when the verdict had been called a fair one by the high courts?

A Gentleman's Dinner.

BACK EAST, a distinguished continental chef rises up to outline the American gentleman's ideal dinner. He names eight courses, which is too many, and no domestic flavor about any part of it.

In rebuttal, I crave to offer a menu of all native products.

First, Lynnhaven oysters on the half shell, with western celery and ripe olives.

Second, terrapin stew.

Third, rice-fed canvasback duck, with lye hominy and a baked winesap apple.

Fourth, one very small slice of hickory-and-sassafras-cured razorback ham with watercress salad, soused in a plain oil and vinegar dressing.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

THE ANGRY TRAPPER

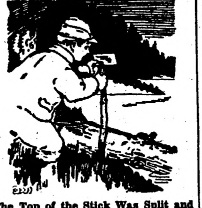
JERRY MUSKRAT had about decided that Farmer Brown's Boy wasn't coming back when he heard footsteps and a moment later Farmer Brown's Boy appeared coming down the Laughing Brook toward the Smiling Pool. Jerry remained hidden where he could not be seen, but where he himself could see all that went on around the Smiling Pool.

In one hand Farmer Brown's Boy carried a bunch of things that clanked as he walked. Jerry knew what they were. He would know those things as far as he could see them. They were steel traps. Jerry scowled as he saw them. The sound of them hitting together sent little cold shivers over him. They were dreadful things, even more dreadful than terrible guns. There was nothing to fear from the latter save when they were in the hands of hunters, and any one with his wits about him ought to be able to see a hunter in time to seek safety.



The Top of the Stick Was Split and in This He Slipped a Piece of Paper.

But these dreadful traps were left hidden in the very places where a fellow had the right to feel safest, ready to seize him in cruel steel jaws and hold him to suffer pain and dreadful fright for hours and hours, sometimes for days. Jerry could think of nothing so dreadful as those steel traps, and so he shivered at the sight of them.

Farmer Brown's Boy threw the traps down on the bank of the Smiling Pool. His usually sunny face was clouded. From his pocket he took a piece of paper and a pencil. Then he sat down and began to write. When he had finished he went over to Jerry's favorite log and thrust a stick in the bank just above it. The top of the stick was split, and in this he slipped the piece of paper. Then he went back, gathered up the traps, slung them over his shoulder and tramped off in the direction of home.

All the rest of that day Jerry kept an eye on that piece of paper at the end of his favorite old log. It puzzled him. He didn't go near it. He didn't dare to. He was suspicious of it. It might be some new kind of trap. Jerry was very unhappy. Early the next morning Jerry heard some one coming down the Laughing Brook. He promptly hid where he could watch. In a few minutes the stranger whom he had one time thought his friend appeared, and it was plain to be seen that he was very angry. He was muttering as he strode along. Almost at once he saw the piece of paper left by Farmer Brown's Boy. He strode over to it, picked it up, and read it. This is what was on it:

"No trapping or hunting is allowed on this property. You, whoever you are, can get your traps at Farmer Brown's house."

The trapper turned and shook his fist in the direction of Farmer Brown's. Then, still muttering, he walked away hurriedly, but not in the direction of Farmer Brown's. Jerry didn't understand it at all, but for some unknown reason he felt better.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

CULINARY THOUGHTS

IT IS just a matter of taste, of course, the kinds of foods we like; tomatoes we all admit are one of our choice vegetables, rich in vitamins and adding attractiveness to any dish by their rich color, but are we not overdoing the tomato sauce business? It is served over all kinds of meat, fish and fowl, as spanish rice, pilaf, creole sauce goulash, hungarian, and otherwise, until the sight of tomato on spaghetti, macaroni and noodles makes us wish we could get back for a while at least to the days of our grandmothers when the tomato was simply an ornament and considered poisonous to eat.

We have too many mixtures in our diets. A sliced ripe tomato served fresh and natural is a thing of beauty and a joy forever, but when we put it into all sorts of mixtures they become a mess. A few such dishes once in a great while might be really enjoyed, but served too often we lose all respect for the delightful vegetable.

Recently on the bill of fare in a famous restaurant we ordered "Old-fashioned Beef Stew." There were visions of brown juicy meat with the accompanying brown gravy, but when it appeared there were large cubes of beef floating in rivers of tomato sauce; imagine a stew called old-fashioned, served thus.

When we disguise the dish we are serving by any sauce too highly seasoned or flavored, we are guilty of a grave dietary error. When we eat potatoes, we want to have them taste like potatoes; meats should always have their own distinctive flavor paramount, and so should it be in all main dishes.

Home of Wild Sheep

Wild sheep of many species occupy mountains in most of Asia, Southern Europe and Northern Africa. Asia has by far the greatest number of species and individuals, and scientists believe it to be the region where wild sheep originated. They must have been fairly early migrants to North America, however, probably crossing from Siberia to Alaska long before the first human beings to populate the New World came over by the same route.

UNFOLD ARMS

THE PUZZLING KNOT

ASK a person to take a handkerchief by opposite corners. That done, request your friend to tie a knot in the handkerchief without releasing either corner.

The longer he attempts to tie the knot the more hopeless his task will become. Eventually, he will challenge you to perform the trick, whereupon you oblige.

Stretch the handkerchief and lay it on a table. Fold your arms, bend forward and grasp one end of the handkerchief between the fingers of your left hand; then shift and gain the other end with the fingers of your right.

Unfold your arms, holding the end of the handkerchief as you do so. A knot forms automatically in the center of the cloth.

SKULLS SHOW SKILL OF EARLY SURGERY

Trepanning Was Practiced in Eighth Century, B. C.

London—That surgeons who practiced in Judea in the Eighth century B. C. were fully conversant with the science of trepanning a skull is revealed by Dr. C. B. Mortlock through exclusive data sent him by J. L. Starkey, head of the Wellcome archaeological research expedition, now in its fourth year of excavation at Tell Duweir, Palestine.

"A large deposit of human remains was found in a disused tomb contemporary with the earlier destruction of the city (Lachish). It is suggested that these 2,000 bodies were the result of salvaging the burned city after the destruction by Sennacherib in 701 B. C. About 700 skulls were in sufficiently good condition for preservation, and are now in London awaiting study," says Dr. Mortlock.

Two Examples of Trepanning

"Besides many interesting pathological specimens and two skulls which were intentionally distorted, there are two examples of trepanning.

"These are the earliest examples of this type of trepanning. All specimens found before have shown that the operation was made by circular scraping, but the two Lachish skulls conform to a technique which was previously only known among the Incas of America. In one skull the surgeon has started the operation on the left parietal and then performed on the opposite side.

"Experts believe that in the case of Inca skulls the patient never recovered from the operation, but there is evidence that the Lachish patients survived. Anthropologists will now have the chance to study a large group of contemporary skulls from the same site, which will result in valuable deductions as to the inhabitants of Judea during the Jewish monarchy.

Shops With Goods Uncovered

"The excavations show that at the last period of occupation there was a public square within the gates, and a group of shops with their stores of goods has been uncovered. All the contents were in position when the roofs fell in from the burning of the city. They were found buried under the ashes.

"The largest shop was that of a weaver. Set in the floor was a large limestone dyeing vat; a row of loom weights marked the position of the looms and a fragment of wooden beam actually remained of the burned loom. From the same shop came a clay seal impression from a papyrus document bearing the impress of a seal 'For Hilkiah the son of Maas.'

"Close by were the premises of a corn chandler, and many jars bearing the royal stamp of Hebron were stacked in a wine and oil store.

"The XVIII-XIX dynasty temple which produced the Duweir Ewer from the later levels has proved equally interesting in the earlier period. A fine group of pottery, including a flat platter, about thirty-five dipper flasks and a painted vase imported from the Greek mainland in the Fifteenth century B. C. was found close to the early altar.

"This continuity of the history of the building is also confirmed by the development of the temple plan, which shows a continuous relationship in the three buildings covering a period from 1480 to 1260 B. C."

San Quentin Prison Has Become Real Melting Pot

San Quentin Prison, Calif.—San Quentin prison, in proportion to its size, possesses a greater cosmopolitan and international population than any other spot in the world, according to a census just completed by Ralph Thatcher, editor of the prison's publication.

Even a session of the League of Nations, meeting within the limited precincts of its own property, hardly can present a more universal international crowd than does San Quentin, he declares.

At present the prison houses about 5,000 inmates coming from virtually every state in the Union, its foreign possessions and from at least 44 countries of the world. An analysis of population shows that out of every five inmates, only one is a native of California, three come from some distant state, and one is from a foreign land.

Japan's Population Rise in 1935 Was Her Biggest

Tokyo.—The cabinet bureau of statistics announces that the increase in Japan's population last year by the excess of births over deaths was 1,028,623, the largest annual increase on record. The nearest approach to it was in 1932, when the increase was 1,007,398.

On an average 240 Japanese were born every hour in 1935, while 133 died.

For the last five years Japan's annual increase of population has been close to the 1,000,000 mark and the total is now above 69,000,000. There were 169 people to the square mile in 1931, compared with 183 in England, 266 in Belgium and 243 in The Netherlands, but Japan has much more mountainous land than the others

Whether or not they bring back any game, they certainly bring back yarns about desperate encounters with bunnies in the hills and dales of the Nutmeg State — yarns that would make Frank Buck blush. Among the more enthusiastic of the hunters is Johnny the Call Boy who is so small that, reports have it, he has to make sure his rabbit is dead before he picks it up, otherwise he would have to fight for his life. Incidentally, I've heard stories of good hunting, even if this isn't rabbit season but I haven't seen a rabbit — except those that occasionally run across the highway at high speed.

The usually reliable geyser spouted once at 11:56 a. m. and then burst into action again at 12:26 p. m., a wait of only thirty minutes. Then followed an interval of ninety-two minutes, or until 1:58 p. m. Old Faithful seldom varies from sixty-five-minute intervals between outbursts.

Shoes and Paradise

By EMILY SPEARS

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

FAY OSBORN almost ran along the street, through the early morning crowds. She had just wrenched the heel off one of her shoes. She'd have to stop at the shoemaker's and have it fixed; and that would make her late to the office—late, too, for all the other things that must be crowded into her busy day. She wanted to get in some shopping, before late afternoon, when she was to have tea with Duke; must get it in, in fact, for she wanted to look her very best. Not that Duke would notice, in all probability. He never had seemed to notice what she was wearing in the old days back home. It was three years since she had seen him. He'd changed in lots of ways, most likely, living abroad and traveling a lot and all that.

The shoemaker was bent low over a delicate little pump when Fay hurried into his shop. She explained that she must have her shoe fixed at once. She'd had to walk the last half block with one heel off, and she couldn't possibly go on that way! Her shoes were rather square, low-heeled ones, but even so it had been difficult.

"But I can't fix that now, Miss," he told her. "I've got a rush order here — two rush orders — and my daughter's getting married this noon, and I've got to go home for that."

Fay looked at him in despair.

"But what can I do?" she cried.

He glanced down at her feet, and then reached to a low shelf and held out a shoe to her. It was a patent leather, slim, high-heeled pump, and a wide buckle made it seem even narrower and slimmer than it was.

"Try this," he told her. "Just slip it on; I think it'll fit."

"I never wear shoes like that," she told him. "I wear just flat, low-heeled ones. Anyway, it isn't mine."

"No, but it's mine, to sell, maybe," he told her. "A customer of mine sprained her ankle, and she's got to wear low-heeled shoes for a year after it gets well, and she asked me if I couldn't keep all her high-heeled ones here, and maybe sell them to one of my other customers. They're beautiful shoes, Miss."

Fay glanced at the clock. Even later than she'd thought! She took the shoe and slipped it on quickly. It did fit—but how funny it looked. Oh well—she must get to the office.

At first it was hard to get used to the high-heeled shoes; then gradually she began to like the feeling of them. By noon, when she went on her shopping tour, she was wondering why she hadn't ever had even one pair of high-heeled shoes.

She was going to buy a new suit —a sensible tweed, she'd decided; the kind of suit she always bought. But the sensible tweeds all looked wrong, somehow, with that other girl's shoes.

"Just try this one, Miss," the saleswoman suggested. It was a dark blue suit, with a touch of red in the collar and cuffs, and its material was soft and clinging. Fay tried it on and marveled at the effect. In the end she bought it.

She arrived a little early at the hotel where she was to meet Duke, but he was there. He looked at her, looked away, then back again, and as she smiled, came forward eagerly.

"Fay! I didn't know you. How you've changed!" he exclaimed. "I can hardly believe it's you!"

He led her to the tea-room, where they sat in wide, deep chairs at a low table where a bowl of roses bloomed among the tea things.

"You used to be so, well, so sort of sensible looking, as if you never could be frivolous," he told her. "It sort of scared me, because I'm heavily inclined toward frivolity you might say. But now you're just the same, and yet you seem to be so much gayer."

Fay wondered what he'd say if he knew that it was her clothes, bought just that day, that had made the change in her. She was playing up to them, to the lovely suit that wasn't a "sensible tweed," to the hat, to that other girl's shoes with their beautiful buckles and their long, slim lines.

"Do you know, Fay, even your feet have changed," he told her. "You used to wear such sensible looking shoes; sometimes I wished that I could tell you not to hide your pretty feet in them."

Fay smiled at him. Why not tell him the truth?

But it was days later when she did tell him about that other girl's shoes, days of which she had spent many hours with Duke, at luncheon, tea, dinner, even at breakfast!

And days during which she had learned that Duke had always liked her better than he did anyone else, but had been scared off by his fear that she was too sensible to care for a playboy like him.

"You're not a playboy," she told him indignantly. "You're wonderful."

"Go right on thinking so, my-wife-to-be," he told her. "And I'll forgive you for fooling me so long, and keeping me out of paradise."

Caveman Style

A woman who was having a house built detected one of the bricklayers halving the bricks with his trowel. With a triumphant gleam in her eyes she approached him swiftly and said: "Isn't that rather a primitive way of cutting a brick in half?"

The man looked up, smiled and said: 'Lor' bless yer dear heart, lidy, there's a far more primitive way than this, believe me."

"Really, and what's that?" she inquired.

"Biting it, lidy, biting it."

"Why can't you turn up at the right time, Pat, now you've got an alarm clock?" asked the foreman.

"Bedad," replied Pat, "it's no good; it goes off when I'm asleep."

TO HONOR THE CONSTITUTION —PLANT TREES!

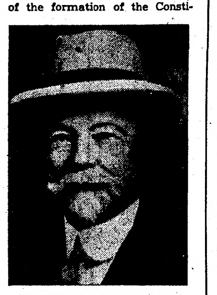
By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

NEXT year, "we the people of the United States," will celebrate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution under which we have been governed as a nation for a century and a half and among other ways of observing that anniversary we're going to "say it with trees"!

At least, it is so planned by the sesquicentennial commission which has charge of the celebration. In a recent report to congress the commission said:

"A feature in the nation-wide celebration which will be a part of every sesquicentennial celebration is the planting of trees. The general plans for the tree-planting project in co-operation with the American Tree association appear elsewhere in this report. It is customary for many women's organizations to plant memorial trees as a tribute to their founders or to distinguished personages of history. During this celebration these organized groups will join in the tree planting in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Constitution. Each state and local community will have its anniversary date when fitting ceremonies will be planned. Millions of trees will be dedicated to the memory of the framers of the Constitution.



CHARLES LATHROP PACK

"When plans were being made for the celebration of the Washington bicentennial it was intended to plant 10,000,000 trees in honor of the event. But so popular did this idea become throughout the country that in the year 1932 some 35,000,000 trees were actually planted in the United States. Therefore, it is proposed to follow a similar program in celebrating the sesquicentennial of the Constitution. As in the case of the Washington bicentennial, the President of the United States will be asked to plant a tree in the grounds of the White House, and one will also be set out in the Capitol grounds. It will be highly fitting, too, that the chief justice be invited to plant a tree in the grounds surrounding the new Supreme Court building.

"Thus inaugurating the movement, it is planned to reach every city, town, and school. The activities of the commission will be greatly assisted by the co-operation of the American Tree association. This excellent organization will also co-operate in preparing a booklet explaining the planting of trees and providing a program for the dedication.

"'The millions of 'Constitution Trees' thus set out during the celebration will prove a beautiful, lasting and appropriate tribute to the Constitution of the United States."

The American Tree association has already issued the booklet mentioned in the foregoing report (it's called the Constitution Sesquicentennial Tree Planting Book) and recently several million copies were sent to club and organization leaders and school teachers throughout the country. At the same time Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the association, issued this statement:

Like a Great Oak

"The Constitution stands like a great oak. It has weathered many storms. It deserves a place next to the family Bible in every home. What could be more fitting than for the American people to begin now to make their plans for marking the sesquicentennial, September, 17, 1937, by planting trees? We are ready to distribute to school teachers or organization leaders or anyone else, this Constitution Sesquicentennial Tree Planting Book. In it is the Constitution and all amendments with every important date, as well as George Washington's letter of transmittal to the congress. With this are given details on how to select, plant and care for trees and a suggested program for the dedication.

"As the statement of the United States Constitution Commission points out, nearly thirty-five million trees were planted to mark the bicentennial of the birth of George Washington. Now we have another reason for planting. Then we honored the Father of Our Country and now we mark the crowning achievement of his great career, the binding of the nation together under a Constitution. Historians all agree he made the Constitution possible.

"In our planting plans we not only have the call of the commission to heed but we have the co-operation of thousands of organizations. At this year's meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. H. G. Bogert of Colorado, national conservation chairman, started a tree planting campaign reaching into every club. In the Daughters of the American Revolution, Mrs. Avery Turner of Texas, national chairman of conservation and thrift, has called upon all chapter chairmen to push the program.

"Every sesqui-year class in colleges and high schools as well as private institutions, is being asked to plant a sesqui tree as class activity. In the citizenship committees of various organizations, tree planting will be a major activity. One of the tree planting books has been sent to every CCC camp.

"In these days when we hear so much about dust storms, floods, and soil erosion causing hundreds of millions of dollars damages, the American people must become tree minded and realize the value of forests in flood prevention. The forests and their products support every industry. Commerce is impossible without these forest products. So let us plant not alone to mark this important date in our history, maybe the most important date, but also to call the attention of new thousands to the value of trees."

Ratification Day

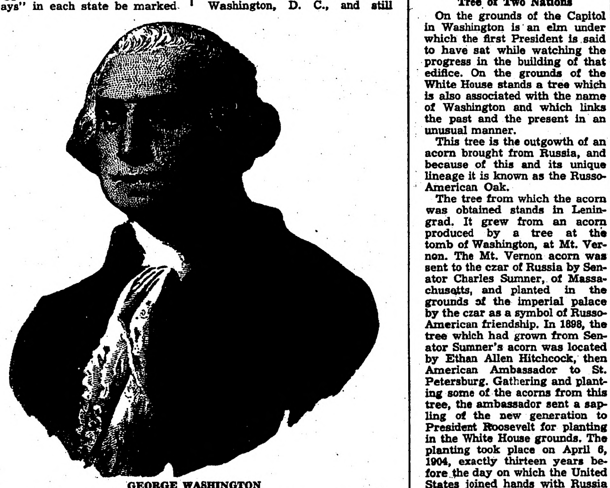
Mr. Pack also has sent to the governors of the original states ratifying the Constitution the suggestion that "Ratification Days" in each state be marked by organizing state-wide plans for tree planting in anticipation of the big program in 1937.



GEORGE WASHINGTON

Among the thousands of trees which will be planted next year as a part of the Constitution celebration undoubtedly there will be many elms. This will be especially appropriate, in so far as this celebration also honors the memory of George Washington, since an elm tree marked an important milestone in his life. It was under a tree of this species in Cambridge, Mass. that he took command of the Continental army on July 3, 1775 and started on the career which led to the establishment of a new nation and his election as its first President under the Constitution.

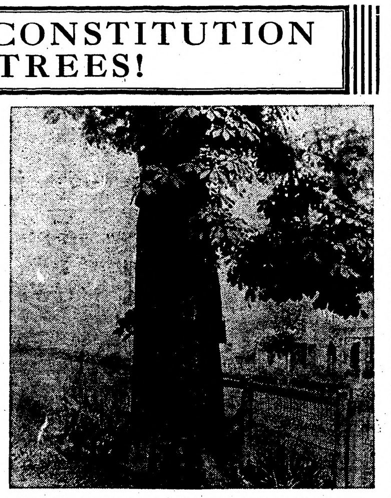
For nearly a century and a half this elm was a landmark and patriotic shrine, carefully guarded and with every effort made to save it from the ravages of time. Its long and honored career came to an end in August, 1923, when the whole trunk cracked and fell while workmen were pulling a dead branch from it. It was estimated that the tree was then more than 350 years old.



LAST OF THE 13 HORSE CHESTNUT TREES PLANTED BY WASHINGTON AT KENMORE.

Numerous "Grandchildren"

But even though this historic tree is dead, it lives on in its "children" and "grandchildren" which are to be found in various parts of the United States. On May 1, 1876 a centennial tree, which had been produced from the seed of the Washington elm, was presented to the city of Cambridge by John Owen.

Two "grandchild seedlings" from the Cambridge elm under which Washington took command of the Continental army are growing near his tomb at Mount Vernon, there is one in the yard of the governor's mansion in Annapolis, Md., one in front of the Memorial church at Valley Forge, and another at Washington college at Chestertown, Md., which was named for Washington and which he once visited to receive an honorary degree. Another is thriving on the grounds of the D. A. R. Memorial Continental hall in Washington, D. C., and still another in the yard of the headquarters of the Sons of the American Revolution in the same city. And clear across the country, on the campus of the University of Washington in Seattle there is another of these "grandchild seedlings," brought there by an aluminus of the university.

Besides the two Cambridge elms, the state of Massachusetts is rich in "tree memorials" to the Father of His Country.

Just outside the town of Palmer, on the Boston-Springfield highway, stands another famous old tree known as the Mother Washington elm. It is claimed by some historians and the American Forestry association that when Washington was on his way to Cambridge, he stopped beneath this particular elm to rest.

Many "Washington Trees"

Elm trees, however, are not the only ones which we associate with the name of Washington. Deerfield, Mass., has a buttonwood tree "where Washington watered horses." A horse chestnut tree, planted by Washington, still stands in the yard of Kenmore, the Fredericksburg (Va.) home of Betty Washington Lewis, his sister. It is the last of 13 such trees which he planted there to represent the Thirteen Colonies and to shade the walk between the cottage of his mother, Mary Ball Washington, and Kenmore.

Eight years ago a "Washington Friendship Grove" of 13 horse chestnut trees was planted in the National Capital. They sprang from the seeds of a tree which for more than 150 years stood in Bath, Pa., as an emblem of friendship between Washington and Gen. Robert Brown. The latter was a frequent visitor to Mount Vernon and at the end of one such visit, in 1781, Washington with his own hands dug from his garden two young horse chestnut trees which he presented to his friend. Brown carried the young saplings across the mountains to his home where he planted them on the lawn. Only one of the trees, however survived but it grew to a height of 70 feet and had an 85-foot spread of its branches.

Tree of Two Nations

On the grounds of the Capitol in Washington is an elm under which the first President is said to have sat while watching the progress in the building of that edifice. On the grounds of the White House stands a tree which is also associated with the name of Washington and which links the past and the present in an unusual manner.

This tree is the outgowth of an acorn brought from Russia, and because of this and its unique lineage it is known as the Russo-American Oak.

The tree from which the acorn was obtained stands in Leningrad. It grew from an acorn produced by a tree at the tomb of Washington, at Mt. Vernon. The Mt. Vernon acorn was sent to the czar of Russia by Senator Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts, and planted in the grounds of the imperial palace by the czar as a symbol of Russo-American friendship. In 1898, the tree which had grown from Senator Sumner's acorn was located by Ethan Allen Hitchcock, then American Ambassador to St. Petersburg. Gathering and planting some of the acorns from this tree, the ambassador sent a sapling of the new generation to President Roosevelt for planting in the White House grounds. The planting took place on April 6, 1904, exactly thirteen years before the day on which the United States joined hands with Russia and other European countries in the greatest conflict the world has ever known—a conflict which led to the destruction of the old Russia and the assassination of the royal family. The young tree was planted by President Roosevelt himself.

In several parts of the country are trees famous for their association with Washington's friend, Marquis de Lafayette. One Lafayette tree on the battlefield of Brandywine derives its prestige from the fact that when the celebrated French general was wounded at Brandywine his injuries were given first aid under this tree. At Annapolis is a tree under which a reception to Lafayette was held, with a distinguished company in attendance. In the form of trees planted by his own hand, General Lafayette left many mementoes of his travels in America. One of these is now standing at Concord, New Hampshire. Another is at Yorktown, Va., near a house in which are still to be seen cannon balls imbedded in the timbers during the siege of Yorktown.

IN RURAL NORWAY

Spare Moments in Norway Are Spent on the Trousseau.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

AUGUST is harvest time in Norway. Since most rural families are mainly dependent for their winter's food on what they themselves prepare, it is therefore a particularly busy time.

A visit to a typical Norwegian farm at this season would imply your sharing their whole-hearted work as well as their equally whole-hearted jollity afterwards. The activities of harvesting and merry-making would keep you busy on any of the thousands of small farms which skirt the long twisting fjords or utilize what level land there is along the rushing rivers in mountain valleys.

Glance for a moment at Hallingdal, a long valley which winds through the central section of Norway. For most of its length it is only one or two farms wide, for the mountainsides rise steeply from the river bottom. This valley is familiar to those who have traveled by rail from Oslo to Bergen.

By the daily train it is possible to reach Hallingdal's villages around which cluster farms of typical rural Norwegian families. If you should visit such a family, you could participate in their harvesting—but only after being welcomed by sharing their food, even though it be just a nibble of fruit, fresh leaf lettuce, little curled anchovies, and sheets of crisp flatbread.

Clouds sweeping over the mountains and across the valley serve warning that it may rain before dusk. The hay from the high meadow should be in the barn before then. All hands must seize rakes and hurry to the meadow for a race with the weather.

Haying in Hallingdal

The Halling farmer still uses a hand scythe and never misses a tuft hidden away in the fence corner or along the river bank. Every spear of grass is valuable. The youngest child follows the workers to glean the wisps that the others have missed. They all help load the sweet dry hay into a little hayrack made of unstripped birch saplings.

This is hauled to the barn by hand, for the little pony has been sent to the mountain meadow for the summer along with the cattle, so that every bit of grass on the home farm could be made into hay for the long winter. The hayrack is not a heavy load to push except for the last little way up the log runway into the mow, which can be taken with a rush and a whoop.

Before long all the hay is stowed from that meadow, from the edge of the dark spruces on the mountainside to the dusty bank of wild strawberries by the roadside. Then everyone can hang the wooden rakes along the log wall of the woodshed and enjoy an out of doors "coffee" picnic of coffee, little cakes, and wild berries strung on grass stems. The coffee cloth has been spread out on the grass under a wild cherry tree.

While the young women of the family are busy in the fields, the grandmother who is too old to help spins wool for the winter supply of gaily patterned socks and mittens. On lonely farms, housewives eagerly watch the road and discuss the probable errand of every passer-by.

Down by the river there is a field of "green," barley to be cut while there is still sap in the stalk and the grain has just reached the milk stage. This is dried over racks in the field. Then it is very prickly to load.

Then Barley and Rye

When the hay is all in, the barley and rye grow ripe. The farmer cuts through the shimmering golden fields with great swings of his scythe. At each stroke the grain falls in a neat semicircle on the ground. Then it is bound into bundles to be shocked spirally around tall saplings stuck in the ground. There is a little red ladder to climb up with the top bundles. In this section of Norway the grain is not threshed at harvest time, but later on during the winter, when the horse is home from the mountain pastures and can be hitched to the crude treadmill in the barn.

The herds of cattle, goats, and horses during the summer grazing in the mountains are tended by either a young unmarried daughter or an old woman. The life of a summer dairy maid has been celebrated in song and saga for hundreds of years. She lives in a small log hut with turf roof, passing her days milking cows and goats, making butter and tending the huge iron caldrons in which milk is slowly simmered to make rich cheese. She sets off to the upland pastures riding a pony which is loaded with empty tubs as well as with her few belongings. Later, when a brother visits her hut to bring supplies, he will collect the tubs filled with butter and cheeses and carry them back to the homestead.

The cattle are small brindly beasts with spreading brass-tipped horns. They have not been bred for quantity milk production. Little attention seems to be paid to breeding. Often a cow will give only a quart or so at milking. If you wonder why such a cow is tolerated, you may receive such an explanation as this: "Ja, but she is small, and does not eat much, either, that cow." In a land where every spear of hay has value, this is an argument of great weight.

Food Mostly Home-Grown

Aside from the fine white cake flour, which is imported from America, most of the family food is produced at home. Barley, rye, and oats are milled locally, the miller getting a share of the meal and flour for his work. The garden yields stores of cabbages, potatoes, and root vegetables for the winter. Potatoes, too, are an important crop for they are on the family's daily menu and, along with birch twigs, form a staple item in the winter diet of the cattle.

Nature is lavish here with a large number of berries, both wild and tame. Masses of wild strawberries grow along the roadsides. There are currants from which to make sweet wine; wild cherries, the juice of which is bottled to make soup and puddings; the little wild "mountain cranberries," which make delicious jam to serve with pork or roast ptarmigan; and, best of all, the arctic cloudberry, growing in the mountain-top sloughs. This last, when stored in great crocks, keeps through the winter, without cooking or other preservation.

Only with such a variety of provisions can the Norwegian family continue the alternation of work, rest, and eating which is farm routine. First thing in the morning, coffee and cakes are brought to the family in bed. As soon as they are dressed, there is a large breakfast with more coffee, bread and butter, and all sorts of pickled fish and sausage and goat's-milk cheese to put on it. At 11 o'clock work pauses for another snack, which is breakfast all over again.

There is a heavy dinner about one-thirty and then a siesta. Yes, you may be surprised, but this "old Spanish custom" is firmly entrenched in the rural sections of this energetic northern climate. After the nap there are more coffee and cakes before the work of the afternoon is begun.

The last real meal of the day is the evening porridge, at about 8 or 9 o'clock. This meal is unvarying except just after a slaughtering, when a blood pudding is substituted for the usual dish.

All Put in the Stabbur

The yearly harvests of cereals, the cheeses, cured meats, bread, and cakes are stored in the stabbur. The stabbur, or storehouse, is a typical feature of the Norwegian landscape. It is built of logs on high mushroom-shaped stilts as a protection against marauding insects and rats. Elaborately carved, it is guarded against the weather by a coat of wood tar. The front porch of the structure is reached by a flight of plank steps separated from the building by a sort of moat of air across which thieving animals would find it difficult to leap.

The wrought-iron key, which fits a wooden lock in the heavy carved door, takes two hands to turn. The door opens into a small dark room with heavy log walls unbroken by windows. There are large bins of various kinds of meal and flour, each with a brightly painted wooden scoop hanging above it. On shelves are stacked cheeses of many kinds. There are gay wooden boxes full of cakes which had been baked in the spring when the cream was rich. In one corner on a low platform, sheets of rye and barley flatbread with crinkly edges, temptingly brown, are piled almost to the ceiling. It has been made of stiff unleavened dough rolled into round paper-thin sheets and browned on the bakehouse stove.

"More Babies!" Europe's Dictators Cry

Soviet Russia, Germany and Italy Embark on Programs Designed to Increase Marriages and Step Up Birth Rate.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

MORE marriages! More babies! More people!

That is the formula of the three great European dictatorships for more power in the future. Drastic laws have been ordered to check declines in birth rates, as well as to whittle down the death rates in Russia, Germany and Italy.

In Germany and Italy, the measures taken produced a brief flurry of success, but this success appears now to be on the wane; indeed, present indications are that the birth rates in these two nations are fast slipping back to levels as low as before the program began.

Only in Russia is the program succeeding, and there it is going over with a bang. But the Soviet measures are those of a completely communistic society, and most of them would be direct offenses to the morals of a Christian country with the type of society that we know. Further, the Russians are of a stock more suited to increasing the population than the other two nations.

Multiple Marriage at Berlin in 1933.

The Soviet Russians are multiplying more rapidly today than any other people of the world. By the time the eighth Five-Year Plan ends in 1967, it is expected the nation's population will reach 300,000,000. It is 173,000,000 now, including a net increase of births over deaths equalling 4,000,000 in 1935.

Room for Expansion.

Sociological experts believe that the Soviet birth rate will continue to increase. Taken by and large, the Reds are just coming out of a primitive period and are naturally prolific.

There is plenty of space in Russian territory for any populate expansion of which the Reds are capable, and there will be plenty of food for everybody. Famines in past days destroyed millions of Russians in a year, but there will be no more of those. Irrigation projects are quenching the thirst of the drouth regions. Collective farming has been stabilized. Most important of all, agriculture has been spread over many areas, far apart, so that a drouth in one area would affect only a comparatively small portion of the crop.

Soviet laws encourage the marriage of persons we would hardly consider of the marrying age. They also permit relations between men and women which allow women to have children under conditions which would bring them shame in western countries. It is not considered a disgrace for a single woman to have a child. An unmarried father who disappears is disgraced, though. Many unmarried girls in Russia have children just because they want them.

Care of Expectant Mothers.

A state of legal marriage exists in Soviet Russia simply if a man and woman are living together. Civil registration offices—the ZAGS—will perform a simple ceremony for those of formal preferences, although there is no sentiment connected with it. The registration gives the girl some added protection and increases her chances for alimony if her husband leaves her.

Communistic nurseries aid working women to care for their children. When they are with child they are permitted to leave their positions for awhile, but their pay goes on.

As a result of these policies the U. S. S. R. in five years showed an increase of 11,500,000 persons, as compared with 850,000 for England, 1,300,000 for Germany and 650,000 for France. While the death rate is declining the birth rate is estimated at between 35 and 50 per thousand.

The program undertaken by the Hitler government in Germany is intended to control marriages and births. Definitely fixed classes suffering from hereditary diseases are sterilized. To insure the quality of its population, Germany requires persons intending to marry to go to the bureau for heredity and race supervision for a marriage-health certificate. They are forbidden to marry Jews.

Tough on Bachelors.

Every encouragement is offered to stimulate marriages. Couples are given government certificates, called "marriage aid" loans, with which they may buy household goods. These are repaid in small installments, but each of the first four children born reduces the loan by 25 per cent.

If the government is easy on married couples, it strikes a balance in its attitude toward bachelors. Their taxes were boosted 100 to 150 per cent.

Some cities (and occasionally the Reich, if the case is very urgent) pay premiums in the form of merchandise certificates for children. They amount to 100 marks for each child, with a maximum of 1,000 marks for one family. Some municipalities give financial aid amounting to 20 or 30 marks a month for a child until it reaches fourteen. Families with children are given preference in the distribution of jobs and in housing.

The Nazi Mother and Child organization gives advice and money and provides recreation and vacations for poor mothers.

Vast Propaganda Mill.

While the married couples are given every advantage, the government deliberately attempts to make life more or less difficult for the unmarried. Married men get the jobs first. And often an unmarried man under 25 years of age is forced to "exchange jobs" with a married man. This simply means that the married man gets the job and the bachelor is sent into the labor service or "Land Help." Large families get first call on homes and benefit from greatly reduced railroad fares.

Germany is in the throes of a mild "back to the land" movement at present. Thousands of persons are being removed from "white collar" jobs and placed in manual labor. Manual laborers generally have larger families.

More Youngsters Like These Is Mussolini's Aim.

By no means least important of all the measures Hitler is using to build up Germany's population is the vast propaganda mill of the Nazi government. It is at work night and day to shape the public mind toward the favor of large families.

Hitler's program started well, but shows definite indications of failing to attain its goal. Germany had 516,973 marriages, or 7.9 per thousand population in 1932; these figures grew to 739,449 or 11.1 per thousand in two years.

There were 971,174 births, or 14.7 per thousand in 1933. These were increased to 1,261,273 or 18.9 per thousand in 1935. The growth of population in 1933 was 233,297, or 3.5 per thousand, and in 1934 was 472,074, or 7 per thousand.

Italy's Program.

And then something began to slip. There were only 650,851 marriages or 9.7 per thousand in 1935. According to estimates of conditions in the larger cities, the marriage rate has slipped back to below the 1932 level this year.

The birth rate, which rose .9 per thousand last year, is running below the levels of 1933 and 1934. The death rate is on the increase, and the growth of population, computed by subtracting the number of deaths from the number of births, has slowed up to below the 1934 point.

For nine years now, Italy has pursued a program which it hopes will make the nation's population 60,000,000 by 1950, with questionable success, at least.

For a short while in 1930, signs were encouraging to Mussolini, but with the exception of that period, the birth rate has been steadily falling for fourteen years.

Death Rate Well Reduced.

The marriage rate also is believed to be declining. The growth of population is proceeding at a slower pace than at any time within the last fifty years, with the exception of the years between 1916 and 1920 when it was affected by the World war. Yet the Fascist dicatorship is trying steadily to improve the situation, chiefly by using methods similar to those of Germany.

While the campaign to increase the birth rate has fallen far short of its mark, Mussolini's efforts to cut down the death rate have been better rewarded. The death rate stands now at the lowest point within the scope of Italian historians. This is so far offset by the falling birth rate, however, that the population of the country has remained about the same for some years.

Vast propaganda measures have been supplemented by measures of reward for the prolific and penalty for the unprolific, much as they have in Germany. There is a tax on bachelors, who can never say in Italy that "they know when they are well off." This not only makes marrying more attractive to them, but the revenue from the tax is used to give assistance to poor mothers.

Prizes for Triplets.

Parents of children are everywhere given privileges. Honeymoons to Rome are paid for by the government. Persons of small means contemplating matrimony are offered "nuptial prizes" which range from $125 to $400. Birth prizes are given on a scale which increases with the number of children—from $30 for the first child to $250 for the sixth and each succeeding one. There are special prizes for twins and triplets. An Italian Papa Dionne would be as lucky as a winner of the Irish sweepstakes.

Married men, of course, always get the best government jobs first, and single men have little license to expect promotion.

The decline in the death rate, which might ordinarily have been expected to occur with the strides made in medical science during the last few years, has been expedited by government measures.

Much credit is due the National Institution for the Protection of Motherhood and Infanthood, which is endowed and operated by the government. Its recently-built maternity hospitals, expertly staffed and equipped with the most modern devices, are to be found throughout the nation. In them, expectant mothers receive the utmost in medical service. This organization has been responsible for a sharp drop in Italy's infant mortality rate in late years.

Different Forms of Lightning

The world has been slow in learning that lightning assumes a large number of different forms. As recently as the middle of the Nineteenth century the leading scientific authority on lightning—the French physicist Arago — recognized only three varieties of lightning, and his list found its way into textbooks in all countries. Strange to say, of the three kinds enumerated by this authority, one — zigzag lightning—certainly does not exist, and the existence of the other two—sheet lightning and ball lightning — is somewhat doubtful.

Shirtwaister for School Girl

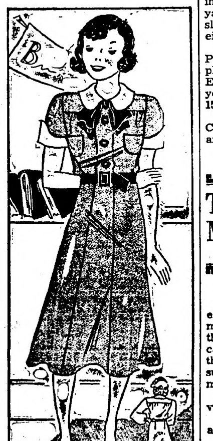
Here is the frock for juniors to make for school days. A combination of rhythm in its hemline, rhyme in its color scheme and racy in its style. For late summer wear, try tub silk, linen, cotton or shantung with long or short sleeves. For autumn and winter —"tweedy" silk crepe or broadcloth.



1959-B.

The waist, gathered slightly to the shoulder yoke front and back, has a center pleat and pockets for trimming. Buttons—a matter of choice. A small collar, tie, and belt complete this most effective frock. By way of suggestion, make the collar and cuffs in contrast, and detachable to be readily removed for laundering.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1959-B is available for sizes 8, 10, 12, 14 and 16. Size 12 requires two and three-eighths yards of 35-inch material with one-third yard of 35-inch contrasting material and one yard of ribbon for bow. With long sleeves it requires two and five-eighths yards.

Send for the Barbara Bell Fall Pattern Book containing 100 well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 367 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Supreme Court Justices

Congress may, by statute, change the number of Justices on the Supreme Court and if that number is enlarged the President could appoint new members, with the consent of the Senate. But without such authority the President has no power to appoint members unless there is a vacancy caused by death, resignation, or retirement of one of the present members of the Court.

The Weather

This community was treated to a wonderfully heavy rain on Monday morning. Since then the weather has been cool.

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Hanson and family, accompanied by Pete Hanson and Miss Eleanor Andeen of Warren, spent a few days last week visiting relatives at Huron S. Dak.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Werner and daughters spent the week end visising with the R. A. Holmgren family at Glyndon and at the Ole Johnson home at Moorhead.

A number of friends and relatives of Happy Birkeland gathered at the Pleasant View schoolhouse on Wednesday evening to bid him farewell.

The evening was spent socially and at midnight a delicious lunch was served. A small cash purse was presented to Happy as a rememberance of his friends here.

The Holt 4-H Club met at their club-room on Friday evening, Sept. 4.

The Wildwood Club of Newfolden presented a fine program favoring their audience with a short stunt; a song by a group of girls; reading by Miss Leona Davis, Wildwood club leader; musical numbers by Wildwood mixed quartet, boys quartet and instrumental trio and duet; and everyone joined in community singing.

Lunch was served and a good time enjoyed.

Let's see a large number of 4-H members leaders and parents represent the Holt 4-H at the meeting of the Eastern Council to be held at Grygla schoolhouse on Friday evening, Sept. 18th.

Railroad Jim
THE COLUMN CONDUCTOR
Says . . .

Passengers in the smoking compartment on my train were arguing about why railroad business is picking up.

A factory owner said it was because of this new Free pick-up-and-delivery of less than carload freight. This is door-to-door service with no extra charge added to the freight bill.

A traveling salesman said it was because so many passenger and freight trains now run on faster schedules.

There was a school principal in the group and he said it was because train travel is so much cheaper for passengers. He said passenger fares are at the lowest point in history, with substantial reductions if you buy a round-trip ticket—and no more surcharge for riding in sleeping cars.

One man, a farmer, said he liked something he could depend on, that's why he was traveling by train.

Another man, a newspaper reporter, said people were in favor of railroad travel because it is by far the safest. He quoted a lot of statistics from a book called, "Live and Let Live."

A banker we all know by name said railroad tax payments mean a lot in this state.

We are proud of railroad achievements, appreciate the public's good will and increased patronage, and pledge continued progress.

Eastern 4H Council Held

The fourth meeting of the Eastern Council was held at the Grygla schoolhouse on Friday evening, September 18th.

Mr. Doran presided at the meeting.

A fine program had been arranged by the Grygla 4-H club with community singing; a talk, Conservation of Wild Life by Gordon Bush, a 4-H member; Skit, The 4-H Tour, by a group of 4-Hirs; musical selections by Grygla folks. Mr. Nybakken was the main speaker of the evening and he stressed in his talk, the value of organizations such as the 4-H club.

Miss Bierbaum, county leader, made several announcements including the facts that the Bloomwood Club had been considered the outstanding club in the county and that Lewyellen Larson of Bloomwood and Vivian Larson of Holt had been awarded free trips to Itasca Park in Conservation work.

Marlan Augustine, Holt, was awarded a book on dairy work for his Holstein calf club work. Lawrence Nygaard, Grygla, was awarded a ribbon for an outstanding Guernsey calf. Chester Larson, Holt, as well as the outstanding leaders from Grygla and Honor Bright were awarded certificates. Each club was given their 4-H charter.

Lunch was served by the Grygla club.

Moved Here From Washington

H. E. Hanson and family of Bellingham, Washington, moved back here last week. Mr. Hanson shipped in about 50,000 feet of lumber and shingles with which he will use to improve his farm buildings. He also has some for sale.

Johnson Called Here Friday

Carl A. Johnson, lifelong Vega farmer and canidate for representative for the leginlature, was a visitor in Holt last Friday renewing acquaintances and also making arrangements for the fall campaign.

Mr. Johnson topped the ticket in the June primaries out of a field of three candidates. He was given 1246 votes to 791 votes for Ira Burhans of Stephen and 950 votes for Emil Morberg of Big Woods.

The Vega farmer is not a candidate of any political party, but will if elected, go to the legislature free to vote and act for all of the people of Marshall county and for the welfare of the state at large. He is a firm believer in constructive and honest work for everybody. As a farmer and seeking to represent a strictly farming community he will work at all times in the farmers' interest regardless of party political following.

Taxation is a perplexing problem and must be revised to a more equitable basis, said Mr. Johnson. The next legislature must devise some methods to reduce the high taxes on real estate and at the same time not jeopardize the welfare of the state and schools, he declared. This can be done by broadning the tax base and through a system of ability to pay taxes, he said.

Mr. Johnson expressed his appreciation to the people of this community for the generous support given him at the primary election and hopes that he will continue to receive this fine support at the general election on on November 3.

Bought The Oakey Farm

Last week Hilmer Lunke of Thief River Falls closed a deal in which he became owner of the 470 acre farm which V. E. Oakey had here five miles east of Holt.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Lindholm, Mrs. C. L. Sandberg and daughter Clara visited at the Austin Lindholm home west of Strandquist on Tuesday evening.

Moroccans Take Part in Spanish War

African Troops Are Resented by Loyal Spaniards

This picture of four Moroccan soldiers gives an idea of the type of fighting men imported to Spain by the rebel commander, Gen. Francisco Franco, to aid in the bloody war on the loyalist government of President Azana.

Many native Spaniards have resented the importation of foreign troops, and it is believed to have alienated the support of many rebel sympathizers. While no one can doubt the value of the Moroccans as fighting men, the invasion of the Moors centuries ago still lingers in the minds of the Spanish people.

British diplomats are making desperate efforts to prevent intervention in Spain. The failure of Portugal to join in a general pact has been a disturbing factor. Portugal has declared she must retain freedom to act should Communist propaganda menace internal security.

Japanese Priests Prepare for War

Drill Daily for Day When War Will Come

With bayonets belted to their priestly robes and rifles over their shoulders, the clean shaven young priests of the Sodo sect of the Buddists engage in military drill on the grounds of their temple in Japan. A military officer from the nearest garrison comes to drill them every morning.

Japan's successes in Manchukuo and the general belief that sooner or later war will come has aroused the people's military spirit, and the war party seems to be in full control.

The latest disturbing news from that quarter is that Japan is taking advantage of the escape clause of the London pact to increase her strength in submarines. This can be done only when one of the signatories of the pact considers its national defense in jeopardy. Secretary Swanson has declared Japan's action is a clear violation of the agreement. No official action has yet been taken by the State department.

The Magic of Moonlight Shining on the Altar of Heaven.

THERE are people who will tell you that the most beautiful object in Peiping, a city so filled with beauty that it may well be classified as a serial dream, is the gem-studded Buddha to be seen in T'uan Ch'eng near the entrance of Pei Hai; others who declare that the Purple Forbidden Palace, occupying the center of the Imperial City, is the culminating triumph of earthly creations; that the marble pagoda at the Jade Fountain is the only monument in stone that exclaims its own magnificence.

You will be told that the tombs of the 13 Ming Emperors, reposing in a lonely valley out of town, are the most stately grouping in the known world; that the Nine Dragon screen in Pei Hai park is the most exquisite masterpiece left intact in Peiping. You will be escorted to the Temple of Heaven standing on a platform of white marble, its triple roofs supported by red columns and tiled in blue, the whole crowned with a golden ball.

Beyond this, southward, in the form of a circular construction, one comes upon the Altar of Heaven, by far the most beautiful memorial of its kind in the world, the final salutation to religion as expressed by the Chinese; and in the opinion of many authorities the most sublime architectural gesture ever conceived for the ceremonial recognition of invisible powers responsible for the earth's fecundity. It is at this spot that China's emperors for five hundred years have made annual sacrifices to the only superior they recognized—Heaven.

Every Detail Blends.

Memorable the night when Nelson Trusler Johnson, American ambassador to China, called me on the phone at 11 o'clock, little more than the shank of the evening, Peiping time, and asked what claims I had, if any, on "the so-called artistic temperament."

"All the traffic will stand," I responded.

"Well, in that case, jump into a ricksha about midnight and meet me at the Embassy, alone. Bring your camera."

"Can do," I replied in the Chinese vernacular, and did with all possible haste, arriving at the rendezvous to find the ambassador awaiting me in an automobile.

"But the camera?" I queried. To the chauffeur, the ambassador, who is a proficient Oriental scholar, gave a short command in Chinese, and we were off at 60 kilometers an hour under a full moon, riding in a starlit sky.

Shrine Set in Park.

Five miles to the north, arriving at a massive gate, that swung open at our approach, we entered a park containing long lines of ancient cedar trees set in formal array, through which, for a matter of two miles, we moved slowly, coming at last to an open space. A circular construction, composed of white marble sitting low upon the landscape, built in three terraces, and flat upon the crown, filled my eyes with its immaculate magic. Mute, I gazed at its pale splendor, which increased in richness as I became accustomed to its pearly silhouette against the trees breaking the horizon between this, the Altar of Heaven, and the luminous sky over Peiping under the north star.

Has 260 Balustrades.

Mounted on the rim of the furnace where the cow, the goat and the pig have been roasted for the annual ceremonials attended by the emperors during the last five centuries, we trained our lenses on the Altar of Heaven, built in three terraces of marble, the first 210 feet wide, the second 150, the third 80. The number of balustrades on the first is 180, the second 108, the third 72, totaling 260, the number of days in the Chinese lunar year. The upper terrace is reached by three flights of nine steps each. The Chinese divide the heavens into nine sections; there are nine points to the compass known as the Nine Mansions. There are nine divisions of mathematics, nine degrees of official rank and nine of family relationship. In the center of the topmost platform is a circular marble disk, surrounded by nine marble sections, and so on to the perimeter of eighty-one.

Whilst the light from Heaven was etching the Altar into our films, the ambassador and I sauntered leisurely among the carven white pillars, but never long enough in any one spot to leave our impress upon the sensitive celluloid, and gave ourselves up to the contemplation of its majesty. Higher and higher floated the summer moon, until the whole silvered landscape appeared as a setting for the trinity of marble circles like moonstones in rings of white jade, the mass becoming more luminous as the moon ascending to perpendicular brushed all aside save the ghostly Altar under the cold flood filtering steadily through space.

Doing Favors for Others With Thought of Return Disappoints

"THE older I grow the more I am appalled by the ingratitude, the complete lack of a sense of obligation on the part of our fellow human beings.

"With me the people who come first are always those to whom I have any obligation whatsoever. Anything that is done for me is constantly on my mind and I am on the lookout to repay. But look about you and you will observe the most inconceivable indifference on the part of most otherwise decent people to what they owe to others. Indeed the code seems to be to cultivate those from whom some advantage may be forthcoming and neglect those to whom we are indebted. The answer to it all is to put yourself out for nobody; it doesn't pay."

It must have been an unusually unfortunate chain of experiences that gave this woman such an unhappy slant on human nature. But certain it is that favors done with thought of return are bound to bring disappointment. In this busy, hectic world, people are likely to be rather casual about give and take. That does not necessarily mean that they are unappreciative. They are just not punctilious. Frequently a kindness makes its mark but time passes before occasion presents itself to show appreciation, or to reciprocate. After all, if we think enough of people to put ourselves out for them, as our reader says, there must be a certain amount of faith.

If we do things for others only because we want to do them and find a certain satisfaction in it, we have nothing to lose. But the expected reward is something like the watched pot—very disappointing. In fact, it doesn't pay.

That Third Party
!??!! !??!

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FOR the first time in more than a decade there's a third party in the field during a Presidential campaign and this year, as in the past, it has the two leaders guessing.

That worried look in the eye of the Democratic donkey and that furrowed brow of the Republican elephant are caused by the minds of both pondering over such unsolved questions as these:

How much strength will this new Union party develop between now and November 3?

How many popular votes will their candidate, William Lemke, get and how many of them will he be taking away from my candidate?

Will he get enough electoral votes to affect the election and, if so, which way will they swing it — to me or to my opponent?

If history repeats itself this year, they have plenty of cause for worry, because third party movements in American political history have always been a headache for the two major parties. Of course, none of them has ever succeeded in electing a President and in only seven campaigns has one of them showed enough strength to be represented in the electoral college vote. But at least twice their entrance into the campaign has meant the difference between victory and defeat for one of the major parties.

How They're Born

Third parties, in the usually accepted sense of the term, are brought into being when insurgents within an old party rebel against its policies or its candidate, walk out on the parent organization, organize a new one and nominate a candidate of their own. The first of these "insurgents" was the Peace party of 1812-15, composed of Republicans (forerunners of the present Democrats) and Federalists, mostly in New England, who were opposed to the second war with England. However, this group didn't play any important part in political history any more than did the so-called Peoples party of 1824, composed of Republicans who favored having Presidential electors chosen by the people instead of having the state legislatures do it for them. The next year a Coalition party, thus designated because of the union of the supporters of Henry Clay with those of John Quincy Adams, helped defeat Andrew Jackson and elect Adams.

MARTIN VAN BUREN

But an authentic third party did not appear on the scene until the election of 1832. Six years earlier a certain William Morgan of Batavia, N. Y., who had published a book purporting to reveal the secrets of Masonry, disappeared and the members of that fraternity were accused of having kidnaped him and drowned him in the Niagara river. They were also accused of blocking the investigation of Morgan's disappearance and from western New York opposition to the Masons spread to other Eastern states.

Several young politicians, among them Thurlow Weed of New York and Thaddeus Stevens of Pennsylvania, seized upon this prejudice to further their ambitions and the result was the organization of an Anti-Masonic political party.

In September, 1830, this party held a national convention in Philadelphia, the first of its kind in this country. It was attended by 96 delegates from 10 states and out of it grew another convention in Baltimore the next year to be attended by as many delegates from each state as there were representatives in both houses of congress (the forerunner of our present convention system).

The Baltimore convention nominated for President, William Wirt of Maryland, who had been attorney-general in Monroe's cabinet, and for vice-president it named Amos Ellmaker of New York. In the election of 1832 these candidates won only the electoral vote of Vermont. Later this party was absorbed by the Whigs and lost its identity.

First Liberty Party

Attempts to organize the anti-slavery vote in the late thirties resulted in the formation of the

MILLARD FILLMORE

Liberty party. It nominated for the Presidency James G. Birney, a former Kentucky Democrat and slave-owner, who sold his slaves, moved North and became an Abolitionist. However, the Liberty party didn't figure very prominently in the roaring "Log Cabin-Hard Cider" campaign of 1840 between Harrison, the Whig, and Van Buren, the Democrat, and it could muster only 7,369 votes for its candidate. Birney was nominated again in 1844 and this time he polled 62,263 votes but in neither campaign did he get a single electoral vote.

Four years later another abolitionist party was in the field. It resulted directly from a split in the Democratic party over the slavery issue. When Gen. Lewis Cass of Michigan was nominated at the Baltimore convention of that party, the "Barnburner" faction (so-called because, they were "willing to burn the political barn to get rid of the rats in it") bolted the convention and made plans to hold one of their own.

This meeting was held in Utica, N. Y., and it nominated Ex-President Martin Van Buren, who had been denied renomination by the Democrats in 1844 when they turned to the first "dark horse" in our political history—James K. Polk of Tennessee.

Later in the year a group of dissatisfied Whigs withdrew from that party and joined forces with bolting Democrats to hold a convention in Buffalo, N. Y. It also nominated Van Buren for President.

As the Free Soil party it was able to poll only 291,000 votes, but it caused the Democrats to lose New York's 36 electoral votes, which was just enough to give Gen. Zachary Taylor, the Whig candidate, the 36 votes he needed to defeat Cass.

In 1852 the Free Soilers nominated Senator John P. Hale of New Hampshire, who had been a Jacksonian Democrat and had quit the party over the slavery issue. By this time the Free Soil vote had dropped to 157,000 and had no effect on the contest between Gen. Winfield Scott, the Whig candidate, and Franklin Pierce, the Democrat, who was elected.

The Know Nothings

In the meantime, however, another third party had come into existence which, during its brief existence, figured in the electoral college returns. That was the political group known as the Native American party or Know-Nothings. It originated in New York City in the forties as a result of the large emigration from Ireland during the famine years when the potato crop failed. Out of the resentment against these "foreigners" grew a secret society, the "Supreme Order of the Star Spangled Banner" and a political party, the Native Americans, with a platform of opposition to aliens, the papacy, infidelity and socialism.

The popular name of Know-Nothings was attached to the party because when its members were questioned about it they invariably replied "I don't know." In 1847 they held a national convention in Philadelphia where they nominated Gen. Henry Dearborn for vice-president and recommended, but did not formally nominate, Gen. Zachary Taylor for President.

The Know-Nothings do not seem to have played much part in the election of 1852 but they figured strongly in the campaign of 1856. By this time they had thrown off the secret character of their organization and revealed the fact that most of their members were Whigs.

The remainder of the Whigs, along with the Free Soilers, and many Northern Democrats, had gone over into the new Republican party which nominated Gen. John C. Fremont and adopted the revised slogan of "Free Soil, Free Speech and Fremont." In February the Know-Nothings held a convention in Philadelphia where they formally renamed their party the American Party. For President they nominated Millard Fillmore, the Whig vice-president who became President when Zachary Taylor died in office, and for vice-president A. J. Donelson of Tennessee.

The Republicans polled more than 1,000,000 votes and the Native Americans nearly 900,000. But James Buchanan, the Democratic candidate, got 174 votes in the electoral college as against Fremont's 114 and Fillmore's eight—those of Maryland. By the time the next Presidential campaign came around the Know-Nothing party had been merged with the Republican.

The campaign of 1860 was marked by the paradox of two "third parties" both of which developed enough strength to break into the electoral college vote. One of them represented a split in a regular party and the other a coalition of odds and ends from various parties.

The Democratic party, divided by the slavery question in previous campaigns, was split wide open in this crucial year of 1860. The Northern wing of the party nominated Stephen A. Douglas of Illinois and the Southern, or pro-slavery wing, nominated John C. Breckenridge of Kentucky, who had been Buchanan's vice-president. Breckenridge got 72 electoral votes as compared to Douglas' 12.

The other "third party," which represented a coalition, was the Constitutional Union party, made up of old-time Whigs and Know-Nothings, who would avoid the issue of slavery and achieve the impossible goal of harmony throughout the country. Their nominee was John C. Bell of Tennessee who polled 39 electoral votes. The three candidates received a total of 123 votes and Lincoln 180.

Bolters Galore

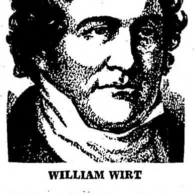
The campaign of 1872 was a mixed-up affair with crossing over of party lines and bolters galore. A faction of the Republican party, dissatisfied with the certainty of Grant's renomination, walked out, held another convention in Cincinnati and chose Horace Greeley for President and B. Gratz Brown of Missouri for vice-president. The Democrats decided that a fusion ticket was their only hope.

Therefore, when they held their convention in Baltimore, they also nominated Greeley and Brown. But this action was offensive to the old-line Democrats who in turn walked out and held a convention in Louisville, Ky., where they nominated Charles O'Conor of New York for President and gave him John Quincy



WILLIAM WIRT

Adams of Massachusetts for a running mate. O'Conor polled only a little more than 29,000 votes but Greeley didn't do much better and, bitterly disappointed over his poor showing, he died in less than a month after the election. As a result the Democratic electors scattered their vote, giving 42 to Thomas A. Hendricks of Indiana, 18 to B. Gratz Brown and two to Charles J. Jenkins of Georgia. Grant won overwhelmingly with a total electoral vote of 286.

To Gen. James B. Weaver of Iowa goes the distinction of being the only man who was ever the leader of two different third party movements and as the head of one of them he succeeded in breaking into the electoral college vote. Dissatisfaction of the farmers with the financial policies of President Grant resulted in the formation of the Greenback party by inflationists who wanted to issue a large amount of paper money without regard to specie payment. In the campaign of 1876 they nominated Peter Cooper of New York but he polled only 80,000 popular votes and failed to receive a single electoral vote.

In the congressional elections of 1878 the Greenbackers cast more than a million votes and when they nominated Weaver, a man from the agricultural west, for President in 1880 the Republicans were deeply concerned. But their fears proved groundless for the Greenbackers were able to muster only about 300,000 popular votes and not a single one in the electoral college.

The Populist Era

But a decade later the G. O. P. had real cause for worry. Populism, which championed the cause of the farmer and the working man, was running through the West like a prairie fire. In the state and congressional elections of 1890 the Populist or People's party carried the legislatures of Kansas and Nebraska, elected nine members of congress and forced 34 others, Republicans and Democrats, to pledge themselves to carry out Populist ideas about free silver, public ownership of monopolies, postal savings banks and an income tax.

Then Weaver, the former Greenback, bobbed up as a Populist leader and in 1892 won their nomination for the Presidency. In the election he polled more than 1,000,000 votes in the West and got 22 electoral votes. By 1896 the Democratic party had adopted so many of the Populist principles that William Jennings Bryan received their indorsement for President although they nominated their own candidate for President, Thomas E. Watson. Eventually they were gradually absorbed by the two major parties.

After the Populist movement two decades were to elapse before there was another third party movement but when it came it unseated a party which had long been in power. The story of that third party is too familiar to need more than the barest mention here. In 1912 Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt led a revolt against the renomination of William Howard Taft, formed the Progressive or "Bull Moose" party, corralled 88 electoral votes and brought about the victory of Woodrow Wilson over Taft, 435 to 8.

Twelve years later the Progressive party, this time under the leadership of Senator Robert M. LaFollette of Wisconsin, again played a part in a Presidential campaign although it was not a decisive one. For Calvin Coolidge could have given John W. Davis LaFollette's 13 electoral college votes and he would still have won the election.

As for 1936—will it be a repetition of 1912 with this year's third party playing a part in defeating an occupant of the White House who is seeking reelection? Will it be a repetition of 1848 and aid in defeating one of the two major party leaders even though it doesn't register a single vote in the electoral college balloting? Or will it be a repetition of those other years in which there were third parties in the field and they didn't affect the result either way, even though they were represented in the electoral vote?

Hello Everybody!

"No Dice"

By FLOYD GIBBONS,
Famous Headline Hunter

NOW the moral of this story, boys and girls, is that gambling doesn't pay. Not that I need any story to convince me of it. I once bet two bucks on a horse I thought would come in first at Saratoga, and the next time I saw him was two years later, pulling the steam calliope in a circus parade in Denver.

Yep, it's risky business letting a horse invest your money for you, but not half as risky as the chances Lieutenant Tommy Griffin, of the Eighteenth infantry, Fort Wadsworth, N. Y., took when he started wooing Lady Luck that fateful July night back in 1922.

Lieutenant Tommy has gone a long way in the army since 1922. Then he was just plain Private Tommy, of the One-Hundred and Seventeenth field artillery, a national guard outfit of Goldsboro, N. C. The One-Hundred and Seventeenth was doing its regular two weeks' field work at Fort Bragg.

It was a hot night, and some of the boys were holding cavalry maneuvers on a blanket in one of the tents. For horses they were using little white, spotted cubes, and those "horses" were galloping back and forth across the blanket in a way that would have scared an enemy army out of at least six weeks' pay.

Tommy and Pal Are Attracted by Galloping Ivories.

Of course, an unsympathetic officer of the day might have suspected that those fellows were shooting craps, but I'm going to take Tommy's word for it that those shouts of "Come on, seven!" that came from the tent, were just the cries of excited rooters who wanted to see the Seventh regiment win.

Tommy and a friend were coming back from an evening in a nearby town when they heard the boys cheering the Seventh regiment on. There was also a lot of encouragement being given to Big Dick, who, I presume, was the captain of the Seventh regiment, and Little Joe, who must have been the first lieutenant. The rooting attracted Tommy and his pal, and they dropped into the tent to see what was going on.

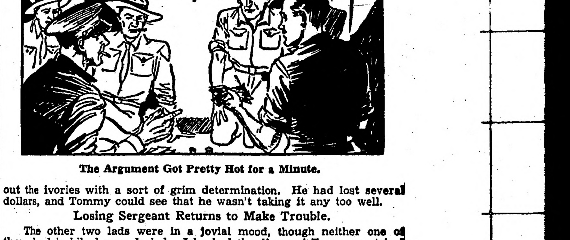
There were three men in the tent—a sergeant named Joe and two privates, Bill and John. The sergeant had been drinking, and he rolled out the ivories with a sort of grim determination. He had lost several dollars, and Tommy could see that he wasn't taking it any too well.



The Argument Got Pretty Hot for a Minute.

Losing Sergeant Returns to Make Trouble.

The other two lads were in a jovial mood, though neither one of them had imbibed any alcohol. John had the dice and Tommy watched him while he set a point, made it, and picked up his winnings. And it was right there that the friendly game began to take on a serious aspect.

Joe, the sergeant, claimed that John hadn't won the money and told him to put it down. There was an argument that got pretty hot for a minute, but in the end John put the dough back just to humor him, and the play was resumed. A couple more throws and Joe left, weaving his way unsteadily out of the door. But a few minutes later he was back again, a .45 revolver in his hand and an ugly scowl on his face.

Joe was looking for trouble. That much was plain to everybody. He began to accuse John of talking about him behind his back. His finger was tight against the trigger, and looking over, Tommy could see the yellow of cartridge rims in the chamber of the gun. There was no joke about it. That gat was loaded.

Drunken Maniac's Bullet Wakes John Up.

Tommy didn't wait for any more. He made a leap for Joe and grabbed the gun. But Joe kept his grip on the revolver, too, and the pair of them rolled over on the tent floor, fighting desperately for possession of the weapon.

Says Tommy: "I wasn't sure I could hold him long, and I yelled to John to go away. He just sat there looking at me. Then suddenly Joe pulled the trigger. There was a sharp crack that deafened me for a minute, and a bullet whizzed by my head and ripped on out through the top of the tent. I should have been scared then, but I wasn't. At that moment I was too excited to feel the effects of fear."

And still John sat calmly on his cot, watching Tommy wrestle with the drunken maniac. Whether he was dazed or scared stiff or just thought it was all a joke, Tommy never learned. But he sat there until another shot rang out, and this time the Bullet hit John in the hip. That broke the spell. John leaped to his feet and streaked out of the tent. Tommy says he's never seen a man run so fast in his life.

Tommy Stares Into the Muzzle of a .45.

Tommy was tired by that time—dead tired. Joe was strong as a bull, and he knew he'd never be able to get that gun away from him. "John was gone," he says, "and I didn't think Joe would shoot me. I took a chance and let him go. He got up, drunk and furious, and for a full minute I lay on the ground staring into the muzzle of the .45. That's when I did get scared. I have never seen a gun muzzle grow to look so large. I expected every second to be my last, and I began wishing he would shoot and get it over with. But no! He just stood there, fingers convulsing on the trigger, face purple with rage. Then all of a sudden he seemed to realize that John had gone, and he ran out of the tent after him."

That was the beginning of the end. In another ten seconds the whole camp was in an uproar. They caught Joe and took him to the guardhouse, and later they found Johnny and sent him to a hospital, where he spent several weeks getting over that wound in the hip.

And Tommy says that just about the time John got out of the hospital was when his nerves quieted down and his hair stopped standing on end.

Pygmy Hippopotamus

The pygmy hippopotamus is found only in a few lakes and rivers of Liberia, the Negro republic of Western Africa, although his ancestors in prehistoric times inhabited southern Europe, northern Africa, and the islands of the Mediterranean. The pygmy is not so well equipped for swimming as the giant hippo'. His eyes are set in the side of his head, instead of on top, and his legs and tail are longer. He has a larger brain and spends more of his time on shore in dense jungle than in the water.

Colonial Dutch Ovens

The early Colonial American Dutch ovens were round, square, or oblong, with an open front. The round variety was often fitted with a spit turned by a handle on the outside, to roast meat. Otherwise the ovens were used for baking. The open side was set close to the fire, to receive the full heat. Usually they were constructed of tin which gave them the name of "tin kitchen" or "Dutch kitchen." The bake kettle, a covered receptacle on high legs to set over the fire, was sometimes called a Dutch oven.

Officers of Screen Boys' Club

Limited to youngsters under eighteen years of age who have at least three feature motion picture roles to their credit, the Screen Boys' club was organized at the home of Director W. S. Van Dyke with a nucleus of 15 charter members. It was a hilarious session—as witness this meeting of the officers. Left to right, they are: Freddie Bartholomew, president; Mickey Rooney, first vice-president, and Jackie Cooper, treasurer.

Helgoland Said to Be Slowly Melting Into the North Sea

Germany's "Gibraltar" Literally Crumbling Away.

Washington, D. C. — Germany's alleged refortification of Helgoland has attracted international attention. Again the island is accused of having as much strategic importance per cubic foot as any other comparable chunk of Europe.

"From a passing steamer, Helgoland appears as a single triangular block of red sandstone," says the National Geographic society. "Now only a fraction of a mile square, the island is literally crumbling away beneath its 2,500 inhabitants.

"This sea-bitten morsel is the remotest of the Frisian islands, which the North sea has gouged out of the northern coastline of Europe. A broad submerged rocky ledge in the shoal area around Helgoland is a clue to the island's former extent, estimated to have been five times its present size. The wave-worn western side was ringed around with a girdle of granite brought from the Danish island of Bornholm. But even thus protected Helgoland is doomed to melt slowly into the North sea.

DECATHLON WINNER

"Eye of the Empire."

"Because of its position in the North sea, the island bears the reputation of a Gibraltar. As Germany's 'Eye of the Empire,' it commands the mouths of the Weser, Jade, Elbe, and Eider Rivers, and the harbors of Hamburg, Bremen and Cuxhaven from a vantage point 28 miles from the nearest mainland.

"Shaped somewhat like a lean pork chop, it has dimensions notable for their smallness, except the height; its sides rise sheer and dripping from the North sea to a flat top 200 feet above sea level. Its three tips can be visited in an hour's stroll. Upon the triangular rock would fit the Federal Triangle buildings along Pennsylvania avenue in Washington with a little margin.

"Within its diminishing boundaries, the island has three parts: the rock table of Oberland with its tuft of town, the shoreline shelf projecting like a cap's visor below with a second edition of town called Unterland, and the wisp of sandy Dune in tow a mile to the east. A thin green felt of pasturage across the island's top completes the color triad which inspired the flag:

'Green the land, red the rock, white the sand:
'These colors make the flag of Helgoland.'

"The money crop of Helgoland is sun tan. This is raised chiefly at the expense of visitors basking on the frail half-moon of barren beach of the Dune, or Sand island. Among the thousands of summer resorters who steam out from Hamburg was once the American actor, Richard Mansfield, then an infant comfortable in an improvised cradle of a dresser drawer. His mother, excited at leaving the island in a terrific storm, embarked without him, so that the forgotten baby was delivered to her on the high seas wrapped in an oilskin coat.

Pilots and Fisherfolk.

"Helgolanders are mainly pilots, fisherfolk, or boarding-house keepers. A rugged race of Frisians, they acquired the habit of considering themselves fishermen at the beginning of the fifteenth century, when a strange migration of herring brought them great harvests of fish for 200 years. An equally strange emigration of their source of income left them catching only a few lobsters.

"Helgoland was traded by England in 1890 to Germany for Zanzibar, 3,000 times as large. The exchange was ridiculed as an entire suit of clothes swapped for a trouser button. But the trouser button demonstrated that it could serve a purpose of vital importance when it became one of the world's strongest fortresses during the World war. Not far away, on a misty morning in August, 1914, occurred the first serious naval clash of the war, when British victory littered the North sea with wreckage."

Popcorn Orchard Foils Field Mice in Michigan

Sparta, Mich.—When Walter Umlor, peach grower near here, planted 25 acres to popcorn last spring, 15 acres of it between rows of his young fruit trees, his neighbors thought he was crazy. But when he sold his crop last fall for $1,988 they began to change their mind.

Whole-hearted endorsement of Umlor's sanity was given this spring, when it was found that while hundreds of fruit trees on other farms had been girdled by field mice, Umlor's were untouched.

After his corn was harvested last fall, Umlor left the stalks on the ground, every pile containing several ears of corn. The mice built their nests in the stalks and wintered on the corn, so felt no need of bark to dine upon.

Thought Is Urged Upon Those Who Want Strength

Boston.—Think and grow stronger, advises Dr. Frederick Rand Rogers, physical education director at Boston university.

To quote Doctor Rogers:

"The ordinary business executive is stronger than the average day laborer, just as the professors at the School of Education show a greater physical fitness index than their students."

The reason? Because thinking "puts into action that fundamental function of the brain, the co-ordinating of muscle cells of the body."

Doctor Rogers bases his assertion on results of a series of tests with a manometer or hand dynamometer, which when squeezed in the hand registers the number of pounds pressure.

Blazing Ice Box Is Task for Firemen

San Antonio, Tex., — "Send some fireman over here—my ice box is on fire," cried an excited voice over the fire department telephone here.

The firemen, accustomed to rescuing cats from trees, and all sorts of other odd tricks were a bit dubious but made the call anyway.

They arrived at the home of Louis Martin—and sure enough found his ice box on fire.

Old Auto His Weapon in Fight on Drouth

Learning his lesson from the 1934 drouth, Risinger decided to irrigate. He bought a 1928 model car, drove it to a creek on the edge of his 37-acre farm near here, and used its motor to power a water pump.

The water was pumped directly from the creek bed to feeder canals which conveyed it to smaller canals between the rows of plants. Now Risinger has four men working for him and is pumping water 10 hours a day.

Sturdy, fast-growing corn stalks sway in the hot dry wind on the 15 acres of his farm which slope suitable for irrigation. Cucumbers, squashes, peppers and tomatoes also flourish, while only a few feet away unirrigated patches of the same vegetables are parched and stunted.

"Pumping water produces a crop far above normal during a drouth," said Risinger, "but it isn't really a question of how much it increases production. Without irrigation there would have been no crop."

RICHEST IN JAPAN

Japan's richest man, Baron Kichizaemon Sumitomo, who paid an assessment of 800,000 yen on an income of 3,000,000 yen, the highest made in Japan in 1936. He is 25 years old and has been head of the house of Sumitomo since 1926. He was graduated from Kyoto Imperial university in 1933, and a year later married his cousin, the granddaughter of Prince Saionji, the last of the elder statesmen. Baron Sumitomo is president of the Sumitomo Limited Partnership; director of the Sumitomo bank and the Sumitomo trust, mine, warehouse and life insurance companies.

Felons Give Up Bonus

Joliet, Ill.—Four hundred inmates of the Illinois State and Stateville prisons received bonus checks but were forced to turn them over to prison officials immediately. Convicts who keep their money on deposit rather than turn it over to their families are permitted to spend $3 a week in the commissary.

Mill Hitched to the Moon

REMEMBER the old admonition to "hitch your wagon to a star"? Caleb Hodgdon did better than that. He hitched his mill to the moon and for 111 years the moon has been running the mill for him and his descendants.

It was back in 1825 that Caleb, sailing down the coast of Maine, reached the mouth of the Damariscotta river and saw a 40-acre natural pond which opened into the river through a very narrow outlet. This perfect tidal basin was filled and emptied twice a day by the sea, and since the moon controls the tide, it is literally true that Caleb Hodgdon hitched his mill to the moon.

Caleb built a dam and a bridge which are still in use today. He installed the old type undershot waterwheel to run his mill and used it as power for grinding grain as well as sawing lumber. He bought acres of timberland, sent crews into the woods to fell the trees, snake them down to the river with oxen, then at high tide float them into his mill pond. Next he added a shipyard and built ships from the lumber which he had sawed.

Later generations of Hodgdons continued to operate the mill and shipyard, and one of the products of the latter was the schooner, Bowdoin, which Commander Donald B. MacMillan used in his Arctic explorations. Later Hodgdons also replaced the undershot waterwheel with a turbine but the principle of operation of the mill is the same with it as with the waterwheel. When the tide rises, it forces open the gates in the dam which Caleb built and fills the pond. When the tide is on the ebb the doors automatically close and the water is prevented from flowing out of the pond except through the turbines of the mill.

Go to East Boothbay, Maine, today and you can see the mill which Caleb Hodgdon built and hitched to the moon.

Double Meaning

IT FIRST appeared in a Philadelphia newspaper in 1776 thus:

Hark! hark! the trumpet sounds, the din of war's alarms,
O'er seas and solid grounds, doth call us all to arms;
Who for King George doth stand, their honors soon shall shine;
Their ruin is at hand, who with the Congress join.
The acts of Parliament, in them I much delight,
I hate their cursed intent, who for the Congress fight,
The Tories of the day, they are my daily toast,
They soon will sneak away, who Independence boast;
Who non-resistance hold, they have my hand and heart.
May they for slaves be sold, who act a Whiggish part;
On Mansfield, North, and Bute, may daily blessings pour,
Confusion and dispute, on Congress evermore;
To North and British lord, may honors still be done,
I wish a block or cord, to General Washington.

It was reprinted in many other Colonial newspapers. "That's fine!" said British army officers and Tory officials. "The man who wrote that is certainly loyal to His Majesty and he has very wisely condemned this foolish Revolution."

If any Patriot heard one of them say that, he must have smiled to himself. For if he was "in on the know," he didn't read the poem as it is printed above. He read each line as far as the comma in the middle, then he read the next line the same way and so on. Or he began reading at the comma in the first line, then dropped down to the comma in the next and so on.

That gave the poem a very different meaning indeed. Try it and see for yourself why the Patriots read it that way!

Mad Poet

ONE of the most beautifully descriptive passages in all American literature is these often-quoted lines:

Now twilight lets her curtain down,
And pins it with a star.

They were written by McDonald Clarke, the "Mad-Poet" who died in the "lunatic asylum" on Blackwell's Island, New York city.

Characteristic of his gift for combining the ridiculous with the sublime was this poem which he wrote about George Washington:

Eternity—give him elbow room;
A spirit like his is large;
Earth, fence with artillery his tomb,
And fire a double charge
To the memory of America's greatest man;
Match him, posterity, if you can.

LETTER "C" IN HISTORY

Have we ever realized what a big part the letter "C" has played in history? Empire builders, conquerors, discoverers of great continents, history's foremost figures—most bore names beginning with "C," says Pearson's Weekly. Clive won India. Columbus discovered America. Charlemagne founded the Roman empire. Cook discovered Australia — Cabot Labrador. Cortes conquered Mexico. All-conquering Caesar set up a new order of things half across Europe, and he was "broken" by Cleopatra, most famous queen. The world's richest man—perpetuated in proverb—was Croesus. The most famous singer was Caruso, succeeded by Challapin

RANKS OF AGING IN NATION IS GROWING

Trend Means More Older Workers in Industry.

New York.—Changes in the "age distribution" of the population that are occurring as the immigrant portion ages soon will present a "new challenge" to American business management, Dr. Robert E. Chaddock, professor of statistics in Columbia university, asserted.

Declaring that older persons are increasing numerically in proportion to the rest of the population Dr. Chaddock estimated that the number of those over sixty-five years old, now about 6,500,000, will be trebled in fifty years. With the population approaching a stationary level, he asserted, the general death rate soon will begin to rise.

Burden of Aged Grows

"The period of youth in our industrial organization is passing and our economic structure must be adapted to age changes," he wrote. "Institutions and agencies for the care of the aged, the burden of old-age pensions and the costs of dependency will increase rapidly.

"The increasing burden of the aged upon the productive workers need not affect adversely the standard of living, because the proportion of persons in the productive ages, twenty to sixty-four, is not decreasing and the burden of support for the young dependent group is declining."

Adaptation of the industrial structure to employ the ever increasing number of older workers, forty-five to sixty-four, will be necessary if the high American standard of living is to be maintained, Dr. Chaddock declared. Otherwise, an increasing number may become semi-dependent, he warned, thus increasing the total burden of support resting upon the productive workers.

Aged in Industry

Due to the restriction of immigration and to the aging of the foreign-born here, the percentage of those who immigrated to this country and are now over sixty-five is twice as great as that of the native Americans over sixty-five, Dr. Chaddock observed.

The net result of all population changes, he wrote, is a steadily declining proportion of persons under twenty and a corresponding increase of those over forty-five. There is little change in the proportion of the productive group, twenty to forty-four, the survey noted.

Discussing the sex composition of the population, Dr. Chaddock said that the trend is toward numerical equality of the sexes among whites.

He noted that the proportion of people twenty to sixty-four years old is much greater in the cities than in the country. In the rural districts the number of children in proportion to the entire population was found greater than in the urban areas.

Man, 60, Weds Girl, 22, Son Weds Her Sister

Helmetta, N. J.—William B. Tilton, sixty-year-old Gravel Hill farmer, married Julia Scott, twenty-two, his housekeeper, as his son Ernest, twenty-four, married her sister, Celia, eighteen.

The ceremony was performed at the Holy Trinity Catholic church by the Rev. John Budziak.

The two sisters wore white satin veils, as Tilton said they would, and the grooms were slicked up in their Sunday clothes just to please them.

Tilton, who wanted a "quiet little wedding," one that wouldn't interfere with his "business routine," found traffic blocked by a crowd gathered in front of the church when the party arrived.

Following the ceremony, the two couples left for Freehold, where they planned a wedding dinner in a hotel before returning to Tilton's ninety-nine-acre farm, where all four will live together.

The farmer saw no reason why his age and that of his bride should interfere with their happiness. He said:

"Happiness in married life depends on how much love one has for the other. Marriage is like business. You have to take a chance."

Uses First Pay Check to Repay Relief Fund

Paterson, N. J.—Amir Hassman, a forty-seven-year-old Arabian who believes, he said, that "a man who breaks promises soon breaks friendships," has started to make good a debt of $29.10 to Paterson.

Several months ago Hassman, who has been in this country sixteen years, lost his job. At first he refused to take relief because, he said, it was against his "principles."

Finally, however, Hassman was convinced that at least he should get enough so that he might buy food. So he reluctantly applied to Poormaster James O'Gorman. Insisting he needed little on which to live, he accepted a $1.80 a week food allowance. He lived on that until two weeks ago when he obtained a job at 66 cents an hour. Today he received his first pay check and went immediately to O'Gorman. He turned over $10 of his salary and promised that the other $19.10 would be forthcoming within a few weeks.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

If I had to draw a picture of a woman who makes her living guiding explorers and others in the jungles of British Guiana, I wouldn't choose Mrs. Violet McTurk as my model—I've been to British Guiana and looked at that sullen, brooding jungle. Mrs. McTurk is young, soft-spoken and blonde. Her attractive appearance suggests the beach and sun umbrella of some swanky club rather than the "green hell," as it has been aptly termed. Nevertheless, difficult as it may be to think of a jungle guide as young, soft-voiced and blonde, and especially one with the name Violet, Mrs. McTurk makes her living that way. From November until May she guides explorers, movie expeditions and just plain tourists from Georgetown, the capital of Demerara, to Kaietur Fall, a three-day journey up the Potaro river — and the jungle begins at Georgetown.

Born in Barbadoes, Mrs. McTurk after her marriage seven years ago, went to British Guiana with her husband, who ran freight and dug gold. Their home was on an island in the Potaro, which is a branch of the Essequibo. The island was a sort of kingdom, with friendly Indians as subjects. Word passed through the bush that McTurk had married and Indians came from as far away as a hundred miles — in the jungle, a hundred miles is more than a mere bit of pleasant motoring — to look at her and touch her blonde hair and white skin. Four years ago, McTurk died. It was then that Mrs. McTurk became a guide. She averages one trip a month and when not guiding, runs a store at Kangaruma, 168 miles from Georgetown, where miners buy their supplies, the island home having become too lonely after McTurk died. She also supervises Indians who dig gold for her.

• • •

Mrs. McTurk is here on a two-months vacation. It is her first visit to New York and she is duly impressed. As a matter of fact, she finds New York far more thrilling than the jungle. Of all the excitement, riding in the subway has supplied her with the most, she said. Then she added that New York is far more lonely than British Guiana—and there is something to that.

• • •

Some way or other, I can't take down my hair and have a good cry over these wise guys down in Wall street. When repeal came along, they continued to buy their liquor from the bootleggers who had served them in the more or less dry spell. The reason was that the bootleggers sold various well-known brands at much less than was charged by stores licensed by the state. The bootleggers explained that theirs was smuggled goods and thus they escaped payment of customs and import duties, as well as taxes, and they were willing, for old time's sake to pass along the savings to their customers.

• • •

Well, everything went along all right until, as you may have seen, the government took charge of a bunch of gentlemen who had been supplying bootleggers with essential supplies, such as empty bottles with brand names, and revenue and tax stamps. Along with that came the announcement that the Wall street wise guys had been the biggest patrons of the dispensers of fake liquors. And instead of tears, there were snickers.

• • •

That reminds me of a well-known writer who took prohibition so seriously that when it went into effect, he buried a supply which he thought, at the rate of one drink a day, would last him the rest of his life. When the bootleg industry began to flourish he took to hooch, laying by what he could, figuring that in time the stream would run dry. Then came repeal and it will still be a couple of months before he gets around to digging up any of his buried treasure. His fear is that he will have completely lost his taste for the McCoy.

CHAPTER I

Hugh Marsh waited on the station platform for the 11:25 from Washington which was bringing his younger sister, Kezia, home from school. The train was a few minutes late. He was annoyed and wished he had called before he left his office to time its arrival. He might have worked a few minutes longer on the cost sheet he was preparing.

Around him were the milling people who wait for trains, people of all classes and conditions, some with harassed faces who carried cheap suitcases, one or two laughing family groups, some traveling salesmen, with smart luggage and an air of success.

A long whistle coming from around the curve, startled the groups on the station platform into scrambling activity. Baggage was lifted, good-byes were said, the crowd surged forward toward the steel rails as the train thundered by and came to a gradual stop.

Kezia, twenty years old, slim and delectable, her eyes bright with excitement, a small brown hat on her curly ash-blond hair, a jacketed brown silk suit with a spray of orchids at the shoulder, came down the steps of the sleeping car. The smartness of her costume and the supple grace with which she moved, made her look much prettier than she really was. She smiled radiantly at the well-dressed man of 30 who picked up her bags with his from the row the porter had set out, chatted to him as they came along the narrow space between the wall of the embankment and the train.

"Good-by—Perhaps We May Meet Again."

"Here—here!" said Hugh touching her arm.

"Hugh, darling!" she cried in glad surprise. She kissed him, held both his hands for a second, then turning to her companion, said: "This is Hugh, the most wonderful brother in the world, Mr. DeGraffe. Nice people should know each other, and Mr. DeGraffe has been very nice on this trip!"

The men shook hands. DeGraffe, obviously amused by Kezia, uttered a few inconsequentials, murmured, "Good-by—perhaps we may meet again," lifted his hat and followed in the wake of a taxi driver.

Hugh and Kezia climbed the stairs to the street and the waiting car.

Hugh released the brake preparatory to starting. "Ever hear little girls shouldn't talk to strange men on trains?"

"How do you know I picked him up?" she asked, pouting.

"Deduction—'perhaps we may meet again.'"

She wrinkled her nose at him. "Even Emily Post says you may speak to a well-bred stranger in a museum or traveling! Don't be elder-brotherly!" She added in a whisper with a pert look at him, "I'm grown up now—know my way about!"

"Serving notice?"

"Just as well," she laughed.

They went forward to the green light and edged their way through a narrow street congested with traffic. The steel mills beyond the river vibrated with a rhythm that was like the roar of distant surf.

"How is Mother?" she inquired almost at once.

"Very well."

"The love!" murmured Kezia tenderly. "And how is Dorrie?"

"She's great. She had an engagement or she would have come this noon. She sent her love."

"No little hopes for the bassinette? . . . Shame on you, Hugh! You've been married four years."

"Give us time—we're young."

"Think of sister Margery's example—three in no time at all!"

"Living is expensive."

"And so is Dorrie."

The flicker of annoyance in his hazel eyes was his only answer.

"How's Ellen Pendleton?" she asked.

"She's going with a boy named Jerry Purdue. Good-looking, smooth—but not up to Ellen, according to Mother."

"Ellen still arty?"

The edge in her voice did not escape Hugh. Kezzie had always "had it in" for Ellen, a distant cousin on their mother's side, a remnant of childish jealousy. Ellen had a natural charm, unique and appealing, which was all the more provocative because she was so unconscious of it. "I think she still paints a little," he replied. "Gavin and Lizzie wouldn't let her finish art school, you know."

To himself he wondered as he often had before: How the dickens had Gavin and Lizzie managed to produce such a lovely lyric creature as Ellen?

They moved faster up an avenue over which elms met forming a Gothic archway. A mile further on, Hugh made a sharp turn.

"There it is," said Kezia, in a choked voice, her eyes misted with tears. Their childhood home lay before them, a white house with colonial pillars set back on a deep lawn. When they turned into the drive a woman rose from a chair on the porch.

"Mother!" cried Kezia. She leaped out of the car the second Hugh brought it to a stop.

"Kezzie, darling, it has been so long!" Fluvanna Marsh put her arms about her daughter, kissed her, then held her off to look into her eyes with wistful affection. "So long—and it is good to have you home to stay!" Then her fingers touched Hugh's sleeve with a caressing gesture although she had seen him only a few hours before on his way to the office. She murmured "Hugh."

That was part of Mother's hold over him, thought Hugh. If you skipped a day coming to see her, she never made you feel remiss. At each meeting she surrounded you with an unspoken flood of joy in your presence, as silent and intangible as sunshine.

"It's great to be home—simply marvelous! I could have cheered when I saw Pittsburgh this morning—dear old smoky Pittsburgh! It reminded me of Corinth . . . And everything's just the same, the house, the yard—you, Mother! Oh, I do love it all—and I'm going to have a wonderful time this summer! . . . Come on, Hugh, be a redcap for me! Carry my grips upstairs and I'll wash up."

Her room had been redecorated in her absence and she exclaimed with pleasure. "Pale gold, and chintz of gold and green! Adorable!" She went about joyfully examining her possessions, her book-case, the pictures on the wall.

Margery was sitting on the porch with her mother when Hugh came downstairs. "Hello, Hugh." She lifted her face for his brotherly kiss. "I wanted to go to the train with you but things were complicated this morning. Angela would not sleep after her bath. She walked around her crib, clinging to the bars—and sang!—and she's only 10 months old. Stop laughing! . . . She really sang, I tell you!"

The Starved Man Returns

By SUE COLLINS

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

VINA BELLAMY had almost decided to chuck her job as associate editor of the Gray Book—the well-known short story magazine. Even though she should not be able to get something else for months, she decided she could no longer work under the editor, Mr. Harvey Doll. She had stood it four years and she was quite sure that the success of the magazine was in no small measure due to her efforts. But Mr. Doll seemed only to criticize her work and take all the credit for the publication's success as his.

As she sorted through the drawers of her desk, Vina came across a manuscript, typed on cheap manilla paper. It was obviously written by a beginner. Then Vina suddenly recalled the circumstances by which she had acquired that manuscript. A tall, lean, almost ferocious young man had pushed his way past the receptionist into her office "to see the guy that bought the stories for the Gray Book." He had been surprised to see a young girl of twenty-two in the office but it hadn't crushed his spirit.

That had been three years ago. Vina felt sorry for the young man. He actually had looked hungry as he tossed his manuscript down on her desk.

After a glance through the manuscript she thought it was worthless but she bought it. That is, she made out a fake pay slip, walked down the corridor with it, where she took thirty dollars from her pay envelope and brought it back, pretending she had been to the cashier's office. The man had thanked her and disappeared without leaving his name.

Well, here was the manuscript turning up again to revive the memories of happier days. She had read the manuscript after the young man had left and finding it quite unusual, she had passed it on to Mr. Doll in hopes he would find it usable and thus she'd get repaid. But Mr. Doll had found it not suited and returned it to her with the suggestion that she had better pick out better stories.

But as Vina read the story over after a three-year interlude, she decided to try her luck with the story again. It really was an unusual bit of writing. So she typed the manuscript on expensive paper at home that night, leaving it just as the young author had written it, not changing a comma or question mark. The next morning instead of informing Mr. Doll that she was considering leaving she handed him the manuscript, saying it had just been received. Mr. Doll did not remember the first time he had read the story. Instead, after lunch he walked into Vina's office and told her that the story was "amazing," that it was certainly just what he had been looking for for the November issue. "It's just the sort of writing Harold Bell does," Mr. Doll stated. "Put through a voucher to the cashier. We'll accept it for two hundred."

But Vina didn't have the slightest idea of how to find the author, and she didn't even know his name.

Vina awaiting developments decided to stick to her job until the November issue was off the press and to see if the author turned up. Mr. Doll decided to publish the story with a great splash as the manuscript of an unknown genius, unpaid because neither his name nor address were known. The November issue of the Gray Book was a sell-out because of the story and critics applauded Mr. Doll's pioneering work for unearthing such a great writer.

Then one day the illustrious Harold Bell rushed into the office, brushing aside the receptionist and office boy and making his way directly to the editorial offices. Mr. Doll was dumbfounded at a visit from the great writer. But Harold Bell paid no attention to the editor. He was engrossed in conversation with Vina Bellamy.

"That's my story," he said eagerly, "that everyone's talking about. And you're the girl that bought it from me three years ago. I've been on the watch for you for some time."

There were explanations on both sides. The now successful writer explained more leisurely than at the time of his first visit that he absolutely had been starving when Vina had bought the story. He'd been in and out of every editorial office in the city peddling the story but he couldn't get in to see the editors. Later, when he had managed to break through and had become successful, he had wanted to locate the girl who had actually saved him but he had forgotten where the offices were and even the name of the publication because of his condition.

Vina smiled. It certainly hadn't been a crazy act for her to give that ferocious looking young man thirty dollars of her own three years back. Look what had become of him—nothing could have made her happier.

But two weeks later when she resigned from the Gray Book, Vina was happier. She had a plausible excuse for quitting—she was going to marry Harold Bell and tour the world on a honeymoon.

Thinking Men Oppose Change

Prefer Security of Roosevelt's Sound Foreign Policy; Seeking Farm Vote

By EARL GODWIN

WASHINGTON. — We ought to be proud of the fact that the diplomats and rulers of the world look on Franklin Roosevelt as a master hand in the art of minding America's business in such a way that we are now about as free from entangling foreign alliances as we have ever been. This is important to the people of America because there is no doubt that in the eventual next world war the powers will endeavor to bring us into the scrap—as before.

Because of Roosevelt's strong position and his keen grasp of international affairs, plus the grave danger of the wrong man in the White House in a time of international stress, thinking men are talking against any idea of a change of administration. Landon has not, at this writing, given any inkling of what his views may be on these international matters; and for all I know he hasn't any—but it is well to remember that the series of little wars we inflicted on our small southern neighbors for years were the outcome of the so-called "dollar diplomacy" of the Wall street investors who used to run the state department.

We had an idea once that there was a manifest destiny which sent this country into every South American and West Indian cane brake and jungle to see whether or not we couldn't make a little money in some of these foreign enterprises. Then, to back up the American enterprises in these regions, we used to have a part of our navy and marine corps down there acting as policemen. This used to irritate these South American and West Indian countries beyond description and was the reason for the eternal ill feeling those folks used to bear toward us. There never was any reason for us to be backing up this type of dollar diplomacy which kept us on the verge of small warfare in Cuba, Nicaragua, Mexico and other neighboring lands. There may have been reason for us now and then to act the part of an armed arbiter in some hot-headed island where the natives were running wild—but by and large the wisest thing this country ever did was to drop all ideas of the big stick in other people's countries and start on the Roosevelt idea of being a good neighbor to everybody.

We are working up trade agreements that are showing up the old selfish high tariff policies; we have certainly gained a great foothold in Canada that way; also in several other countries. We are about to stage a great western-world conference in South America which ought to lead to the establishment of a solid North American bloc of countries to stand together, mind their own business, and resist European and Asiatic influences. It may be the new world against the old world sometime in the future, and we can start right now to get ready.

Roosevelt sees a long way ahead in these world matters; it would be a shameful thing to sidetrack him now just as he is getting the United States in a leading international position as a peace maker.

Roosevelt has been keeping his weather eye open on European affairs for a long time past; and the country should realize that it has been far seeing statesmanship which has placed us right now in a strong neutral position with respect to every one of the European snarls—including the Spanish horror. Otherwise you would have seen us gradually edging our way into a European war through the device of moneys loaned or munitions sold to one side or the other. But Roosevelt's neutrality policies, backed up by congress, have made it clear to the world that we will have none of Europe's dirty mess.

COURTING FARM VOTES.

The farm vote is the exciting prize in this campaign; and it is interesting to know that the Roosevelt campaign in the Middle West farm belt is to be conducted educationally by a non partisan, or possible omini-partisan committee of farm leaders who have been hammering on New Deal principles for years past. Headed by William Settle of the Indiana farm bureau federation, this committee is now being organized throughout several states and has some well known names connected with it at this writing. There is Frank Murphy of Minneapolis, attorney for several large farm organizations, and remembered for the fact that although he was a delegate to the G. O. P. convention which nominated Hoover, he bolted that outfit and led 5,000 farmers to Houston demanding a farm plank that meant something.

Another well known Mid-West farm leader on this committee is Homer Hush of Iowa, who makes the plain statement that "the farmer who deserts Roosevelt is a sucker." Others are Paul Weis of Wisconsin, a Progressive; Sam Fishman, Kansas Republican read out of that party by Chairman John Hamilton of the G. O. P national committee of the founders of the nonpartisan league.

This committee will have its headquarters in Chicago; you will see the result of its efforts in the way of educational matter in the form of booklets, pamphlets, cartoons and exhibits. One of the Republican efforts it is now engaged in combating is the G. O. P. hatred of the reciprocal trade treaties. As I have told you in this column, there is a grave danger in farmers being beguiled into believing the reciprocal trade treaties are a menace to agriculture—and vote for the Landon administration without realizing they are voting to build a tariff wall which will bring back all the old evils that pestered and ruined them before. A Republican tariff has always worked wonders for the industrialists who put up the prices of everything they sold to farmers—while the farmers got nothing at all out of it.

• • •

NO WASTE HERE.

It is a sad commentary on the selfish political tactics of the New Deal's enemies that they continually refer to the "waste" of the Public Works program and never yet have given credit for such enormously helpful things as the 4,115 schools which have been built this past two and a half years with Public Works money. Thus providing facilities for 1,200,000 children who otherwise would have either not been provided for or who would have been crowded into completely inadequate rooms or buildings.

There is no wastefulness in such a program. It was an employment-creating drive, which not only gave jobs, spread millions of dollars where they were needed, but provided a great investment in American citizenship.

These schools, which range from one-room buildings to whole new high schools, are scattered over half the 3,071 American counties in all the states. These buildings represent 70 per cent of all the new school buildings in the country in the past two and a half years. This 70 per cent cost $462,000,000, of which the federal government gives more than half. Some of the money, about $90,000,000, was loaned to the communities by the government and will be repaid. The rest was raised by the taxpayers in the communities benefited. There is no waste and no local kick; why then does a man who knows as much as Frank Knox go roaring around the country belaboring Roosevelt for a program that has done as much as this PWA school building program? It reflects on a man's intellectual honor to make charges like Knox makes.

The figures I have reported here have just come from Secretary Ickes; they do not include $30,000,000 spent by the federal government on federal schools among the Indians and at the military and naval academies.

In addition, the government has loaned nearly $60,000,000 to universities which have built new gymnasiums, cafeteria for students, much needed dormitories, etc. The actual expenditures so far (there being a lot yet to come) total $200,000,000 and have provided 800,000 months of work for laboring men at the local sites, and 4,000,000 months of labor per man at various factories. PWA, thus far, has done a tremendous job in resuscitating the school-world from the low level it had fallen into during the depression years, especially the period 1930 to 1933.

• • •

ANOTHER QUESTION.

That old question "what is the Constitution between friends" gives way now to the question "what is the Supreme Court among the governors of drouth-stricken states." That is a local matter, and as the result of this there was a great deal of political hot air blown this way and that by various gentlemen seeking to oust Mr. Roosevelt from the White House. They declared he was violating states' rights and what not—but I notice that the minute he and the responsible officials of the drouth-stricken communities got down to brass tacks, they had no other idea about solving agriculture's drouth problem than on a national basis; not a state basis; and mainly with federal and not with state funds.

In that way of course the President has injected the Constitution into the campaign. He did not do so in any political argument on his trip through the drouth area; and his trip was entirely official and not political. Yet the consequences must have a bearing on politics and on the campaign. It strikes me the situation is a complete practical answer to the legalistic and I think the erroneous conclusions of the Supreme Court.

The President's general program for agriculture and federal spending to aid the distressed millions, therefore, seems to have everybody's approval; and that means Gov. Alf Landon, too. I don't see how the Republicans can make an issue of federal spending, or how anyone can split hairs on whether or not agriculture is a local or a national matter.

Curiously enough, the Landon managers are hoping to make a great vote getting impression among the crowded millions of the eastern cities; and one of their arguments with the city folks is that the New Deal's agricultural policies have raised food prices and thus increased the living costs of the city dwellers.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

HENRY FONDA'S marriage to Frances Seymour Brokaw will increase the little circle of smart society women who, married to motion picture actors, reside in Hollywood. Richard Barthelmess, Gary Cooper and Fred Astaire all married into the Social Register.

Incidentally, Mrs. Brokaw's life story is rather like that of a movie. Born in a small town in Massachusetts, she was the poor cousin of the wealthy Rogers family. Very pretty, very charming, she had everything but money.

She met George T. Brokaw, who had both wealth and social position, fell in love with him, married him, in 1931. Mr. Brokaw died nearly two years ago, leaving his widow and their small daughter well provided for. She never forgot what it meant not to have plenty of money. She has done notable things in charity work. Henry Fonda, whom she met this summer in Europe, is a fortunate young man.

Bette Davis

Bette Davis may seem to be a temperamental star when it comes to battling over stories and salary, but away from the studio she is most decidedly just another human being.

Not long ago she and her husband were traveling through the Canadian Rockies, on the first part of that vacation trip she's taking. She did rather startle the other guests at the hotel in Lake Louise by wearing a very low-cut evening gown—but she startled them still more by taking the bus to Banff the next day, instead of being exclusive and going in a private car.

Here's a new way to break into the movies. Marjorie Gage, a young society girl, likes to fly. She entered her own plane for the Ruth Chatterton Flying Cup race—and first thing she knew, had been engaged for a picture "The Flying Hostess".

Simone Simon does so well in "Girls' Dormitory" that she is being pushed right ahead. An American girl who, just for fun, acted in a French film made in Salzburg summer before last, declared when she came back that Simone was the cutest thing she ever saw.

"Her face and her figure are both cute," she announced. "And her mind's cute too." Take that as a compliment or the reverse just as you please. Anyway, Simone will be seen next in "White Hunter," with Warner Baxter.

A short story which has attracted much attention, "Beyond the Sound of a Machine Gun," has been purchased by a leading studio, and in it will appear George Raft, Cary Grant, Randolph Scott and Fred MacMurray.

We're to have still more Dickens on the screen. "Pickwick Papers" will be the next Dickens picture. Paramount intended to make it with W. C. Fields, but that plan has been abandoned, and Metro has taken it on.

Jean Muir

Jean Muir decided recently that she'd like her hair better if it were brown, instead of blonde. Also, she cut off her bangs.

Then she made some tests for Warner Brothers. They objected to the changes. And as a result of a lot of argument, the hair stayed brown but the bangs returned. Some movie fans are betting that eventually Jean will return to blonde hair. They point out that it was as a petite blonde that Jean first attracted attention and that its appeal is one of her big assets.

The cycle of war pictures is well under way. Twentieth Century-Fox launched it with "The Road to Glory," and continues it with the forthcoming "King of the Kyber Rifles" and "The Splinter Fleet."

ODDS AND ENDS . . . The young Dionnes are learning some English words for "Reunion," their next picture . . . Eleanor Powell plans to drive East in October, see some new plays in New York, pick up her grandfather and grandmother and drive back to the coast . . . Pretty good for a girl who learned to drive so recently . . . William S. Hart may return to the screen . . . Did you know that the John D. M. Hamilton who is so prominent in the Republican party is a brother of Hale Hamilton, who once was a movie star? . . . Ruth Chatterton plans to return to the stage this fall, no matter how many motion picture companies want her to work for them.

Maine Is Captured by the Republicans

MAINE, the "barometer" state, is back in the Republican column at least so far as its state ticket is concerned. The G. O. P. captured the United States senatorship, the governorship and three congressional seats. Senator Wallace H. White, Republican, defeated Gov. Louis J. Brann, who sought to unseat him. Lewis O. Barrows, Republican, won the governorship by a substantial majority over F. Harold Dubord, Democrat.

The vote cast broke all records for size and interest in the election was intense. The state had been visited by both President Roosevelt, as he returned from his vacation cruise, and Gov. Alf M. Landon, the Republican Presidential nominee, who made speeches there only a few days ago. Colonel Knox, vice presidential candidate on the Republican ticket, also had canvassed the state. Brann, who was elected governor in 1932 and re-elected two years later, was the first Democrat to hold that office in Maine and was personally popular. White was elected senator in 1930 after ten years in the house of representatives.

Communism Is Denounced by Pope Pius

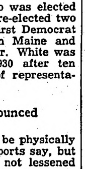
POPE PIUS XI may be physically weak, as recent reports say, but age and illness have not lessened the vigor of his opinions and his way of expressing them. In greeting and blessing some five hundred Spanish refugees who were received at Castel Gandolfo, the holy father took occasion to denounce strongly the "mad" forces of Communism which, he declared, menaced, in Spain and elsewhere, "the very foundations of all order, all culture and all civilization." He urged the constituted authorities of all nations to oppose "these great evils with every remedy and barrier that is possible" and prophesied that there will be utter chaos if "those who have a duty in the matter do not hasten to repair the breach—if, indeed, it is not already too late."



Pope Pius XI

The pope spoke especially of the situation in Spain, but said the crisis there is "a school in which the most serious lesson is being taught to Europe and to the whole world—to a world now at last wholly steeped, ensnared and threatened by subversive propaganda, and more especially to a Europe battered and shaken to its very foundation."

For forty minutes the pontiff spoke passionately, his voice at times broken with emotion, and his address was transmitted by radio to all the civilized world.

Reichsfuehrer Hitler, too, took another hard whack at the Communists at a ceremonial tribute to the World war dead in Nuremberg. Before 120,000 uniformed Nazis and 50,000 others he boasted of Germany's armed strength and shouted:

"Our old enemy, bolshevism, is vanquished within Germany, but still active around her borders. But let no one be deceived. We are ready at any hour. We all have one wish—to maintain peace — but with it goes one firm decision: Never to surrender Germany to that enemy we have come to know so well."

If Hitler, as some think, tries to lead the coming five-power Locarno conference into forming an anti-Soviet alliance, he will be firmly opposed by France. Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos says so, and declares France will under no circumstances abandon her military pact with Soviet Russia.

According to Pravda, authoritative newspaper of Moscow, Hitler plans to attack and partition Czechoslovakia before he embarks on a war against the Soviet union.

Benito Mussolini and his cabinet appropriated large sums to build up Italy's army, navy and air forces to greater strength and planned to carry on vigorously the campaign for self-sufficiency in raw materials.

It looked as if the dove of peace was preparing to leave Europe, and as relations between Japan and China grew more strained every day, she probably will have to take refuge on the western continent.

British Workers Reject Alliance With Reds

BRITISH organized labor will have no truck with the Communists. The trades union congress at Plymouth rejected, by overwhelming votes, three resolutions favoring the formation of a "popular front" alliance with the reds, similar to the combinations that captured the governments of France and Spain.

In this action the workers were largely influenced by the fiery words of Sir Walter Citrine, international labor leader, who has just returned from a visit to Russia. Said he:

"After years of derision of the principles of the Socialist movement, after abuse of unions as the pillars of capitalism, we now have the curiously incongruous spectacle of Communist organizations wanting to come into our midst and be a part of the movement they have so derided.

"I do not know whether you are so credulous as really to believe that there is a sincere conversion to the principles of organized labor. However, for myself and the national council of labor I say without hesitation that the single, simple explanation of the tactics of the Communist movement today is the obvious, abject failure that has accompanied attempts to capture the Socialist movement for Communist principles."

San Sebastian Captured by Spanish Rebels

THE Spanish rebels scored their greatest victory to date when they captured San Sebastian, capital of Guipuzcoa province and famous Bay of Biscay resort. Santa Barabara fort, dominating the city, was first taken and the city's war council then decided to abandon the place, despite the opposition of the anarchists. The more conservative Basque nationals prevented the reds from burning the city, only a paper factory and two residences being destroyed, and the defending forces retreated toward Bilbao, accompanied by thousands of civilians and foreigners.

The municipal governor, Antonio Ortega, and his staff boarded a yacht to go to new headquarters at Zumaya, about 15 miles west of San Sebastian. The new line of defense was established at Orio.

Farmers Will Meet to Plan Conservation

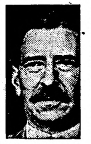
SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE is arranging a series of community meetings of farmers for the purpose of laying out the "agricultural conservation program" for next year. He said the AAA planned the meetings in the farm areas in order to discuss crop insurance and possible maximum limits of benefit payments to each farm. He explained the program aimed at providing "greater abundance for the average American home," and should "help to check soil erosion, improve fertility, encourage better land use and maintain farm income."

Fleet Will Maneuver in North Pacific Waters

BACK at his desk after an illness of six months, Secretary of the Navy Claude A. Swanson immediately made an announcement that will be of deep interest to Japan. The annual fleet maneuvers, which last May were shifted to the Canal Zone as a conciliatory gesture to Japan, will be held next year in North Pacific and Hawaiian waters, and probably the Tokio press will yelp again.



Sec. Swanson

With the announcement Secretary Swanson asserted Japanese plans to retain overage submarines and destroyers involve a "violation" of the London and Washington naval treaties, which are to expire December 31 by Japanese abrogation. He followed up his charge with the statement that the United States has completed plans for two new battleships and is prepared to begin construction "at a moment's notice."

The fleet maneuvers, officially designated as "fleet problem No. 18," will be held during late May and early June. The area of operation, it was indicated, will be the triangle between the Aleutian Islands, Hawaii, and Seattle, where the fleet problem of 1935 was conducted. Vessels and planes probably will work as far west as the Wake Islands.

Armament of the new battleships is at present limited to 14 inch guns, but Admiral William H. Standley, chief of naval operations, said frankly that if Japan does not agree to this limitation by next April, "the sky is the limit."

Sabotage on American Warship Revealed

OUR navy's intelligence department has discovered that a recent small fire on the cruiser Indianapolis while she was being overhauled in the New York navy yard was caused by the driving of phonograph needles and nails into an electric cable; and other suspected sabotage on war vessels is being investigated. The work on the cruiser was being done by civilian employees and Capt. Charles A. Dunn, industrial manager of the yard, said the placing of the nails in the cables was "undoubtedly" a deliberate attempt to damage the cruiser.

Workers Undernourished, Says the A. F. of L.

IN ITS monthly survey of business the American Federation of Labor asserts that, despite increased industrial profits, there is widespread undernourishment among the wage earners. It adds that industry can well afford to raise the wages of the workers.

A study of employed workers' incomes in North Atlantic cities, the federation said, showed that only 26 per cent met the (income) requirements for an adequate diet, while 30 per cent did not have enough food to meet minimum requirements.

Asking "what income will assure a satisfactory food budget for a family of four?" the survey said:

"The figures for Detroit indicate that families with less than $1,900 a year, for father, mother and two half-grown children, do not spend enough for food to buy the adequate diet at moderate cost."

Says Foreign Power Hired Him to Shoot King

GEORGE ANDREW McMAHON, on trial in London for drawing a revolver on King Edward during a parade last July, made the astounding assertion that he had been hired by representatives of a foreign power to shoot the monarch and they agreed to pay him 150 lbs. The man already had been acquitted on two of the three charges against him when he made the confession. It will be remembered that instead of shooting at Edward, he threw his revolver toward the king, who was mounted.

On the third charge, of unlawfully producing a pistol near the king with intent to alarm his majesty, McMahon was given one year in prison.

Discord in the World Power Congress

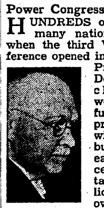
HUNDREDS of delegates, from many nations, were present when the third World Power conference opened in Washington, with President Julius Dorpmueller in the chair. Prospects were good for a useful discussion of the problems connected with the industry, but discord crept in early in the proceedings. At a round table debate on public regulation and ownership of utilities, M. P. Davidson, representing Mayor Fiorello La Guardia of New York, said the only way to reduce electric rates is by threatening public ownership. Three prominent private utility men promptly "took a walk," and John C. Dalton, manager of the County of London Electric Supply, criticized Davidson's talk as a "tirade."



Julius Dorpmueller

The discussion started in connection with a paper by John E. Zimmerman, president of the United Gas Improvement company, who held that power "yardsticks" such as the TVA and Boulder Dam cannot be compared with private utilities unless operating conditions are similar. Such yardsticks, he said, will lead to competitive methods already proved "wasteful and unsatisfactory."

In papers taking the opposite view, Prof. William E. Mosher of Syracuse university, and James C. Bonright of the New York State Power Authority, held that public competition with private companies is "indisputable evidence" of declining faith in regulation.

Magnus Johnson, Former Senator, Dies

MAGNUS JOHNSON, who came from Sweden as an immigrant about forty years ago and made himself a power in Minnesota politics, is dead of pneumonia at the age of sixty-five. Johnson was an early enthusiast for co-operatives and for the Farmer-Labor movement and served in both houses of the Minnesota legislature. In 1923 he was elected United States senator to fill out the term of the late Knute Nelson. Defeated for the governorship in 1926, he retired to his farm, but in 1932 he was elected to congress. He was defeated for re-election in 1934 by Harold Knutson, and in the primary last June lost the farmer-Labor gubernatorial nomination to Elmer Benson.

Brazil's Babassu Oil Worries Dairymen

AMERICAN dairymen are protesting vainly to Secretary of State Hull against the reciprocal trade treaty with Brazil which, they assert, is seriously injuring the industry by encouragement of the manufacture of imitation butter. Under the treaty Brazilian babassu oil, unknown in United States markets prior to 1935, now is being used at the rate of more than a million pounds a month for manufacture of a butter substitute.

Mr. Hull referred the protests to Assistant Secretary Sayre, who pointed out that the provision for free importation of the nut and oil was authorized by congress in the trade agreement act of 1934. He added that the success of the program was of vital interest to the American dairy farmer, "who has more to gain from the re-establishment of prosperous domestic markets for his products through the restoration of an abundant foreign trade than by a policy of excluding even the most remotely competitive products."

Wrap-Around Apron Frock

1961-B.

Here's the style of apron-frock you've been wanting, a wrap-around that affords unhampered freedom of movement whether you're scrubbing the floor, or hanging drapes.

The wide contrasting ruff collar is feminine and trim while three bright buttons do their share for the bodice closing. Short puff sleeves are cleverly styled, simple, and comfortable and there's a conveniently large pocket to hold what nots. A narrow adjustable belt supplies that refinement known as "center poise" and helps "coverall." Truly it fits like the proverbial glove.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1961-B is available for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 34 requires 4⅝ yards of 39-inch material plus ⅞ yard of contrast.

Send for the Barbara Bell Fall Pattern Book containing 100 well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send fifteen cents for your copy.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 367 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Household Questions

When making bread and butter pudding, sprinkle each slice of bread and butter with desiccated coconut instead of currants, and strew some on the top. This will make a change from the ordinary pudding and will be found very tasty.

* * *

Japanned articles should never be washed in hot water, as the japan is likely to wash off. Use lukewarm water and soap.

* * *

Steaming is a good way to cook vegetables, as it reduces the loss of minerals and vitamins. It is also economical, because you can cook several different vegetables at a time.

* * *

If you have no individual molds, jellies may be molded in muffin tins. Turn the pan upside-down, place hot, wet towel over pan and jellies will slip out easily.

If the stalks of broccoli are too thick, split them lengthwise before boiling, so that stalks will cook in the same amount of time as the buds. Broccoli should cook for 20 minutes after water starts boiling.

Old hardwood floors do not require refilling when being done over. Apply two coats of thin shellac, rewax whole surface and polish. Floors should be treated in this way twice a year.

Brothers Were Strangers

The recent death of an aged man in a little one-room cabin near Canisteo, New York, disclosed the fact that he and his brother had lived there together as strangers—divided by a chalk line and silence pact—for the past 62 years. During all this time neither had ever crossed the line or spoken a word to the other.—Collier's Weekly.

Accidents Kill More Young Than Three Diseases

Auto Crashes Lead in List of Fatalities

Washington.—More than twice as many children under 15 years are killed by accidents as by three common communicable diseases, measles, scarlet fever and diphtheria.

This fact emerges in a study of fatal childhood accidents which has been undertaken by the U. S. Public Health Service here. First section of the study relating to automobile accidents, has just been reported by William M. Gafafer, senior statistician of the federal health service.

For children under one year of age mechanical suffocation leads the list of fatal accidents. At one and two years burns caused most fatal accidents. Automobile accidents and burns lead at three years.

The Dangerous Age.

At four years and from then up to fifteen years, automobile accidents rank first as cause of accidental deaths and also outnumber deaths from the three diseases, measles, scarlet fever and diphtheria. The study was limited to the year 1930, the most recent year for which accurate population enumerations exist.

Mr. Gafafer divided the country into three geographic regions, Northeastern, North Central, Southeastern and Western, and reviewed the fatality figures region by region.

The Northeastern region had most childhood automobile deaths per hundred thousand children. Next greatest number was found in the Western region. Then followed the North Central and finally the Southeastern with fewest deaths per hundred thousand children.

"Blanks" in Mind Occur Several Times a Minute

Chicago.—Your mind "goes blank" several times every minute. During these blank periods you involuntarily stop work for a couple of seconds. If you are tired, the stops occur oftener—maybe eight or ten times each minute—and they may last twice as long.

This automatic putting on of brakes by the brain was discovered in experiments conducted at the psychology laboratory of the University of Chicago here, under the direction of Prof. Arthur G. Bills.

Mind Stops Work.

The "blocks," as Professor Bills calls these blank periods, are not complete, he explains. The individual does not lose track of what is going on, but he must mentally stop work on the task at hand.

Blocks partly account for the "er-r-r" and "Ah" which public speakers put between words. These blanks are particularly conspicuous when a person is doing rapid calculating. Every so often, he is unable to proceed and stalls. Fatigue increases both the frequency and the duration of the blocks, causing bunching of responses or spurts of work.

How Stutterers React.

Stutterers block about twice as often as normal persons and their blocks last longer, it was found.

"It is safe to assume that there is a common neurological basis between blocking and stuttering," Professor Bills concluded.

Mental blocks are enforced resting periods, he explained. They may account for the fact that continuous mental work does not impair mental efficiency to nearly the same extent that muscular work impairs muscular efficiency, he believes.

First "Quake" Recorder Is Placed in Museum

Philadelphia.—The first earthquake recorder in the United States, placed in service at Lick observatory at the University of California in 1886, will soon go on display at the museum of the Franklin institute here.

The Lick observatory instrument was one of the few in California at the time of the disastrous 'quake in San Francisco on April 18, 1906. The observatory is only 45 miles away from San Francisco. The original record of this severe and damaging shock is still preserved and shows that while the vibrations threw the recording mechanism off the tracing paper, the apparatus functioned unharmed.

The Road of the Transgressor

By NANCY RHODES

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

THE youngest reporter slumped in her Pullman chair and pulled the article she was writing on crime from her bag. With the check that she hoped to wring from some soft-hearted editor she planned to buy a new coat. Of course the article was still in its swaddling clothes, as it were. She really had not progressed beyond the title, "The Road of the Transgressor." The trouble was that she couldn't decide whether the road of the transgressor was hard or soft. Some transgressors she knew were in clover.

She glanced around the car, hoping to spot a criminal type that would start the fount of inspiration bubbling. But the car was filled with respectable middle-aged ladies who looked as though they might be the past presidents of their local women's clubs. There were two men in the car, one stout and prosy with a long black ribbon dangling from his nose glasses. The other had swung his green chair - back squarely in her face.

"Are there no one-eyed desperadoes left with daggers in their socks?" mourned the Youngest Reporter, her eye on the back of the green plush chair. Then, as though conscious of a thought hovering around it, the green chair slowly revolved and revealed a young man, lean, tanned and abominably good looking. Glorious Apollo, thought the reporter, as he looked at her for a brief moment, then swung his chair half way around and stared at the landscape.

"Gosh," she moaned to herself, "here I am with 50 miles of a cindery train ride ahead of me and an interview with a funny old woman who's running for mayor of a funny old town on a clean-up plank or platform, or whatever it is they run on. And I can't say boo to the only good looking person on the train simply because it is not conventional. But hang it, I'm going to, just the same. Here goes!"

"I'm quite sure we've never met before," she began in her most Ethel Barrymoreish voice.

The young man turned abruptly and smiled.

"There are a good many wasted years behind us," he agreed pleasantly.

"I'm looking for a man with criminal tendencies," said the reporter, rustling her yellow scratch paper. "I want to dissect him and write him into an article so I can buy a new fur coat."

"You're barking up the right tree," said the young man cheerfully. "If my criminal tendencies were laid end to end on the front page of a morning paper I'd be lynched."

From then on they progressed by leaps and bounds, which may have been the reason the reporter could not keep her mind on Mrs. Minerva Locke, the mayoralty nominee of Mechanicsville, who was running for office on a clean-up plank or board or something.

* * *

"Politics is the dirtiest game in the world," stormed Mrs. Locke, pacing angrily up and down her mulberry and taupe living room, whose western windows overlooked the mill city of Mechanicsville in the hollow. "Look at me!" she went on, tapping her stout person with a stubby finger. "I am a good woman! I am running on a cleaner-and-better Mechanicsville plank. And what happens? My opponent, Peter Hinman, and his henchmen start a whispering campaign that threatens to ruin me politically. The story that I am a woman with a past, a former dancer in a Western mining town dance hall, is spreading up and down the political highways and byways. And what can I do? Nothing!"

"Can't you deny it?" asked the reporter idly, her mind wandering to the young man on the train. He, too, lived in Mechanicsville. He had asked her her name and destination and she had told him. He had been strangely silent then and had proffered no return information about himself and she had been too proud to ask. He had promised to call her at Mrs. Locke's house before she went back to Boston.

"Deny it!" raged Mrs. Locke. "You can't deny a thing until you're openly accused, child. It would smack of a guilty conscience if you did and spread the tale even further. Of course, my friends laugh at the story. But there are a good many women in this town who would like to believe the worst about another woman. And I need all their votes."

"The way of the transgressor is hard," quoted the reporter bromidically. "Peter Hinman will be punished."

"The way of the transgresssor is a bed of roses, compared with the lot of a woman who tries to get anywhere in Mechanicsville on a clean-up platform. Why, let me tell you—" She was off on a long harangue, during which the Youngest Reporter's mind wandered again to the man on the train. Would he call tonight or tomorrow morning? Who was he, anyway? She adored the way his hair grew thick and smooth off his forehead. An uneasy premonition smote her that she was about to make a fool of herself over this man.

"Don't you agree with me?" asked Mrs. Locke suddenly.

"Oh, my, yes," said the reporter, wondering what the woman had been talking about. The reformer's little red-brown eyes were on her suspiciously.

"Why don't you fight fire with fire?" struggled the reporter, improvising as she went. "Start a counter whispering campaign against Peter Hinman. Give him a purple past and a purpler present. Make it hot for him."

Mrs. Locke dropped into an over-plushed chair and sat in deep thought for a minute or two. Two little flames were flickering in her eyes as she turned to the girl.

"Will you help me?" she asked.

"Of course!" agreed the Youngest Reporter enthusiastically. If she had known what she was letting herself in for!

"We'll do this," began Mrs. Locke, her fat cheeks purpling with excitement as she laid her scheme. There was to be a joint rally of both parties in the city hall that night. Mrs. Locke and Peter Hinman would be on the stage with all their satellites. The hall would be filled. At the psychological moment, the Youngest Reporter, besmeared with powder, rouge, lipstick and bedizened with a loud dress and earrings, would come screaming down the aisle and call upon Peter Hinman not to forsake her. She would moan that she was dying and poverty-stricken, that he must remember their love and not leave her to die in the gutter alone. The city of Mechanicsville would see, hear and draw its own conclusions.

"Peter Hinman will be the only man on the stage with a dinner jacket," said Mrs. Locke, "and you'll enter just as he gets up to speak."

"It's so melodramatic," protested the reporter weakly. "Suppose I get arrested for disturbing the peace?"

Mrs. Locke took a yellowback from her handbag and thrust it determinedly into the reporter's pocket.

"Oh, no!" she protested, "I can't take this!" But the bill was still in her pocket when she left the room. It made her feel strangely guilty. Criminal.

Feeling thoroughly soaked in sin, she entered the hall that night at 9. Every seat was filled. The flag-draped balcony surged with people. At one end of the hall was a broad stage and on the stage sat a line of solemn-faced Mechanicsville citizens. The reporter picked out the one man in a dinner jacket and fixed her eye on the second button on his waistcoat. She did not quite dare look him in the face.

Down the aisle she charged, the vision of one eye almost obscured by the rakish hat Mrs. Locke had insisted upon. The dangling earrings bit into her lobes. Her tight red dress caught her knees with every step. No more of this Sadie Thompson stuff for her, she thought, as her heart beat thickly in her throat. Never again would she take a dirty job at the crossroads. She was half tempted to cut and run anyway. Then she saw the white waistcoat advance to the centre of the stage and caught the urgency in Mrs. Locke's red-brown eye.

"Here goes!" muttered the reporter, tingling with nervousness, "Cross the ice, Eliza! Do or die!"

"Peter!" she moaned, falling to her knees with a hoarse sob. "Don't desert your little Nellie! I am sick and broke. Don't cast me off to die. Remember our love! Don't you care for me any more, Peter? Peteee . . ."

Her voice broke on a high squealing note, for she had lifted her eyes to the face above the white waistcoat. Peter Hinman was the glorious Apollo of the train! And his face was frozen into angry contemptuous lines. His hands clenched.

With a long loud cry that was neither forced not theatrical, the reporter rushed into the night. She fairly tore back to Mrs. Locke's, pulled off the hideous clothes and changed into her own plain tailored garments. The Boston train was pulling out as she jumped aboard. The one bit of luck in a horrible night!

She wiped little beads of perspiration from her brow as she slumped in her seat. Fumbling for her handkerchief, she drew out the yellowback. She would send it back in the morning. It gave her a horrid, crawly feeling just to touch it. Fumbling again, she brought out the yellow scratch paper with the "Road of the Transgressor" scrawled across it.

"The Road of the Transgressor," she muttered, her point of view clear as crystal, "is harder than nails. Gosh hanged if it isn't!"

Electricity Restores Life

A group of New York engineers described recently before the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, in Pasadena, a method for restoring life to victims of electric shock. Strangely enough the agent used in this method to cause the heart to once again take up its work is another electric shock more powerful than the first. This method which includes artificial respiration both before and after administration of the reviving shock has proved successful in about 60 per cent of the experiments conducted on animals, it was reported. It was also said that while current with intensities of one-tenth ampere may cause the heart to stop, reviving shocks may be as high as 25 amperes.

There Are Three Reasons for Lavish Indulgence in Vegetables

One Need Not Be Urged to Feast Upon Fresh Garden Produce.

Those of us who could and did take a hand at planting the vegetable garden early in the season are now enjoying the results of our labors.

When you have helped to dig the potatoes and helped to pick the young green cabbage, the yellow squash, the tender string beans, the tasselled corn and have had a hand in cooking them, they taste like no other vegetables, of course. What a salad ripe tomatoes, crisp cucumbers, lettuce and chicory with a few sweet onions make! It is not necessary for any one to urge vegetables "because they are good for you" upon you.

While we cannot all of us enjoy vegetables just out of the garden and in such large numbers every day, we can indulge in them lavishly at this season of the year when our markets are full of really fresh products not many hours away from the place of their production. They are reasonable in price and, when well cooked and dressed, are satisfying to the palate as well as an asset to nutrition. The minerals, vitamins and roughage which they provide are most important in a well rounded diet.

Tomato Goulash.

¼ cup salad oil.
2 onions (sliced).
2 green peppers (shredded).
2 cups of corn.
8 tomatoes (cut in eighths).
Salt.
Pepper.

Heat the oil. Add onion and cook until a delicate brown. Add peppers and corn and cook five minutes. Add tomatoes and seasoning and cook until soft.

Vegetable Salad.

1 cup shredded cabbage.
1 sliced cucumber.
1 cup diced beets or
2 sliced tomatoes.
½ cup French dressing.
1 bunch young onions.
1 bunch radishes.

Mix cabbage, cucumber and beets or tomatoes with dressing and let stand in refrigerator a half hour. Before serving garnish with radishes and onions.

Back to the Land For Contentment

A man went to the country to find contentment—and found only more unrest. It is the commonest of mistakes. People seek contentment in other places, not knowing that if they are to find contentment, here or there, they must first have the capacity for it in their own souls. For it is inner and not outer.

Nevertheless, I know well many cases in which men and women, returning to life in country places, simple living, a certain amount of manual labor (not to exhaustion) and, above all, stillness, have been able to reconstruct their lives.—David Grayson in Cosmopolitan.

Hurry is the greatest driving hazard.

Hurry brings on nervous tension, and high speed through congested areas brings on hazards that the average driver cannot cope with.

Speed does not always get you to your destination. Some people have never reached their destination after starting ont on a fast drive. Somewhere in between they had a smashup, and the undertaker called for them and carried them on their journey in a hearse.

Before you tackle excessive speeds, THINK!

School Notes

The classes in high school elected officers on Monday. The Junior officers are: president, Glenn Carlson; vice president, Harlan Knutson; secretary-treasurer, Evelyn Larson; editor, Beatrice Larson.

The Sophomore officers are: president, Lorna Peterson; vice president, Doris Larson; secretary-treasurer, Alton Nelson; reporter, Robert Sandberg.

The Freshmen officers are: president, Milton Hanson, vice president, Adrian Nelson; secretary-treasurer, Marshall Ness; reporter, Audrey Krogen.

It wont be long before the freshmen will be fully initiated into high school. Just a week from today you will witness a sad group of frosh. Skippy and Doris have been elected to see that the verdant ones are made to crawl.

Several of the young folks from this community gathered at the Mrs. Axel Nelson home at Rosewood last Friday evening to celebrate Alton Nelson's birthday anniversary.

Your Creamery

The Creamery, organized and built by the people of this community because they saw the need of co-operative marketing of their farm products, can grow and prosper only in the same proportion as it is patronized by the people of this community. Work and boost for it. The more you patronize it the greater your profits will be. Your creamery is worthy of your most loyal support.

Minnesota Democrats Sold Out

The Democratic candidates for United States Senator and for Governor have withdrawn in favor of the Farmer-Labor candidates for these offices, and the Democratic voters of the State of Minnesota have been sold down the river by a group of conniving politicians. The withdrawel was maliciously held back until thirty minutes before the last legal minute in order that no other Democratic candidate might file. This deal was closed last Wednesday in a room in the Saint Paul Hotel. The room is reported to have been rented by the Farmer-Labor Assistant Attorney General, Roger Rutchick. At the meeting was Leo Crowly, President of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the personal representative of Boss James Farley, Senator Robert M. LaFollette of Wisconsin, Joseph Wolf who Minnesota Democrats repudiated as their National Committeeman, Otto Bremer, the banker-brewer, Abie Harris, the Farmer-Labor press agent, "Injunction John" F. D. Meighen, and the ambassador of Charles Ward, the Farmer-Labor Mexican general. Also present were the candidates, Patrick Delaney and Fred Curtis.

The entire deal is the cheapest political trick in the history of Minnesota politics, and one that would bring blushes to the cheeks of Mr. Farley's predecessor, the late Boss Tweed of Tammany Hall.

What is the purpose of this shameful deal? Is it to destroy the Democratic Party and to hoodwink and throw Minnesota Democrats into a national Farmer-Labor Party looking to the election of a Farmer-Laborite as President in 1940? This can be its only purpose. It will destroy the Democratic Party nationally as a liberal party.

The Democratic Party may not even be on the ballot at the next election. The law requires that a certain percentage of the total vote be cast for Democratic candidates. Without a candidate for Governor or for United States Senator, the Democratic Party in Minnesota stands in grave danger of losing its identity as a party.

Elmer Benson, the Farmer-Labor candidate, is a sincere radical. As George Creek wrote in Colliers (and Benson was so pleased he had it reprinted in the Congressional Record)—"At no point does Senator Benson make any effort to conceal his radicalism. He is a left winger, so far to the left in fact, that even the LaFollettes will have to communicate with him by swift runners and smoke signals." He believes the New Deal has only pecked at problems and is palpably a makeshift. He supports the New Deal only when it furthers Elmer Benson's object and desire of a strong left wing party in 1940, while real Democrats believe the New Deal has gone far enough to the left.

The other candidate is Martin Nelson, the Republican nominee. Mr. Nelson is a liberal. His liberalism is based upon common sense and sound principals.

Democrats cannot support Elmer Benson. He and the leaders of the Farmer-Labor party have sold out the Democrats of Minnesota.

James F. Murphy, Chairman, Democratic Nelson Clubs, Parlor 2 Ryan Hotel, St. Paul, Minn.

D. and Miss Adeline Nubben of Thief River Falls.

School Notes

On Friday afternoon, the green Freshmen staged quite a parade with their fish pails and hooks, Adrian and the baby carriage and their green M T's.

With the males donned in feminine apparel and the females in overalls, the verdant Frosh entered the weird looking schoolhouse to the tune of a siren, on Friday evening, welcomed by the ghosts of the Freshmen who had nied in previous initiations.

Milton was particularly striking, donned in furs and attractive hat. To add to his girlish attire, he had all the powder, rouge and lipstick of any Parisian model.

After being branded into their Freshmen career amid screams and dismal pleadings (especially from Adrian) they were requested to remove their shoes and stockings.

After approximately a half hour of enjoyment, they were led through the entire building and ended up in a bed of snakes. (liver and ice.)

The next request was to adjourn to the auditorium where they rolled an onion with their noses.

Each Freshman entertained the upperclassmen and teachers with some small act of humor.

Games were played and a delicious refreshment were served.

At about 11:00 o'clock the gang left for home(?) The initiation of 1936 was over with a happy time from beginning to end.

The General Business class is studying means of communication. Aren't we soon through with them?

The Freshmen wonder how many caps they'll have to make during the next two weeks.

The American History Class have the American Revolution as project work.

The English 3 class had debates last week.

NOTICE

Dumb Animals Once Were Liable to Prosecution

Trial for Crimes Common Centuries Ago.

Washington, D. C.—"Woof, woof," was all the prisoner could say for himself in a recent sensational trial. For the prisoner was a dog.

"The trial of animals for murder and mayhem was fairly common several centuries ago," says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic society. "Primitive civilizations assumed that animals were man's equals in intelligence and moral responsibility, and held them equally liable before the law. Today it is more usual to file suits against owners instead of their animal property.

"European countries have a centuries-long record of hailing animals into court. Rumor has it that storks were brought to punishment in 666. In the Fifteenth century especially, prosecutions by the score were brought against rats, insects, and domestic animals.

"It was in France, Switzerland and Germany that beasts most frequently locked horns with the law, and occasionally in Italy and Belgium. History tells of trials also in Spain, Russia, Denmark, England, and Scotland. Even at that, is is doubtful whether history tells all.

Murder Usual Charge.

"Murder was the usual charge. Pigs figured prominently among the dumb criminals, no doubt because they mingled with their human neighbors in streets and peasant homes with little restriction.

"Domestic animals were booked for charges before civil courts like human offenders, but wild animals were committed to the judicial branch of the church. Ecclesiastical courts handled suits even against snails, snakes, caterpillars, horseflies, grasshoppers, dolphins, locusts, eels, and most frequently, rats. The accused, being dumb, would be assigned a glib human advocate, would have charges read loudly before their haunts or holes, and were usually punished with anathema and banishment.

"This procedure was followed in the new world with a Canadian suit against turtledoves.

"Murder was not the sole crime which brought beasts before the bar. Domestic animals in the house where crime had been committed were condemned as accessories and executed in accordance with an old South German law. Oxen could be killed in early Rome for serving a farmer in plowing up a boundary marker. Certain ants were convicted, two centuries ago in Brazil, of undermining the cellars of a monastery and stealing flour. In Basel, Switzerland, in 1474, an aged rooster was solemnly tried and burned at the stake for laying an egg.

"A dog found guilty of biting without first barking a warning was to be punished as for willful murder, according to an ancient Persian law.

"Beasts in the jungles of law meet various fates. Most, when condemned to pay the extreme penalty, have been hanged on special gallows, hanged by the hind legs to a bent tree, or ceremoniously knocked in the head. Some were buried alive, some burned alive, others singed alive and mercifully throttled before being burned. Their legal prosecution has been known to include torture on the rack, although no confessions were forthcoming.

"Whatever may be an animal's legal end, great care has been taken to guarantee due process of law in reaching it. Appeals and new trials were granted to condemned brutes.

"Either codified law or primitive tribal law has passed judgment on nearly everything on Noah's passenger list.

"The United States has given dumb brutes the right of trial. Puritan New England took legal toll of the animal kingdom to the extent of eight in New Haven and two in Salem, the latter being dogs hanged for witchcraft. Elephants have been formally sentenced to be shot for slaying their keepers. One was acquitted when circus employees testified to its sweet disposition. Once, however, when a circus elephant ran murderously amuck among spectators, the keeper and not the beast was tried for second degree manslaughter."

FORMOSA GOVERNOR

Admiral Saizo Kobayashi of the Imperial Japanese navy whose appointment as governor general of Formosa was announced in Tokyo. Formosa is an important link between Japan and the South Sea islands, and it has been decided, according to reports, to have it always under the governorship of a high navy official.

Wheat From Field to Table in One Day

Owosso, Mich. — W. F. Alexander, Rush township farmer, believes he set a record when he ate wheat for supper that had been growing in the morning. He harvested his wheat in the morning with a combine which cuts and threshes in a single operation; ground some of the wheat in the afternoon and his wife made wheat gems for supper.

'36 Urban Home Building Already Leads '35 Total

Washington.—Construction of city homes in the United States in the first seven months of 1936 already exceeds the entire volume of urban home building for 1935, according to the forthcoming September issue of "The Federal Home Loan Bank Review." The report is based on building permit reports from all cities of 10,000 or more population, compiled by the bureau of labor statistics.

The volume of residential building activity, already at its highest point in June since 1929, rose still further in July to 37.9 per cent of the 19.6 index level. The number of dwellings authorized in July was 158.4 per cent greater than in July, 1935. Total cost of this construction exceeded the 1935 total by 182.3 per cent.

While smaller homes of the one and two-family class continued to predominate, representing 51 per cent of the total number of July permits, the 49 per cent of multi-family homes is the highest figure for this type of dwelling recorded in recent years. The latter class of home led all other residential building in New York, Massachusetts, Ohio, Illinois, South Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee and Oklahoma.

As in June, New York remained far in the lead in the number of dwellings authorized during July. California continued in second place, followed by Ohio, Massachusetts and Illinois in that order.

Drouth-Proof Farms by Practical Use of Power

Chicago. — "Drouth-proof farms" can be made a practical reality in the future by the harnessing of cheaply generated diesel power to pump water to parched areas, according to Ralph Hemphill, president of a system of diesel schools in an address here before a conference of engineers.

Mr. Hemphill urged the adoption by the federal government of a program to finance the purchase by farmers in the "dust bowl" of small diesel engine units and the installation of adequate wells and pumping facilities.

"The tragedy of drouth is not lack of water, but lack of the means of obtaining it," he said. "Water flows underground. It passes farmsteads in streams and creeks, yet crops perish. At a cost of but a few cents per acre, a diesel engine can provide water for sections of stricken farms.

"By this means complete loss of crops can be obviated and the average farmer can be enabled to raise at least enough to feed himself and family and provide fodder for his stock."

JAVITS HAS A PLAN

Benjamin A. Javits, New York lawyer-economist, co-author of NRA and representative of many important trade groups, has drafted a substitute plan for NRA that will be the basis of a broad movement to remedy many industrial, agricultural and social ailments. The plan is described in a book by Mr. Javits, "The Commonwealth of Industry," that has been studied by many important national leaders.

Heiress to Millions Likes to Work

Wilna Splivalo, San Francisco, Calif., 21-year-old heiress to several millions of dollars, shown at work as a sculptress in a Hollywood movie studio. Miss Splivalo, daughter of the late Adrian W. Splivalo, grain and shipping magnate, gave up society life three years ago and studied painting and sculpture in Paris.

Parental Guidance—

◆ Don't Expect a Child to Grasp Ideas Mother Finds Difficult to Understand

THERE is such a thing as expecting too much of your children. This does not mean that a child should be excused for disobedience, provided, of course, rules. Nor does it apply to impertinence, nor any of the regulations for the kindly development that it is clear in the child's mind that his or her action is against and up-bringing of a child.

However, the demands of child study sometimes make mothers expect as much of a child as would be expected of an adult. And, should their youngsters fail to come up to the standard set for them, mothers especially get a distressed apprehension that their beloved offspring are not quite up to normal mentally, although they may be in robust health. To have such fears is a serious matter for parents, and the reaction of such thoughts on a child is detrimental. Individuality in children is pronounced, and all children do not respond in like manner to suggestions, many of which are accepted by the parents themselves, only after much child study.

It is a mistake to attempt to force ideas, too deep for it, into a child's mind, or to probe it with a dessecting scrutiny that embarrasses or offends the child. It is an inherent right of childhood to think its own thoughts, and see with its own mind just as much as it is an adult privilege to do these things.

To guide children with love that is strong enough to be reasonably lenient and reasonably strict in dealing out deserved punishments, not severe but corrective—this is expected of parents. Fortunately there is intuition to aid them, and the intent to fit their offspring to cope with the world in a conquering way.

It must be realized that the theory and practice of bringing up children are as widely divergent as these two things are in every field. There is ever a happy medium, a balanced combination of the two that must prevail for the best results. There is no substitute for fine practical experience. Theory must be swayed by parental experience in the upbringing of children for it to be an aid in the building of their characters.

FOR PERFORMANCE and ECONOMY

Firestone GROUND GRIP TIRES

SAVE time and money and get greater efficiency by equipping the rear of your car and truck with a pair of Firestone Ground Grip Tires. They will give you the super-traction needed to pull through mud and unimproved roads and will save you the time, trouble and money of applying chains.

Harvey S. Firestone was born and raised on a farm in Columbiana County, Ohio, which he has operated ever since 1904. It was here on this farm that Mr. Firestone conceived the idea and worked with his tire engineers in developing a practical tire for farm use. Mr. Firestone's experience in farming gave him the realization of the need for a pneumatic tire with lugs of rubber that would increase the drawbar pull, roll easier, save time, and speed up farm operations on cars, trucks, tractors and all wheeled farm implements.

Firestone engineers are continually working with Mr. Firestone on his farm to secure greater farm efficiency. They developed the Ground Grip Tire which is so designed that in soft mud roads it cleans itself and the bars of rubber are so placed that they will not bump on paved roads. The design of this tire is so unusual and its performance so amazing that a patent has been granted by the United States Patent Office covering its exclusive features. The secret of the extra traction of Firestone Ground Grip Tires is the scientifically designed rubber lug of the tread. Under this extraordinary super-traction tread are placed two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords. This is a patented Firestone construction feature which makes it possible to weld this heavy tread to the Gum-Dipped cord body, making it one inseparable unit.

Go to your nearest Firestone Tire Dealer or Implement Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store today and ask to see these money-saving tires. And when you order a new tractor or implement, specify Firestone Ground Grip Tires.

WOULD YOU SAY LIFE OR DEATH?

Whole Nation Pondered the Problem of Baby Julian Tafel, Born With Malformation Which Might Cause Life of Suffering.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

WHAT would you do? If your baby was born with a malformation of his little "insides" which would doom him to possible lifelong invalidism if an operation saved his life, what would you tell the doctor? To operate? Or to let the baby die a "merciful" death?

That is the mortal dilemma that faced twenty-four-year-old Julian R. Tafel of Chicago and his pretty young wife.

Julian R. Tafel, Jr., is dead now. His span of life here on this earth was only five days. But in those five days Baby Julian received more attention than most people ever do in an entire lifetime.

He was born September 17 in the Danish-American hospital in Chicago. He seemed normal enough at first. Indeed he was a beautiful baby. His mother said, "Have you seen my baby? Isn't he lovely?"

But it was not long until it was known that tiny Julian was not the perfect child he appeared. Part of his colon, the last stage of the intestinal tract, was missing. Without this channel for elimination he was bound to die.

Mother and Father Disagree.

Dr. Lewis K. Eastman, proprietor of the hospital, wanted to operate on the baby, to form an artificial opening. He said there was a "50-50" chance of recovery. It was probable that the child would have to have several more operations later.

Mrs. Eva Tafel, the mother said:

"I am the mother of the baby and I want him to live. He must not be allowed to die. That would not be right. Medical science is progressing yearly, and in time my boy could be made completely normal. I'm sure of that."

Julian Tafel, Sr., said:

"I am the father of the baby and I think it would be unfair to let him live. He would be a hopeless invalid and some day he would hate us . . . his mother and father . . . for giving him that horrible chance."

Dr. Eastman said:

"I am the doctor in charge of the case and I think an operation should be performed. That is my personal as well as professional feeling. The baby may die, anyway, but the off chance must not be overlooked."

Age-Old Problem.

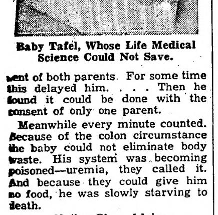
Here was a problem as old as the Biblical story of King Solomon and the two women, each of whom claimed to be the mother of the same child. Dr. Isaac Abt, noted child specialist, admitted that it would take a Solomon to decide the Tafel case justly. He said:

"Whether Baby Tafel should live or die is not for me to say. It is a question that would require the wisdom of Solomon to answer.

"The parents seem to be the only ones who can give the answer, since under the law they must agree to the operation before it is performed."

That was one of the problems facing Dr. Eastman. Counsel at first told him that the operation could not be made without the consent of both parents. For some time this delayed him. . . . Then he found it could be done with the consent of only one parent.



Baby Tafel, Whose Life Medical Science Could Not Save.

Meanwhile every minute counted. Because of the colon circumstance the baby could not eliminate body waste. His system was becoming poisoned—uremia, they called it. And because they could give him no food, he was slowly starving to death.

Nation Gives Advice.

The operation would provide the outlet needed. An incision in the side would be made to the large intestine, and a drain would be installed which would protrude over the hip.

Meanwhile medical and sociological experts throughout the country were sought for advise. Their comments were eagerly awaited and are still food for thought.

For instance there was Anton J. Carlson, noted physiologist of the University of Chicago. He said: "I think society should change its attitude toward the incurable. If he faces a life of suffering he should have the privilege of disposing of himself."

Dr. Joseph B. De Lee, chief consultant of the Lying-In, Chicago maternity hospital, had a suggestion to make:

"Legal, moral and religious issues enter, but primarily the question of medical profession ethics interests me. A doctor's duty is to save life. It is our rule, our job. A doctor must invariably recommend that lives he saved.

"Lawyers must decide the legal question, ministers and sociologists the religious and moral ones. I recommend that there should be a committee to decide such matters as this."

Dr. Dafoe's Philosophy.

Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe, the kindly little Canadian who miraculously brought the Dionne quintuplets into healthy life, had been known to say, not long ago:

Julian Tafel and His Wife Console Each Other After the Loss of Their Child.

"I don't think any doctor has the right to destroy life. We can never be sure we can't get a life back, and often we can make life easier."

Dr. Noble Sprout Heaney, chief obstetrician at another large hospital, agreed:

"The child ought to be given a chance to live. A competent surgeon should proceed to operate with the benefits of our present knowledge.

"In surgery no one knows what progress will be made in our knowledge within a very few years. And the mother in this case is right when she says that everything that can be done now should be done.

"There may be things remediable in the future that this child can benefit by if his life is saved now."

Dr. John E. Jennings, chairman of the press reference bureau, Kings County (N. Y.) Medical society, declared: "No one is able to decide the value of an hour's life to any human being."

What a Cardinal Thought.

Dr. Hugh S. Cummings, surgeon-general of the United States public health service, said: "Human beings, subject to error, may make mistakes in diagnosis or judgment which death would make irreparable. Such a power would give an advantage to the unscrupulous who wished to do away with an individual for their own gain."

The Roman Catholic attitude to such a case as that of Baby Tafel had been outlined by William Cardinal O'Connell, archbishop of Boston, during an earlier discussion:

"The doctor is called into the sickroom to restore health and not take away life. Under no circumstances should he do other than attempt to bring health back to his patient.

"God is the creator of life. He gives life and He alone has the power to take it. Suffering is the discipline of humanity."

The Tafel case recalled a statement of Lord Moynihan, famed British surgeon. He is leader of the Voluntary Euthanasia society. This was formed to legalize euthanasia, which is voluntary death at a patient's own behest. He said:

Cripples Get More Attention.

"It is our moral as well as our ethical duty to keep every patient alive so long as ever we can. And every humane person must naturally suppose that it is a bounden obligation upon us to relieve suffering wherever we can. But if we cannot cure disease then we want to relieve its manifestations. Our object is to bring about voluntary euthanasia. There is nothing compulsory about our proposal.

"We want a patient to be able to say to a competent legal authority that he desires release.

"We propose that there should be several interests working in concord, namely, the patient, the law and the doctors.

"It is a curious trait in human nature that if a child is a cripple, an invalid or deformed, that child receives far more devotion and attention than a normal child. We would not desire to interfere in such cases. But if the child is born an idiot and there is not the slightest chance of recovery, then the question might be considered."

Dr. Louis Moorhead, dean of the Loyola university (Chicago) medical school, opposes euthanasia, and declares:

"No individual has the right to end his own life, since he has no jurisdiction over it. It is the generally accepted practice of the medical profession to preserve life as long as possible."

Mrs. Tafel had no difficulty in making up her mind.

"I want him," she said. "I have had one normal baby. I could have others. That doesn't make any difference. This baby's here. He should be helped."

"He Would Curse Us."

But the baby's father didn't think so. It was the first disagreement on a major issue between the couple since they were married in 1933.

"He would curse us for letting him live under this handicap," said Julian Tafel, Sr.

But the mother argued, "Who knows what science will be able to do in another five years — if we only can keep the baby alive now?"

In this Dr. Eastman backed her up, saying, "Surgeons know more now than they did five years ago. If we operate on the baby now, and he lives, we may be able to do more for him later and the world will be better off for this experience."

Mrs. Tafel was upheld by another mother, Mrs. Harold Lefler, twenty-eight, of Congress Park, Ill. Her four-year-old son, Dickie, survived an operation similar to that eventually performed upon Baby Julian. He has had five operations in all, and others may have to follow. From infancy until this spring he carried an incision in his side. But his mother said:

"I'd rather have Dickie than a million normal children. His father and I have been well recompensed for whatever anxiety he has caused us."

Hundreds of Successful Operations.

Another mother, Mrs. Pilar Abrairia, of Chicago, told a similar story.

"The condition of the baby born to me," she said, "was just like that of Mrs. Tafel's baby. It had no rectal opening. The doctor performed a successful operation to correct the condition. My boy would have been normal if he hadn't died later of a heart attack."

Hundreds of operations on babies having malformations similar to that of the Tafel baby have been successful, said Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

"One out of 5,000 babies is so malformed," he said. "The first case on record occurred in the Seventh century and an operation performed by Paulus was successful.

"Whether the operation succeeds or fails depends largely upon the extent of the surgery. If the intestines are near the point where the incision is made the operation is easy; if they are a foot away the operation is more dangerous."

SYNOPSIS

Kezia Marsh, pretty, selfish and twenty, arrives home in Corinth from school and is met by her older brother, Hugh. He drives her to the Marsh home where her widowed mother, Fluvanna, a warm-hearted, self-sacrificing and understanding soul, welcomes her. Kezia's sister, Margery, plump and matronly with the care of three children, is at lunch with them. Hugh's wife, Dorrie, has pleaded a previous engagement. On the way back to his job at the steel plant founded by one of his forebears, Hugh passes Doc Hiller, a boyhood friend whom he no longer sees frequently because of Dorrie's antipathy. Fluvanna Marsh wakens the next morning from a dream about her late husband, Jim, whose unstable character she fears Kezia has inherited. Soon Ellen Pendleton comes over. She is an artistically inclined girl who is a distant niece of Fluvanna's and a favorite of Hugh's. She happily tells Fluvanna she has become engaged to Jerry Purdue.

CHAPTER I—Continued

—3—

"I'm telling you first, before anyone," the girl went on. "I can tell you things, Fluvanna—you understand. I'm exquisitely—divinely happy! . . . Why, Jerry——" she shook her head, murmured: "It's beyond words—the feeling. I never thought anything so nice would happen to me!"

"All nice things should happen to you, Ellen!"

"I wish Mother were as easy to tell things to as you, Fluvanna." She gave a rueful smile. "She won't be pleased—nor Father. It will be hard—that part—the telling them. Perhaps I'll wait a while."

Fluvanna called up the stairway. "Ellen is here. Hurry down, Kezia."

Ellen returned with the flowers arranged in vases. "I mustn't stay for breakfast. I went out early painting in the ravine and left word that I'd be back by breakfast time. She'll worry. I'll stay until I see Kezzie. Nice to have her home, isn't it? Not so lonely for you."

Fluvanna nodded. "Very nice. And I'd have been much lonelier if a certain person hadn't been very kind about coming often."

"I? . . . Pouff! I loved coming . . . you're just fascinating to me. I never get tired of being with you—perhaps fascinating isn't the word." She sat down on the davenport beside Fluvanna. "I told Jerry I could tune in with you. He understood. He understands everything."

Fluvanna patted her hand.

"So all this happiness came to you last night? May I tell Kezia?"

Ellen laughed. "I don't mind. And Hugh—do tell Hugh. He's an understanding sort of person, my favorite cousin among hundreds!"

The older woman knew she was getting pleasure out of her naive confession so she encouraged her. "You met Jerry in April?"

"Oh, no—last fall. I've seen something of him for a long time. He would come—then stay away. You see, he thought his family would matter. His father is a roller in the mill and his uncle runs a cigar store. He said he couldn't bring them to meet us and all the relations—you and the Renshaws, the Woods, the Moffats, the Debarrys—we are an awful crowd, you know. Not that he's ashamed of his people! He says they are plain, nice people, saved to send him to school in the East . . . he's very proud of them . . . just thought it wouldn't do."

"Afraid to let himself go because your father has money?"

Ellen nodded, then said in a low voice: "I told Jerry that the fact that he loved me meant everything—more than money, more than family. It seems to me that when two people love each other, they give the most priceless possession—something greater than anything in the world."

Fluvanna kissed her impulsively. "You are a sweet child—and a very wise one."

A silence, then Ellen rose. "I must be going."

"Wait. Kezia will be down in a moment. She asked me to call her early because she's playing tennis." She went to the stairway. "Coming, Kezia? . . . Ellen is in a hurry."

She heard Kezia murmur to herself before she replied: "A few minutes."

In a little while Anna announced that breakfast was getting cold. Ellen started toward the door, the rainbow expression of her face faintly clouded. "I really must be running along. Tell Kezia I'm sorry—some other time!"

She had scarcely started her car in the street and moved off, when Kezia came downstairs. Her arms stole around Fluvanna's neck. "Alma Mater," she murmured caressingly. Then she said with silky vindictiveness: "What was Ellen after at this hour in the morning—a worm?"

"Kezia!"

"I know—wanted to see what I was doing today and make plans! She doesn't need to think I intend to go around with her all the time."

Fluvanna took a drink of coffee. "Why do you think such unpleasant things? You played together a great deal when you were small. Wouldn't it be just as easy to think she was fond of you, wanted to welcome you home?"

Kezia sulked for a minute.

Then she broke a piece of toast, crumbled it thoughtfully. "I suppose I might have come down."

Her mother smiled as she saw victory in sight. Kezia was ashamed of her action, but had had to defend it.

"She has a tough time at home. No wonder she comes here so much. Cousin Gavin is too nervous to allow the radio to be played when he's in the house, and her mother, pretentious and calculating, nagging the life out of her—what a mother!" shuddered Kezia. "I have no reason to be envious of Ellen. If a man goes romantic over her—they think of Lizzie for a mother-in-law—then it's good-bye Ellen!"

She sat there, her eyes dreamy and misted. "I'm so mean," she faltered, "and you're so good to me! Oh, Mother, how do you put up with me?"

Fluvanna was moved, as she always was when Kezia was penitent and misty-eyed, even though she knew it did not hinder her from doing the same thng over again directly. The girl rose in a sudden whirlwind and came around to her chair, laid her cheek against hers. "I know I'm horrid!"

Charming, emotional and impulsive—like Jim. Her heart plunged with misgiving for Kezia, a vague anxiety. She caressed her automatically.

Kezia went back to her chair.

"Be nice to her when she comes again—or, better still, telephone her."

"I will," Kezia nodded between bites. "I'll telephone her this noon. Pete told me about this Purdue she has been going with—very smooth looking—like Ronald Colman. They're all betting it won't last a month!"

"I wouldn't be too sure."

Kezia looked up quickly. "H-m-mm, have you a scoop?—she tell you anything?"

"Not for the public yet. So keep it secret."

"No?" Kezia's brows went up. "Well, is that a headline! Ellen put it over! Cheers for Ellen!"

Kezia rose from the table. "I'll breeze around there after I get through playing tennis and ask her to bring him over some night soon." She dropped a kiss on her mother's hair. "I'll tell her that while I'm immured in the halls of learning, she grabs off the best looking man in town!"

CHAPTER II

The back yard lawn of the Hugh Marshes was veiled in the translucent light which comes just before darkness. The west was a faint saffron streaked with mauve; birds talked in sleepy twitterings; a wood dove cooed in a willow.

Dorrie reclined on a wicker chaise longue and Hugh sat near her smoking a pipe. Hugh's eyes were on the arabesque pattern of the trumpet vine.

Dorrie allowed the evening paper to drift to the ground. "Hugh, I'm constitutionally lazy."

"M-mm."

"Aren't you interested? Did you hear what I said?"

"That you are lazy? Yes, I heard. I don't know what we can do about it."

She shrugged and a curling smile that he never liked to see crept around her mouth.

"It means nothing that you have a lazy wife?"

"You make pretty things for the house—curtains, cushions. Your clothes—you spend a lot of time sewing."

"But that's what I like to do! I mean I'm lazy because I don't do the things I ought to—but don't want to! You see there's a distinction."

"I'm not complaining."

His mind slipped away to the plant. If they landed the Cincinnati order and the one from Dayton it would keep them running all through June, when there would be a natural recession. They hadn't done badly for a small plant, considering conditions.

"You're not thinking about me!" said Dorrie sharply.

"Who else?" He knocked the ashes out of his pipe. "If I think about the business, it's for you, isn't it?"

"I'm trying to make a confession, but you won't listen."

"I should have your family here once in a while. We're always being invited to your relatives'. It's one of the things I ought to do, but don't want to."

"You mean you don't care for my family?"

"I don't care for many people, do I?" she tossed back, smiling.

"No; but I thought you and Mother——"

"I'm fond of your mother. She has an extraordinary effect on me. Makes me feel good inside and out—like a steam bath and a soothing oil rub by a Swedish masseur."

"Gosh, Dorrie!"

"Margery, since she has those children, doesn't talk my language. I can't get passionate over croup and adenoids and spinach, can I? But Kezia has a streak of wickedness I understand. Fun to watch her maneuver her own purposes."

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

JERRY MEETS WITH AN ACCIDENT

IF JERRY MUSKRAT had not still been suspicious of Farmer Brown's Boy the accident might not have happened. Then again it might, if not at that particular time at some other and less fortunate time. Anyway, it happened, and Jerry will not soon forget it.

He was a little way up the Laughing Brook that morning when he heard some one coming down the Laughing Brook. By the sound he knew that it was one of those two-legged human creatures and at once Jerry started pell-mell back toward the Smiling Pool.

Jerry's First Though' Was That He Had Stepped Into Another of Those Dreadful Traps.

Now the water in the Laughing Brook was low. In many places it was too low for swimming, so Jerry ran along the shore just under the edge of the bank. There were many roots of trees and bushes from which the water had washed away the earth, and they crossed and recrossed each other. Sometimes Jerry ran under them and sometimes he jumped over them, whichever seemed easiest and best.

Now Jerry was in such a hurry to get back to the Smiling Pool that he didn't watch his steps as he should have. Perhaps it was because at the same time he was trying to watch behind him to see who it was that was coming. Anyway, in jumping over some of those tangled roots he didn't jump quite far enough and one hind foot slipped down between them. It went in easy enough, but when Jerry tried to pull it out it didn't come. It was held fast. You see his weight had forced two roots apart just enough to allow his leg to slip down between, and now they pinched it tight.

Jerry's first thought was that he had stepped in another of those dreadful traps. He hadn't a doubt of it. He was quite frantic with fear, and he tugged and wrenched with all his might. It was a wonder that he didn't break his leg. But the more he struggled the tighter he was held. You see, that leg began to swell at once where it was caught, and, of course, the more it swelled the more impossible it was to get it free.

Poor Jerry! Hope died as he heard the footsteps coming nearer and nearer. He twisted around so as to get a good look at the trap, and when he discovered that it wasn't a trap at all that held him he could hardly believe his eyes. The discovery would have been a great relief had it not been for those footsteps coming nearer and nearer.

"If I had time I could gnaw those roots off," thought Jerry as he wrenched and twisted and pulled. But there wasn't time, and so he continued to struggle, hoping to get free before he should be discovered.

LUNCHEON DISHES

Casserole of Noodles and Tuna Fish.

Take two cupfuls of uncooked noodles, one pound can of tuna fish, one-fourth cupful of chopped pimiento, two cupfuls of drained, canned peas, two cupfuls of thin white sauce and buttered crumbs. Cook the noodles until tender in three quarts of boiling water to which one tablespoonful of salt has been added. Drain and place a layer of noodles in the bottom of a buttered baking dish, then a layer of fish, pimiento and peas. Season well and repeat until all the ingredients are used. Pour over the white sauce and top with a thick layer of buttered crumbs. Bake until brown.

Chicken Pie Supreme.

Cut up a cooked chicken and arrange in a large casserole in layers with uncooked rice, add small onions, broken mushrooms and a few peas. Dot each layer with butter, using two layers of chicken. Pour over well-seasoned chicken broth, season well, cover and cook until the rice is done. Uncover and place very small baking powder biscuits over the top or well-browned croutons.

Orange Tapioca.

Take four tablespoonfuls of quick cooking tapioca, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one and one-third cupfuls of boiling water and cook in a double boiler for 15 minutes, or until the tapioca is transparent, stirring frequently. Add one-half cupful of sugar, and when well mixed a cupful of orange juice and the grated rind of half an orange. Stir until cool. When cool fold in one-half cupful of whipped cream. Pile in sherbet glasses and serve.

Spanish Sandwich.

Chop enough green pepper and onion to make two tablespoonfuls each. Cook until a light brown, in one tablespoonful of butter. Add a cupful of thick tomato pulp and simmer five minutes. Stir in one cupful of soft grated cheese, one-half teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of paprika and one well-beaten egg. Cook just a moment and serve spread on finely buttered toast—cover with another slice.

Every year the Hicks family of Detroit goes on a sort of aerial junket, and this season was no exception. Fred Hicks, a restaurant owner, Mrs. Hicks and the ten Hicks kids chartered a big transport plane, flew to Cleveland, circled the city a few times, and then returned, satisfied for another year. It all started in 1927 when one of the little Hickses promoted himself an airplane ride. Hicks, Sr., decided to take the whole family, and they liked it so well they've been doing it every year since.

I'll Pay My Way

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I'LL pay my way along life's road,
However heavy is the load
I'll pay my way for what I find,
With kindness try to pay the kind,
I'll pay my way to ev'ry child
That ever looked at me and smiled,
I'll pay my way—not take men's aid
And go my way, my debt unpaid.

I'll pay my way, pay God above
For His, by giving others love,
I'll pay my way, for ev'ry tear
That sorrow sheds give someone cheer,
I'll pay my way, not walk alone,
My lamp unlit, my light unshown,
I'll pay my way—and, if forgot,
I'll pay my way if blest or not.

RICE FORCED TO SIDES

THE HINDU RICE MYSTERY

HERE is a trick in which the magician duplicates one of the celebrated mysteries of the Hindu fakirs. A small bowl, a bag of rice and a table knife are the items used.

The magician fills the bowl with rice. He takes the knife, thrusts its blade deep into the rice grains; then raises the knife by the handle.

In uncanny fashion, the bowl of rice comes up with the knife blade and remains suspended until the magician grips the bowl with his left hand and removes the knife with his right.

The whole secret lies in the shape of the bowl. It must be of a type which bulges at the sides with a narrow mouth. In this type of bowl, the knife forces rice to the sides and the tight grains cause sufficient pressure to raise bowl and all when the knife is lifted.

GET TRACE OF RACE OLDER THAN MAYANS

Football Credited With Find in Central America.

Washington. — The American game of football is credited by scientists of the Carnegie Institution of Washington for the discovery of one of the most important archaeological sites of Central America.

Dr. A. V. Kidder, head of the institution's division of historical research, reported that a group of mounds which promise to provide a link between the pre-historic Maya Indians and those who met the Spaniards in 1542 were uncovered by a group of schoolboys of Guatemala City.

In attempting to lay out a football field just outside the city, the boys were forced to dig into two of the mounds which dot the area. Until then the mounds had been believed to consist only of earth, but the digging revealed ancient masonry covered with fine white stucco.

Carnegie Institution archaeologists, headed by Dr. Kidder, were called in, and before the onset of the rainy season, they had found four pyramidal buildings, one within another, containing four tombs of ancient priests or chiefs, in which were discovered human skeletons, jewelry and other ornaments, cooking utensils and war weapons of the ancient Indians.

Attained High Culture.

Dr. Kidder said that the people represented by these artifacts were believed to have laid the foundations for the late Mayan and other cultures which reached a high stage of civilization long before the coming of the Spaniards.

Excavations to date, Dr. Kidder said, had shown that the area, now known as "Kaminaljuyu," or "Hills of the Dead," was "very much more important archeologically than had previously been thought, for it is now clear that it was occupied during a far longer period than had been considered probable."

"Hitherto the area was valued chiefly because it produced objects of the so-called 'archaic' type, a type to which have been assigned similar products from the Valley of Mexico, from San Salvador, and from the lowest levels of Uaxactun," he explained.

"Objects of this type, such as human effigies of clay and pottery vessels having certain designated characteristics, are thought to have been the work of primitive agricultural peoples who are believed to have occupied the Middle American highlands well before the opening of the Christian era, and whose culture, it is generally supposed, gave rise to that of the Maya, the Toltec and the other higher civilizations of the region."

Finds Very Important

The high culture, expressed in fine carving and weaving and skillful use of tools and implements of war as well as finely organized system of government, which the Spaniards found flourishing among the Mayans, was obviously the result of a "long line of developmental stages, reaching back into the far-distant past," Dr. Kidder said.

"It is these sequent stages in the rise or the great Maya race that archaeologists are seeking to establish," he added.

"Inasmuch as it is possible that the solution is to be found in the Kaminaljuyu ruins, it is understandable why the results of the season's work have suddenly elevated the area into position of first importance."

Flight Around World in Two Days Now Foreseen

Johannesburg. — Predictions that it would be possible for an airplane to fly from Croydon to Cape Town in one day at a speed of 500 miles an hour, and to go around the world in two days, were made by Selig Brodetsky, professor of applied mathematics at Leeds university, England, in an address at Rand university here.

Brodetsky, an authority on aeronautics, said proper organization and night flying would be essential to a flight around the world in two days. He alluded to the possibility of following the sun so as to have permanent day in certain latitudes.

In the future, he said, it would be possible to fly from England to the Cape of Good Hope in a day at 500 miles an hour.

A speed of 400 miles an hour had been reached in the Schneider cup race, he pointed out. The obstacle in the way of increasing airplane speeds indefinitely, he said, was that the span of the wings had to remain finite. The greatest speed it seemed possible to achieve, unless something fundamental were changed, was something about 500 miles an hour.

Paris to Promote Atlantic Air Race

Paris.—The air ministry has decided to promote a blue ribbon air race from New York to Paris, open to fliers of the world, in commemoration of the tenth anniversary next year of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh's New York-to-Paris solo flight.

Prince George Bibesco, president of the International Aeronautic federation, accepted the task of organizing the race.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

Scarlet Countenance: A gentleman whose acquaintance is vast and who prides himself on never forgetting a face, stood at the curb while his wife went into a bakery establishment to make some purchases for the family dinner. After waiting what seemed to him an eternity, he followed her inside. The store was doing an excellent business and the entire counter was lined with women each intent on getting service from the harassed sales force. Surveying the line and picking out his wife, the gentleman stole softly up behind her and with a playful spank, whispered, "Don't spend all your money, dear." Whereupon the lady turned and revealed a face he had never seen before. And in his hasty retreat, whom should he meet only a few feet away but a lady who glared at him with all storm signals set. That was his wife of course, and she, having witnessed the whole proceeding, is still mentioning it on the most embarrassing occasions.

Signs of the Times: Quite often in trips here and there underground, I've noticed persons conversing with their fingers. It struck me that New York has an extraordinarily large population of mutes so, by means of pencil and paper, I took the matter up with a speechless friend. He informed me that many of those whom I saw communicating by signals in the subway were not using the official sign language but were merely saving wear and tear on their voices by using their hands and thus making themselves understood over the rattle and roar of the trains. Also some who use the real language have all their faculties and use the signs of mutes to communicate confidential matters when among others. Some beggars who pretend to be deaf and dumb learn the signs as a matter of self-protection. Alert cops are quick to detect fake signs and the fakers go to the workhouse.

• • •

Changing of the Guard: The other afternoon in the lobby of the Waldorf-Astoria, two full platoons of page and bell boys appeared from nowhere, marched along with the precision of Roxy ushers, wheeled, saluted, fell out and took up posts in various nooks and corners. Inquiry developed the fact that the ceremony is a regular thing occurring daily at 7 a. m. and 3 p. m. and attracting many states from guests and others. The march of the trimly uniformed lads begins at the Lexington avenue foyer and ends at the Park avenue entrance of the hotel. It is all over in a few minutes but attracts a lot of attention nevertheless.

• • •

Modern Maze: The new Triboro bridge is a great time-saver for motorists who go to Long Island from the Bronx or the other way around, as it makes it unnecessary for them to get into downtown traffic and cuts the mileage no little. But a young man from Detroit, who desired to travel from Washington Heights to Jones Beach, discovered that even a $64,000,000 short cut may prove otherwise. After paying 25 cents toll, he drove gayly onto the bridge and finally reached the end. A little farther on, he asked how to get to the beach and was told to take the Triboro bridge. Not until then did he discover that he was back to where he started from. The reason was that he had made a wrong turn and hadn't noted a sign. But no matter the reason, the bridge receipts were increased 25 cents since, in order to get back on, he had to part with another quarter.

City Scene: The decrepit horse of a junkman collapsing just after it has been speeded across lower Broadway to beat the change of a light. . . . The usual crowd collecting. . . . An officious policeman taking charge, forcing back the spectators and making notes. . . . The junkman answering in a choking voice. . . . It wasn't much of a horse. . . . But it brought him a living. . . . At home were a wife and six kids . . . and he couldn't figure out the future.

Hunter for Zoo Finds Capturing Easiest Task

St. Louis.—Capturing a wild animal is not so difficult, according to Christoph Schulz, veteran East African hunter, who delivered a consignment of animals to the local zoo.

But animals are hard to keep and deliver after capture, Schulz says. In support of this he pointed out that a giraffe, delivered here, was separated from a herd and roped from a horse in about five minutes.

After the capture, however, it was necessary to move the animal 300 miles overland from East Africa, place it on a ship for a voyage of thirty-seven days to Boston, after which the beast still faced a fifteen day quarantine.

And despite the long journey the animals must be delivered in good health or they will not be accepted.

Madeira Night

By ELIZABETH C. FORREST

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

PRISCILLA PORTER looked up from the fat purse in her hand to gaze gratefully after Great Aunt Agatha rustling down the tree-bordered alameda on her way back to the steamer. Then with a thrill of anticipation she turned to the beauty of Madeira. Narrow streets that mounted steeply in steps of pebbled mosaics. Brilliant flowers spilling their perfume over gray walls that hid mysterious gardens. Carros drawn by wide-horned bullocks.

In a nearby booth gorgeous embroideries caught her eye, drew her from purchase to purchase. When she emerged again onto the alameda which all afternoon had been thronged with crowds of tourists from the steamer, the street was almost deserted. Mantillaed women and sleek dark men alone were visible.

She glanced swiftly sideways and an evil-looking Portuguese with stiffly waxed mustache, leered at her. Terrified, she whirled and confronted broad tweed shoulders, a smooth blond head. A clipped voice asked, "Need any help?"

She steadied her voice. "Yes . . . please."

He turned a torrent of Portuguese upon her annoyer and the man slunk off.

"Traveling alone?" he asked.

"No. I promised Aunt Agatha I'd stay with the other passengers; but they've all disappeared."

"Tourists always take in the Casino," he remarked casually, and added, "Shall I call a carro?"

That settled it. To slide through the perfumed dusk in a quaint basket-carriage drawn by bullocks. . . . With hot cheeks and thudding heart Priscilla found herself being helped into the low wicker seat. The runners slipped away over the polished pebbles.

They slid on through narrow twisting streets. Suddenly they halted in a confusion of shouting drivers and carros disgorging black-haired senoritas and swarthy men. In the garden beyond the gaming tables they sat at a little table, surrounded by couples sipping ruby liquid from shining glasses.

"Wine?" he asked.

"Oh, no!" She was genuinely shocked.

"In Rome—" he suggested, a hint of mockery in his eyes.

What a little greenhorn he must think her! Recklessly Priscilla flung inhibitions to the wind: sipped a glass of liquid sunshine; puffed daringly at a cigarette; placed a timid shilling at the roulette table—and won enormously. It was past midnight when her companion scooped her winnings into her bulging purse and led her, starry-eyed, from the Casino.

In silence they slid downward toward the waterfront, Priscilla thinking: "And they warned me not to trust a stranger!"

At the pier she held out her hand. "You mustn't come out with me."

She slipped into a tender in the shadow of the pier and named her steamer. The boat had chugged out of the blackness of the bay into a path of the steamer's light, before she saw her boatmen. Then her heart missed a beat. The man in the stern was her mustached annoyer of the alameda.

Abruptly the engine coughed and stopped. A voice whined, "La-dee, I am vera poor man. Give money, please."

"Not one cent!" Priscilla's voice was sharp with hidden fear.

The tones were suddenly heavy with menace. "You are alone. It is vera dark."

"Here!" cried Priscilla wildly. Her purse fell with a thud on the boat's bottom.

The man picked it up and hefted it. "Bueno," he grunted.

The engine sputtered and recommenced its steady chugging. The boat slid in against the steamer's side. Trembling, Priscilla mounted the ship's ladder. One thought consoled her. Her companion would never know that their perfect evening had been spoiled.

• • •

Back at the shore the tender slid in against the pier. Broad tweed shoulders emerged from the shadows to meet it.

"Get it?" asked a crisp voice.

"Si, Boss," the boatman answered.

Together they moved over beneath a lamp. There was the clink of money changing hands.

Lithuania

Lithuania has been described as the Ireland of the Baltic, and the two countries have much in common. It is even possible that they may be racially akin. The origin of the Lithuanian race is lost in the mists of prehistory, but many anthropologists believe that they are a Celtic tribe left behind on the Baltic in the great trek of the Celts from east to west. They were the only Druids and tree worshipers in eastern Europe, and their music and folk songs and tales bear a strong resemblance to those of the Irish.

Annals of Kauai, the Garden Island—Mother Rice.

HONOLULU.

TODAY the Hawaiian islands are among our richest possessions, one of the world's finest playgrounds; the most prolific semi-tropical spot under the flag, a center of culture, educational facilities, industry and natural beauty; the halting spot for luxury ships touring the globe in search of earthly splendors—a Pacific ocean oasis between the Far East and the West and a fruit and floral kingdom second to none on the two hemispheres.

Midst this archipelago of riches, Kauai, in which pineapple and sugar reign as twin monarchs, is known as the Garden Island, upon which 37,000 industrious and prosperous people live contented lives.

It was on Kauai that Captain Cook first landed 1778 to meet death the following year. It was 40 years before this group of islands began to attract world attention. Missionaries arrived 1820; recognition by the United States 1842; provisional cession to Great Britain 1843; protectorate offered United States 1851; reign of kings and queens up to 1893; republic established 1894; American annexation secured 1898; territorial government began 1900. The first English newspaper was established 100 years ago.

Rice Family Distinguished.

Lacking space in which to do justice to even the smallest percentage of those countless noble and outstanding figures identified with the development of Kauai, what remains of this column I dedicate to that benign character, Mary Waterhouse, born in Tasmania in July, 1847, died in June, 1933, beloved of every man, woman and child, native and otherwise, living on Kauai. To all of these she was known affectionately as "Mother Rice." She was the granddaughter of a superintendent of the Wesleyan Missions in the South Seas, from which she came with her father in 1851 to Honolulu, where in the course of events Mary Waterhouse in her twenty-fifth year met and married William Hyde Rice, two years her senior, the son of William Harrison Rice, teacher of the American Protestant mission to the then Sandwich Islands.

Not in all the history of Hawaiians, since the arrival of peoples from the outer world, had there been a more profound student of Polynesian life, manners and characteristics, or one more highly esteemed among them than William Hyde Rice. He died in 1924. His wife survived him nine years.

William and Mary brought up eight children—five sons and three daughters—all save one daughter living. There are twenty grandchildren and twenty-three great-grandchildren, with three or four exceptions, all residing in the Hawaiian group. The adult progeny adorn the professions, while the younger generation prove the adage that "blood will tell." Blessed is the union responsible for the Rice posterity. Kauai, to its eternal credit, has at least a dozen families equally distinctive.

Believed in Work.

"Satan finds work for idle hands to do," was the text upon which she fashioned the course of her life and those about her. She kept everybody busy. With the true instinct of a pioneer woman she recognized the worth of labor. In her opinion honest toil, self-sacrifice and the doctrine summed up in the golden rule was the road to attainment. She was mother to all. To her came the lame, the halt and the blind; the rich and poor, when in extremes, certain that Mother Rice would not turn a deaf ear, nor withhold counsel. When the telephone came to Kauai she turned it into a voice and an ear to widen the scope of her action. Possessing a Napoleonic passion for detail, an insatiate yearning for particulars, minor and major, always with the single idea of serving others, she became an impelling force among the people.

Her purse, her heart and her mind, always open to the needs of others, seemed never to be drained to emptiness. She founded schools, libraries, hospitals, playgrounds, kindergartens, when and where needed. She discovered before it was too late every weak link in the moral and economic fabric of the island, coming to the rescue without waiting to be called.

In her later years, stricken by blindness, Mother Rice, accorded the franking privilege over all lines of communication throughout the islands, telephone, telegraph, radio, with every inhabitant a willing messenger, subject to her beck and call, directed the movements of an army trained and anxious to take orders for the common good.

A birth or death occurring on Kauai at any hour of the day or night was first recorded in the ear of Mother Rice, who at once related the news, good or bad, over the grape-vine system where she sat in control.

Floyd Gibbons Adventurers' Club Hello Everybody!

"The Death That Saved"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

Famous Headline Hunter

"HANGING by the neck," as it's spoken of in the law books, is generally considered fatal. In fact, the only man I ever heard of who was hanged by the neck to save his life is Harry J. Perry of New York City. It just goes to show how a difference in circumstance will change the whole picture for you. For most people hanging is tough luck. But Harry is not only alive and kicking, but a Distinguished Adventurer.

A lot of people out front are clamoring to know what Harry was hanged for. Well, I'll tell you—it was this way. Harry was hanged for being accommodating. It was about the middle of February, 1915, and the city of Boston was just getting over a bad snowstorm. A freezing spell had followed the storm, turning the snow to ice. It collected on the streets and on the housetops. Big icicles hung down from the roofs, threatening to fall on the crowded sidewalks below. And before that cold snap was over, there were icicles on Harry Perry's heart that threatened to fall down and punch holes in the soles of his shoes.

Harry was living in Boston in those days, and working in a store on Boylston street. The store roof, like a lot of other roofs in the neighborhood, was fringed with icicles a foot long. They had to be cut down before they fell and hurt somebody, but when the foreman suggested it to the handymen, none of them wanted to do it. "That slanted slate roof is coated with ice," they told him, "and it's so slippery that it would be suicide to try and get out on it."

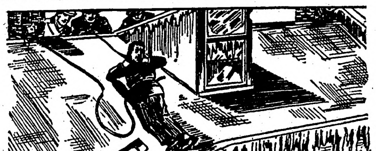
The foreman was disgusted. He called the handymen a bunch of sissies, and he went through the store telling the world that if they'd give him just one man with nerve enough to try it, he'd go up there and do it himself.

"So I decided to be the little tin hero," says Harry, "and volunteered for the job."

Wished He Had Been Less Hasty in Taking Job.

Harry says he was young in those days. He didn't know much about roofs, and he didn't realize the danger until he got up there. Then he took a look at the prospect and wished he hadn't been so hasty. He was eight stories up, on the ridge of a roof that was steeply slanted. It fell away on both sides of him, a smooth, slippery sheet of ice, with nothing to get a hold on, and nothing at the edge of the roof but an ice-filled gutter. That was what he was going to have to stand on while he chopped away those big, thick icicles.



So He Strung the Noose Around His Neck.

The foreman had a rope with him, to lower Harry down to the roof's edge. He looked around for something to snub it on and found nothing but the chimney. The chimney was square, with sharp corners, and he knew the rope wouldn't slide around it very easily, but there was nothing else in sight, so the chimney it had to be. He looped the rope around it and began lowering Harry toward the edge.

The rope was hard to maneuver. It stuck and jammed against the sharp corners of the chimney. It let Harry down in a series of short jerks that scared the life out of him. The ice was so slippery that nearly all Harry's weight was on the rope—and that rope wasn't a new one, either. In fact, it was pretty old. Harry began to wonder if it wasn't going to break, and as he did, beads of perspiration began popping out on his forehead—beads of perspiration that froze before Harry could wipe them off. By the time he reached the edge of the roof he was trembling like a leaf. But the worst was yet to come!

All at Once Things Began to Go Wrong.

The gutter was full of ice, and Harry couldn't depend on that rope to hold him if he ever slipped over the edge. He chopped out a place to rest his foot and, standing on the gutter, began to cut away icicles. Then everything went wrong all at once. Suddenly he felt the gutter crack under him and drew back. But no sooner had he shifted his weight to the rope than he heard the foreman's warning cry: "Don't move, Harry. Don't move till we get another rope! THE EDGE OF THE CHIMNEY'S ALMOST CUT THIS ONE THROUGH!"

Harry looked up at the foreman. "His face," he says, "was deathly white. I looked down at the ground, eight stories below. Then I realized what a fix I was in. My senses were becoming paralyzed, and I felt as if I couldn't support myself any longer. The leg braced against the gutter began to get numb. The rotten gutter itself would slip from under me at the least pressure. I could see the old rope now—badly frayed and holding by only a few strands. I never felt so weak in my life. I wanted to move and relieve my numb leg, but I didn't have the strength.

"I began to hear voices below me. A crowd had collected in the street. I had been persiring freely, and now my underwear felt as if it were coated with ice. I felt some slight jars as the strands of the rope broke one after another, and I could see the foreman, sick to his stomach now, and his face green. My nose began to bleed, and the blood froze as fast as it came out. But at last the boys arrived with another rope. They made a noose and slid it to me."

But still the worst moment hadn't arrived.

Too Frightened to Put Rope Around His Waist.

They yelled to Harry to put the rope around his waist, but he was too weak and too frightened. If he moved that much, he knew, the old rope and the gutter would break and he'd go hurtling to the street below. So he strung that noose AROUND HIS NECK. And then, with his two hands he did his best to relieve the pressure while they hauled him, choking, to the ridge.

Harry says no torture could ever be worse than that trip up the side of the roof. He says he'd rather be shot than go through it again. They got him up safely, but he was more dead than alive when he arrived. And volunteer for any more heroic stunts? Harry will be hanged if he does.

Vowel Sounds

Prof. R. G. Kent, secretary of the Linguistic Society of America, says: "All languages have vowel sounds. Some forms of writing do not indicate the vowel sounds, but in actual speech the vowels are necessary to support the consonants. The Egyptian hieroglyphics did not indicate the vowels; and neither did the written form of Hebrew until the invention of the so-called masoretic points. The relation of speech to writing is a very complex one which cannot be answered in a few sentences."

Everyone Can Be Hypnotized

Practically everyone can be hypnotized, although some succumb much more readily than others, states a writer in the Los Angeles Times. Because a person can be easily hypnotized does not imply that he is of low mentality, or has a weak will. Instead, he seems to have the ability to fix, to concentrate the attention upon a particular point. "Scatter-brained" persons, those whose minds are continually wandering, or jumping from one problem to another, are usually hard to hypnotize

Here's Early Slant on Major Eastern Grid Alma Momsies

YOUR scribe may as well put his neck out among the celebrated gentlemen who boast how they can handicap a most humanly erratic sport with prim statistics. Herewith is the dope concerning the 1936 prospects of the East's leading gridiron alma momsies.

YALE—After two years of probation Bob Beckwith is back at center and the line seems likely to be the strongest since Pond and Neale took over the coaching assignment. Bob Train will be missed at end but, if Scott passes his exams and teams up with Wright at tackle, they'll make a strong combination.

HARVARD — Fair enough line, especially at the tackles, where Gaffney and Kerkovian perform. Offense seems woefully weak, though, and, unless some sophomore back surprises, Prof. Harlow may need to call out some of those marines who used to perform for him at Western Maryland.

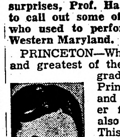
PRINCETON—When Gil Lea, last and greatest of the football Leas, graduated in June, Princeton took stock and found three other first-string ends also were missing. This is the only spot causing Coach Crisler much concern now and the Sophs insist he really has nothing to worry about. Charley Toll, who may go down in Nassau history as another such tackle as Ceppi, Barfield, Keck, Cooney, Hart, Hillebrand, Biffey Lea and Hector Cowan, is the one to watch in the line. Although there is no fullback quite as good as the departed Pepper Constable, Chick Kaufman and Ken Sandbach are dashing ball-carriers and it is difficult for neutrals to believe the Tigers will not be as good as last year.



Fritz Crisler

PENN—Veteran, mostly seniors, team which should be one of the best but which probably will encounter the customary Penn political reverses. Gisburne is the key tackle.

COLUMBIA—Far better than last fall. Sid Luckman, triple-threat back, and Art Radvilas, a fine end, are the best of some unusually strong sophs, while Tackle Bateman is the ace of the line.

DARTMOUTH—Weak at guards and none too sure Mutt Ray will recover sufficiently to resume starring at center. Hollingsworth, late 1935 discovery, may star as a triple threat along with several other fleet backs.

CORNELL—Several teams will find the Big Red tough to take but Cornell is at least a year away from what old grads hoped for when they hired Coach Snavely. Very good sophomores and Captain Jack Batten, already celebrated as a defensive star, may be the season's best kicker.

FORDHAM—Spies insist Jimmy Crowley is working with numerous rugged and powerful candidates, but that the Rams are by no means as strong as touted. There may be some trouble filling the tackle gaps left by Sarno and Sabo.

MANHATTAN—Line is certainly big and fast and probably dumb. Tuckey could be the best fullback in the East. Chick Meehan is optimistic as usual and he may be right about several of those surprises he promises to spring.

N. Y. U.—Not as strong as last year and definitely misses the kicking and passing of Big Ed Smith.

PITT—A fine big bunch of boys with just one weakness, the lack of a Nick Klisky at center. Jock Sutherland, ordinarily very good at developing pivots, now is working on that problem.

ARMY—Gar Davidson says the Cadets are big and strong with more reserves than last year but that they lack speed. Monk Meyer, of course, is the pigskin toting star and Bob Kasper seems to be doing all right, so far, at the difficult job of replacing Quarterback Grohs.

NAVY—Another possible dark horse inspired by the revenge motif. Still sore over that first half runaway last December, and even now more concerned with the Army contest than with early season affairs. Whisperers confide that so far it shapes up as one of the weaker Middy teams.

HOLY CROSS—Big, strong and fast with a nice smattering of sophs headed by Hank Ouellette, former Haverhill high star. This crack ball carrier may shove Rex Kidd, ace pilot for the past two seasons, right out of the lineup.

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

FOLKS are mumbling about the way the Yankees are handling their World Series ticket sale . . . Babe Ruth says his only batting practice this year came when he swung at an indoor baseball. He missed on the first three cuts and broke the bat when he finally connected . . . Is a celebrated sports hero, rather new to the turf and reported to be winning and losing vast sums at the tracks, really betting for one of the best educated books? . . . Adolfo Luque, the very able coach of the Giants is one of the most accomplished rhumba dancers of the generation . . . Cards and Dodgers picked Fred Fitzsimmons to give Carl Hubbell the most pitching help in the World Series. They say the big fellow is almost as fast as he was five years ago.

What celebrated college is squawking about letting its basketball team add to the Garden profits this winter? The reason seems to be that the front for the Garden's court activities is too closely and actively connected with a track bookmaking minor politician . . . Tom Laird, the celebrated sports editor who flew in from California a day or two ago, says that Joe Marty, latest high - priced Pacific Coast league sensation, is by no means a DiMaggio. Dan Morgan, who used to manage him, says that Trainer Bill Schaefer of the Giants was the best gymnasium fighter he ever saw . . . Frankie Frisch's legs are black and blue from hip to ankle due to the beatings he took while attempting to rally the Cards by personal appearances at second base.

If it is true what they say about Dixie, Georgia will have the best football team down that way this season. Spec Towns, the Olympic hurdling ace who plays end, and Tommy Haygood, 200-pound junior tackle, are the keymen of a really great line . . . Also you might keep an eye on Gintoff, Boston college's 197-pound sophomore. When Gil Dobie gets a back that big and fast he usually goes places.

Lefty O'Doul, the former Yankee, Dodger and Giant, who now manages the San Francisco club, will witness the World Series . . . If New York state racing officials ever get time to wander from the betting ring into the paddock they might notice something which could be changed to the benefit of unwary taxpayers. Under the present layout sharpshooters have too much access, or, at least, ways of getting in touch with jockeys at local tracks . . . Watty Clarke says that Leo Durocher, once a woeful hitter, now drives a ball back at a pitcher harder than any other National league batter.

Lefty O'Doul

Olympic Stars May Turn Pro If Real Money Goes on Line

If some of those babbling promoters lay some real money on the line a flock of track stars immediately will turn pro. Several Olympic stars admit frankly that they are much interested in open meets but do not wish to lose their amateur standing until they are guaranteed a better proposition . . . Frank Graham, the famous sports columnist, started writing baseball twenty years ago. In his first week he saw Jim Lavender pitch a no-hit game for the Cubs against the Giants and watched Bancroft and Stock make a triple play (it really could have been completed by Bancroft alone) in a Philly-Giant contest . . . ### Tired Shark

Of all the articles that have been found upon and imbedded in fishes, one of the most unusual was an automobile tire which encircled the body of a shark discovered floundering on the coast of Cuba near Havana. Owing to its extreme fatigue from trying to free itself of this tight and cutting encumbrance, the shark was easily lassoed and dragged ashore by two boys.—Collier's Weekly.

POULTRY

PULLETS REQUIRE EARLY ATTENTION

Time to Select Layers and Move Off Range.

By C. M. Ferguson, Poultry Specialist, Ohio State University.—WNU Service.

With approach of the time of year for moving pullets in off of range to laying houses fall management practices have been found to give satisfaction.

Let the first group to be moved in include those pullets which are most advanced, are showing considerable comb development and are about ready to begin laying. Of the pullets left on range, it will become evident in a couple of weeks that possibly half of them are then also ready to be moved in.

That will leave on range only the slower maturing, less thrifty pullets, which without competition from the stronger, thriftier pullets will generally show a surprising development. In this last group there will be pullets not making a satisfactory growth, which pullets it is usually good economy to finish off for the market.

If the pullets are to be used in the second year as breeders, different colored leg bands put on as they are brought in off of range will be of considerable value in selecting the earlier maturing birds as breeders.

Most farm poultrymen realize the importance of thoroughly cleaning and disinfecting their poultry houses against red mite infestation before moving the pullets in from range. If any body lice are found on the pullets, sodium fluoride sprinkled well into the pullet's feathers will kill the lice. Or nicotine sulfate applied to the roosts late in the afternoon will give off fumes, which will exterminate the lice while the pullets are roosting.

Good ventilation, without too much draft on real cool nights is especially important for a few weeks after the pullets are housed in off range. In this connection, insulated houses are much cooler in the summer and also much warmer in the winter. Elaborate insulation is not necessary. Straw lofts will often provide sufficient insulation at very low cost.

It is always wise to have the pullets switched over to their complete laying rations before they are brought in from the range.

Have House Ready as Pullets Begin to Lay

The ideal place for the pullets is out on range—preferably in range shelters. It is possible to keep the pullets on range too long. If over 10 per cent are laying they should be taken to the laying house. This is especially true if the other pullets commence to redden up.

With early-hatched birds, properly fed, there comes a time when they have to lay. In that case prepare for them. The laying house should be cleaned and disinfected. There should be clean litter. Have plenty of feed hoppers and it helps if they are similar to the type the pullets are used to eating from while on range. Be careful to have all the nests, droppings boards and roosts fixed. The windows, ventilators, etc., should be fixed before moving the pullets into their new quarters. Move the pullets as quietly as possible.

Many bloody eggs are caused because of undue excitement and rough handling. If one has considerable room and a large flock of pullets he should place similar pullets together. If all the pullets in one house mature about the same time they can all be handled alike. Pullets should be sorted.—Indiana Farmer's Guide.

Strain on Hens

It takes vigorous birds to stand the strains of high egg production, says Dr. W. A. Hagan of New York State Veterinary college, who states: "A 200-egg hen, for instance, produces at least five times her own weight in eggs in a single year, and this is perhaps ten times as much as she would produce without domestication."

Grain Ration for Poultry

Higher egg production is secured by feeding only a small amount of grain in the morning and the remainder at night. The morning feed should be in clean litter about four to six inches deep. There is a growing tendency among poultrymen to make the afternoon feeding in troughs and this is a good practice, especially where infectious diseases or internal parasites are present. A flock of 100 hens will ordinarily consume 10 to 12 pounds of grain a day.

Cleanliness Important

Regardless of how it is done, removal of droppings and floor litter from the poultry house is the biggest cleaning problem. Yet this operation can be made time-saving, says the Farm Journal. To insure easier cleaning, have the right tools—a regular scraper for droppings and a straight shanked hoe for cleaning and scraping the floor. Droppings boards and floor (wood or concrete) ought to be kept well soaked with oil.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Praising California.

VERNALIS, CALIF. — They used to say that California flowers had no real smell, and that California birds had no song—and that's a lie because the resident mocking bird feels it his Christian duty to get right under my bedroom window and sing all night—and that California grown foods had no flavor.

It's true California still produces one pear which suggests a low grade of damp cotton batting, and one variety of fig which could pass for library paste, and a certain tropical pawpaw which makes you think you've been licking postage stamps. And there's a special breed of mushrooms which is about the size of a derby hat and tastes like one.

Irvin S. Cobb

But we can grow apricots and cherries and nectarines and peaches as toothsome as you'd ask for; and noble berries and luscious prunes and delectable grapes; and, on this great ranch, about the finest melons I ever ate. There's likewise a red onion which has a taste all right—eat it raw and you taste it for days and days.

And if you think our flowers don't smell enough, try our politics.

Troubles of a Pioneer.

LIFE in these parts is just one thing after another, and sometimes it's several things after another, all at once—such as the rush of the autograph collectors upon a poor, shy movie star, or the yelping onslaught of our estate beagles when a visiting nobleman incautiously intimates that he might sell his trailer and buy a lot.

But complications also pile up for a life-long resident who has been here, as I have, nearly two years now and so is qualified to join the Early Pioneers' California society. Here I go and take on a radio program—and I did so hope to fly east to see what Mrs. Harrison Williams will be wearing this fall. At times the temptation just to drop everything and start has been well-nigh overpowering.

Reducing Motor Accidents.

WE'RE great people at starting something, but, just then, along comes a new crusade or a new movement or a new style in divided skirts and we trail off after that, forgetting the issue which had seemed so passionately important.

Last January we were all enlisting to make 1936 a safer year on the highroad. With the year nearly three-fourths gone, what have we done to reduce the appalling mortality? And what are we going to do before all of us, except the idiots and drunkards, who are supposed to be the special ward of providence, have been mowed down?

I'm reminded of the colored man in Mississippi who was convicted of murder, and his lawyer forgot to file an appeal, and finally the condemned man sat down and wrote this letter: "Dear Guvnor: Please, suh, I is on the middle of a purticular fix and onlessen you do somethin' right away, they hang me Friday—here 'tis Wednesday already!"

* * *

Saving Your Teeth.

THOUGH thy teeth be but stately ruins, with English ivy growing all over them and bullbats nesting in the hollows, fight off for as long as possible those who think the root of all evil is the bottom of your remaining bicuspid. Don't let 'em be too fast about photographing your jaw either.

No man ever yet had an X-ray picture that flattered him. Particularly is that true when it's an interior view of the human face.

Because, the next thing you know, a gentleman in a white smock is testing some forceps and saying, "This may hurt—just a little." And then the next thing after that, your uppers are as false as Judas.

I did so and the result is that, no matter what else is on the menu, I go in for the Cobb pink plate special. A fellow does get tired of having everything he eats taste like rubber.

Sea Horse Is a Fish

The sea horse is a fish, but a very strange kind of fish. It spends almost all the time in an upright position, with its head up and its tail down. With the tail it can do something which the common fish can't do. It can cling to a weed. A sea horse swims while in upright position. A fin on the back is moved to give forward motion, and this fin has been compared to a propeller. It does not look or turn just like a propeller, but it gives about the same result. An air sac, or "swim bladder," helps the sea horse keep in balance. Most of the time, however, the fish holds tightly to a seaweed, wrapping its tail around in spiral fashion

Attractive Cakes to Serve at Parties, and How to Make Them

Recipes for Old-Fashioned Sponge, Queen and Mocha Cakes.

The season for parties and entertainments is now in full swing, and delectable dishes are wanted on menus. Chief among these are cakes, so here are some recipes to help the hostesses.

Old-Time Sponge Cake.

1 cup flour
1 cup of granulated sugar
5 eggs
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon lemon extract
A dash of salt

Add sugar a little at a time to the well-beaten whites of the eggs. Beat yolks separately and add to above. Sift the flour twice after adding the salt and baking powder. Mix this lightly with first mixture. Add flavoring. Pour into square pan and bake in a moderate oven 350 degrees.

Hints.

Lemon is a flavoring particularly well suited to sponge cake. Do not remove cake from pan until cold, but let it cool in inverted pan, as this prevents shrinkage and makes cake easier to remove.

Queen Cake.

¾ cup butter
1¼ cups sugar
¾ cup milk
4 eggs
1¾ cups flour
3 level teaspoons baking powder
⅛ teaspoon salt
¾ teaspoon almond extract

Cream the butter and then add the sugar gradually, the milk, almond extract and well beaten eggs. Beat flour into cake, when flour has been sifted twice after salt and baking powder have been added. One-half cup of candied or maraschino cherries cut into pieces supplies an attractive note of color to cake. If used, add the last thing.

Fancy Cakes From Either Batter.

Cut cakes into diamonds, finger strips, and squares. Frost with different colored icings or chocolate frosting, letting the icing cover sides as well as top of pieces. Dot tops with bits of cherries, halves of English walnuts, or blanched almonds, pistachio nuts, tiny triangles of candied citron, etc. Sprinkle some tops with coconut shreds.

Layer Cakes.

Either kind of cake can be made into chocolate layer cake, or any preferred layer cake. Ornament the tops with any of the things suggested for small cakes. The batter of the above cakes is so good that no frosting is needed, although it is decorative.

Individual Mocha Cakes.

½ can sweetened condensed milk (caramelized)
¼ cup hot coffee
½ cup walnut meats, finely chopped
24 large chocolate wafers
½ cup whipped cream

Blend caramelized sweetened condensed milk and hot coffee, beating until smooth. Chop walnut meats and add. Spread prepared mixture on chocolate wafers. Pile four wafers on top of each other for each individual portion. Chill in refrigerator three hours or longer. Garnish with whipped cream if desired. Serves six.

Truth Telling

TRUTH telling is an achievement, a mark of strong mind and character. It requires accurate observation of facts, a reliable memory, a sense of justice towards others, and courage to tell the truth to our own hurt. So often lying is due to sheer cowardice. The fight is harder for some than for others, but those who start the day praying to the god of truth to make them honest discover that more and more they succeed in "putting away lying."

Household Questions

* * *

When buying fish see that the eyes are not sunken in and dull. A fresh fish has clear eyes and the flesh is firm to the touch.

* * *

Drain all juices from fresh or canned fruits, store in ice box and use for fruit cocktails or sherbets.

* * *

In the fall pack plenty of oak leaves around the roots of acid soil plants, such as daphnes, azaleas and rhododendrons. These leaves rot and make an excellent fertilizer. They may be mixed with the soil in the spring.

* * *

Hard cooked eggs, sliced, are made a tasty dish when added to a thickened tomato sauce and the whole sprinkled with cheese and baked 20 minutes. This is good for evening refreshments or Sunday supper on a rainy night.

* * *

Marks on painted walls which have been caused by carelessly striking matches on them will disappear if rubbed first with the cut surface of a lemon, then with a clean cloth dipped in whiting. Afterward wash the surface with warm water and soap, and then quickly wipe with a clean cloth wrung out of clear water.

William J. Bryan's Famous Ode to Water

At a banquet given in his honor in Japan, Wm. J. Bryan declined wine, and using water instead, gave the following toast: "Water — the daily need of every living thing. It rises from the earth obedient to the summons of the sun and descends in showers of blessings. It gives of its beauty to the fragrant flowers. It is the alchemy that transmutes base clay into golden grain. It is the canvas on which the finger of the Infinite traces the radiant bow of promise. It is the drink that cheers and brings no sorrow with it. Jehovah looked upon it at Creation's dawn and said, 'It is good'."

Buildinig and Cattle Burned

According to reports received here at this office, the big peat fire in the northeast corner of the Mud Lake country got out of its bed one day last week and blew around on top of the ground doing a lot of damage. The barn, granery, and other small buildings, some cows, calves, and harness were burned up on the Ed Hill farm before help was able to get there to check the blaze.

When peat fires crawl out of burn-outs on a windy day it is high time to move as you never know when you are safe with a hot grass fire at your heels.

Oppegaard-Evans

Miss Constance F. Oppegaard of Milan and Mr. Everett A. Evans of Ortonville were quietly married at the parsonage last Saturday evening at 7 p. m. The single ring ceremony was performed by Rev. T. C. L. Hanson. The attendants were Miss Agnes Oppegaard, of Milan, and Mr. Orrin Oppegaard, of Wheaton, sister and brother of the bride.

After the ceremony, a wedding dinner was served by Rev. and Mrs. T. C. L. Hanson.

Mrs. Evans is a daughter of Mrs, Martha Oppegaard of Milan and a sister of Mrs. Hanson. Mr. Evans is the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Evans of Ortonville. They will make their home in Ortonville where the groom is engaged with his father in the oil and implement business.

11 Day Deer Season

An 11-day deer season for 16 northern Minnesota counties was designated by the state Conservation Commission at its regular meeting last week. The deer season will open from Nov. 15 to Nov. 25 inclusive.

At the same time the commission asked Governor Peterson to issue an excutive order providing for an 11-day bear season from Nov. 15 to Nov. 25 in all counties having a deer season. The commission also requested Governor Petersen to elminate the statutory bear season which extends from April 15 to May 15.

Fawns are not included in the deer season and will remain protected in all counties. The deer season will be fully open in Koochiching, Lake of the Woods, Roseau, Lake, Cook, St. Louis, Beltrami, Hubbard, Cass, Clearwater, Itasca, Crow Wing, Aitkin, Kanabec, Pine, and Carlton counties. Deer may also be taken in Becker county, east of the Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Sault St. Marie railroad; in Marshall and Kittson counties east of the old Pembina trail; and in Mille Lacs county north of the Great Northern railroad throug Milaca.

The Squirrel season will be open from October 15 to January 1, with a daily limit of seven and 14 permitted in possession. Raccoon may be taken from November 10 to December 1; mink from November 1 to Februrary 15; and skunk from October 20 to May 1.

Northwest School Opens

The Northwest School opened last week with the largest fall term enrollment in the history of the school. At the close of the first week, Registrar J. W. Mlinar reported 231 men and 139 women, or a total of 370 compared with the previous record of 338 established on the same date last year. The distribution by classes shows 127 freshmen, 106 Juniors, 72 Seniors, 43 Adavnced, and 22 Special students.

All dormitories have been taxed beyond capacity, thus necessitating the use of the Home Practice quarters and the Health Service building for the overflow in the girls' department.

Mrs. Hartley Peterson returned home Wednesday from the St. Luke,s hospital at Thief River Falls where she underwent an operation for appendicitis.

4-H Held Aunual Meeting

The Holt 4-H held their annual meeting on Friday evening, October 9th, and elected the following officers for 1937. President, Doris Larson; Vice President, Marlan Augustine; Secretary and reporter, Beatrice Larson; and Treasurer, Elwood Herom.

Mr. Karvonen, instructor of upper grades at the local school, was present and presented a fine talk, stressing the value of cooperation in all activities.

Mr. Karvonen has had training in 4-H leadership and the Holt club appreciate his interest. Those of us who have watched the movement and progress of of our local club, do indeed realize the necessity of this wonderful movement of working together called cooperation. We again express our most sincere appreciation to Mr. Karvonen for the splendid message he conveyed to us.

Let us as 4-H members take his words into consideration and cooperation to "make the best better."

Lester Tigeson Badly Burned

Last Thursday, Lester Tigeson son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Tigeson of Rollis township, was rushed to a hospital at Thief River Falls to be treated for burns. Young Tigeson had just completed the job of threshing in Mud Lake area and stopped to refill the gas tank on the tractor before going home. He like many others likes a smoke when the day is over, and so he lit a cigarette. He had soaked his clothes with a quantity of gas when he filled the tank and this ignited from the match he lit and his clothing caught fire. His father helped him get the gas soaked clothes torn off of him and he also was burned about the face and hands.

At the last report Lester was getting along as well as can be expected after a chase over the field with all his clothing on fire.

Johnsons Had Bad Accident

According to reports received here, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Johnson and Gloria, and Mr. and Mrs. Sam Leiran and Eleanor, who left a short time ago for Oregon, met with a spectular accident at Salt Lake City, when their car was forced off the road by a truck going in the same direction. The truck cut around them to pass, but swerved back too quickly and collided with the front end of the car, cauing it it to swerve off the highway, crash into a pole then overturn.

All of them were cut and bruised but, none seriously injured. The car was very badly damaged.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON D. C

One Thing Needed

Washington.—Several years ago I expressed in these columns the conviction that one thing America needed was a congress which would cease attempting to amend the law of supply and demand. The observation was made in the midst of the most depressed economic conditions that modern times had known and it brought down upon my head a vast amount of criticism. Readers wrote me at length about the stupidity that I had displayed by making such a statement.

Reference to that circumstance is made here at this time, because it is apropos again. It is apropos because we are in a political campaign out of which will come either the re-election of Franklin D. Roosevelt or the election of Governor Landon of Kansas. The results of this political campaign are going to hinge to a considerable extent on the attitude of the farmers of this country and if there is one segment of the American economic structure to whom the law of supply and demand means more than to another, it is to the farmers.

Now, Democratic spokesmen are going about the country talking about soil conservation, about relief for the farmers, about anything and everything that will give the farmers money.

Republican spokesmen are shouting and waving their arms with other propositions to aid the farmer. Some of them probably are workable, and if they are workable they must be considered constructive.

But the point I am trying to make is that in the case of either candidate, there is still too much of the idea of the superficial, of surface help, for agriculture. In other words, the programs still take into account some circumvention of the law of supply and demand. That statement is not wholly true of Governor Landon's farm program, but unless the New Dealers come forward with more than they have thus far advanced, I think it can be said their program offers nothing more than a continued raid on the Treasury of the United States with no plans at all for correcting underlying conditions.

There was one phase of Governor Landon's program, as advanced in speeches at Des Moines, Iowa and Minneapolis, Minn. that appealed to me. Brushing aside verbiage and detail, Governor Landon basically has in mind, apparently, a desire to get the government out of the farmer's hair. He seems convinced that there are many things which the farmers would like to do for themselves and will do for themselves if the machinery upon which they can operate is made available. He proposes, for example, to seek legislation that will enable the farmers to finance themselves through borrowing from commercial agencies, banks and trust companies, instead of from the government. With that I agree to the fullest. It means simply that farmers again can be masters of their own souls as well as the crops which they grow for it, puts them in a position to sell when they want to sell, without the necessity for asking permission from a bureaucrat in Washington. It means further that no bureaucrat in Washington can issue an order to that farmer that he must dispose of his stored crop.

It seems to me as well that anyone who analyzes the present regimentation of the farmers from Washington must recognize that which has always been true: Every time the government, which means politicians, attempts to mess into private business, that private business goes from bad to worse and it does not matter how bad it was when bureaucrats took hold. It will be worse thereafter.

* * *

Hits Root of Farm Problem

I have been wondering, however, how far Mr. Landon will go in encouragement of the family type farms. You will remember that he spoke at length of family type farms in his Des Moines address. Personally, I feel that he hit upon a very important point. I think it is important because it strikes at the root of the farm problem.

In discussing help for the man who owns or wants to own a small farm, Governor Landon surely is proposing a program that will serve this nation well because no nation whose farms are widely owned by those who operate them can be headed toward fascism or communism. I do not know how the Governor as President will be able to put the federal government behind such a program, but it is to be assumed that he had definite ideas on the subject or he would not have boldly stated his position. My hope is that it can be done not with government money, but with money supplied from private institutions since there has been too much goverment competition with business of the nation already. Further, regretful as it is, the federal government has not and cannot have any function in that field for the reason that it inevitably leads further into politics, further into waste and the eventual destruction of the people whom the demagogues claim they are helping.

The reason I have advocated this action so strongly is the fact that there are too many tenant farmers in the United States now, far too many. It is fundamental, in my opinion, that this nation can get on with the present trend. It is sad, but it is true, that there are about forty per cent of our farms now operated by tenants. In other words, one out of less than three farms in the United States is worked by a man who does not own it.

* * *

Press for Landon

Some information was made public the other day to the effect that 85 per cent of the newspapers of the country were supporting Governor Landon as against President Roosevelt in this campaign. I do not know the actual percentage and I do not vouch for the figures I have reported to you. But of this I am certain: I believe that Governor Landon does have more editorial support than any presidential nominee has had in the last six campaigns, with the exception of President Roosevelt as a candidate in 1932.

It has been interesting to watch the various important independent newspapers as they have studied the two candidates this year and have reached conclusions as to the nominee they will support. I am not now referring to hide-bound Republican papers, nor to newspapers that could normally be expected to support the more conservative of the two candidates. I am thinking of independent or distinctly Democratic newspapers that have announced their opposition to the Roosevelt cause. Let me mention a few of them: The St. Louis Post-Dispatch, the Omaha World Herald, the Baltimore Sun, to mention only three.

* * *

New York Times

There was a great newspaper, one of the greatest, that took a stand for President Roosevelt a few days ago. I refer to the New York Times. No one can ever say that the New York Times ever has failed to arrive at its conclusions without giving all factors concerned careful study. I am saying by this that the New York Times is honest and sincere. But I must say at the same time that the New York Times has a background as an institution and it has a clientele of readers for whom it speaks and its accession to the Roosevelt cause is a perfectly natural position for it to take. For years the New York Times has contended that America should participate to a greater extent in world affairs. It has contended, without exception, for policies of an internationalism with which a great many thinking people disagree. Its view, concretely, appears to be that we cannot correct depression conditions unless the United States as a nation wholeheartedly moves in the circle of governments that rule Europe and Asia, especially in matters of an economic character.

I do not know what Governor Landon's pronouncements on foreign policy are going to be. But I have observed the policies that have had the backing of the New York Times over a number of years and it seems to me that they result in greater benefits to a limited class than to the country as a whole. I am not a rabble rouser; I do not link the New York Times with the money-changers of Wall street as the demagogues describe them. It is just the perspective that I have gained of the whole picture since I have no axes to grind.

In the case of those newspapers that have turned against Mr. Roosevelt, there is to some extent a consideration of local interests, circumstances of concern to the communities which they serve, just as in the case of the New York Times. The point is, however, that in the case of newspapers turning against Mr. Roosevelt, their new positions are predicated on what appears to me to be traditional American bases. That is to say, they are adhering to the principles which I believe to have been the foundation stones of American history. I have no quarrel with the attitude of that school of thought that believes we should engage further in international affairs than we have done. It is their conviction and they have a right to it. Yet, it is not mine.

I have said may times in these columns that I will support any proposition that is good for America as a whole; I have contended consistently for Americanism and the things which that means, and I have argued always for sound goverment.

Annals of Kauai, the Garden Island, $1,000 in Silver.

LET me tell a tale of this fruitful and beautiful Pacific ocean jewel that harks back to the early days when land could be bought for a song and singers were in voice.

Out of the many stories called to my attention I selected one that came to me through Mr. Eric Knudsen, born in Kauai sixty odd years ago, eldest son of Valdemar Knudsen, one of the earliest settlers.

Mr. Knudsen's method of recording the dramatic past involves the use of mountains, from which he may survey the land and sea of his beloved island. Kawaikini peak, 5,170 feet above sea level and located almost in the center of Kauai, is his favorite elevation when discussing panoramic beauty.

"The spot of green a few miles off shore to the southwest," said Eric, waving a brown arm over the whole of Christendom, "is Niihau island, where my mother once lived. She was the youngest daughter of Mrs. Eliza Sinclair, who brought her whole family from New Zealand in 1863, two sons, two sons-in-law, three daughters, six grandchildren, and settled there.

"About seventy-two square miles of rich pasturage for sheep, cattle, other domestic stock and honey bees, its highest elevation rose 1,300 feet above sea level. It was like the arrival of another nation, this family from New Zealand.

Father Suggests a Way.

"However, if I am to get on with the story of how my father, Valdemar Knudsen, found a bride among the Sinclairs, you must turn your thoughts back to Niihau, small, but important in my own affairs. After taking over the property, Mrs. Sinclair discovered there a Hawaiian-born settler who had long occupied a small strip of the island and who held in fee simple a royal grant that interfered with her plans for development. She offered to buy the parcel. No, the native would not sell at any price. Both he and his wife wished to remain until death. They were cold to all proposals; a sentimental blockade, as it were.

"My father, a Norwegian who had come to Kauai in the early '50s and set up a stock ranch and orchard at Waimea, enjoyed no little distinction as one familiar and friendly with the Hawaiian people. To him Mrs. Sinclair came with her problem, authorizing the purchase of the controversial strip at whatever figure Valdemar Knudsen considered fair to all concerned. 'Give me 1,000 trade dollars,' he said, 'and leave the rest to me.'

"Upon receipt of the coin, much of which was tarnished, he devoted three full days to putting a bright polish on the sinews of war, which he loaded into a canvas bag and lugged after dark to the straw hut of the Hawaiian couple, where he was welcomed both as a visitor and an old friend.

Silver Flood Descends.

"Casting the silver burden on the center table, he mopped his brow and straightaway launched into a flood of gossip along general lines. In the midst of the babble, he opened the canvas sack and began to stack shimmering trade dollars, ten in a pile, all over the table top, commenting the while on what each tower of silver would buy in the open market.

"Under the light of a coal oil lamp, shedding its golden rays on the white metal monuments scattered about, Valdemar Knudsen, fingering the coin as he talked, described red-topped boots, brooches, bracelets, clothing, silk bodices, axes, sewing machines, bureaus, inlaid bedsteads, cooking utensils, saddles, grandfather clocks, dinner dishes and rocking chairs that could be bought and delivered at the humble domicile of the old couple, now huddled over more purchasing power than they had ever beheld in their whole lives. 'All of this for your land,' said my father. 'Yours to have and to hold; enough to last all of this life.'

Natives Won Over.

"Hypnotized, the aged couple, alternating between chilled indifference and melting acceptance, held their breath, the man battling with resistance, the woman yearning for speech. Flat upon that table, midst the piles of money, lay the canvas bag, empty of all temptation. The Hawaiian, immobile as stone, made no sign. With a quick movement, my father, encircling the hoard with his arm, began to draw the $1,000 in silver into the sack. 'Pau!' (It is ended) he said. 'No, no, Kannuka,' exclaimed the woman. 'We will sell . . . It is enough. . . . Leave the money there. Where is the paper?' Turning to her husband, she smothered him with an appeal to close the transaction. He nodded, burying his hands in the silver flood.

"Mrs. Sinclair allowed the couple to remain until they passed away. Evidently, the Norwegian's business tactics made a profound impression upon the Scotch woman, as my father became her son-in-law."

Tales and Traditions from American Political History
BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE REPUBLICAN ELEPHANT

WHY is it that the Republican party, which has dominated the American government for 60 out of the 80 years it has been in existence, should be symbolized by a beast from the African jungles instead of some typical American animal? The answer is that a cartoonist once used a jungle scene to depict a political crisis and the figure of an elephant was so appropriate for what it was supposed to represent that its symbolism persisted long after the crisis itself had passed. The cartoonist was Thomas Nast of Harper's Weekly and the crisis was this:

In 1874 it seemed certain that President Grant was determined to run again in 1876. The principal opponent to the third term idea was James Gordon Bennett's Democratic newspaper, the New York Herald, which shrieked "Caesarism!" incessantly. Taking his tip how "An ass, having put on a lion's skin, roamed about the forest and amused himself by frightening all the foolish animals he met with in his wanderings," Nast drew a cartoon which he labelled "The Third Term Panic."

It showed the Herald as a donkey in a lion's skin, labelled "Caesarism," braying loudly and all the animals fleeing in alarm. The New York Tribune was represented as a giraffe, the World as an owl dropping an arithmetic book, the Times as a unicorn with a monocle. Near-by was a half-concealed fox labelled "Democratic party" but with features suggesting those of Samuel J. Tilden.

In the foreground was an elephant, labelled "The Republican Vote" on the verge of an abyss of "Chaos" barely hidden by broken planks marked "Inflation," "Repudiation," "Reform (Tammany)" and "Reconstruction." This cartoon was not only a thrust at the Herald but also a half-affectionate jab at Nast's own "huge but timorous" party, the Republicans.

Two weeks later Nast drew another cartoon showing an elephant tumbling down into the pit with the rotten planks and the rejoicing animals following it. This was called "Caught in a Trap—the Result of the Third Term Hoax." From that time on the elephant was the symbol of the Republican party.

THEY SING THE OLD SONGS

TO THE tune of "O, Susanna!" written by Stephen Foster many years ago, supporters of Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas sang him into the Republican nomination at Cleveland and this banjo-tinkling tune, which cheered westward-bound emigrants in the golden "Days of '49," is being used to cheer eastward-bound (to the White House, they believe) Republican voters in the campaign "Days of '36." Will it drown out the cheerful strains of "Happy Days Are Here Again"? November 3 will answer that!

Not the least of the interest in the renewed singing of "O, Susanna!" is the few instances in which an old familiar song is revived for campaign purposes. Setting "campaign verses" to a familiar tune and using it for political purposes has always been a common practice. As far back as 1840 the Whigs sang a song in praise of Harrison to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne." In 1848, when the Free Soil party nominated Martin Van Buren, new words were written and sung to the tune of "Old Dan Tucker." The old familiar "Yankee Doodle," "Auld Lang Syne," "The Frog He Would a-Wooing Go" and "The Camptown Races" were employed as the musical setting for songs in praise of Fremont in 1856.

Considering the fact that a Spanish-American War hero was a vice presidential candidate in 1900 it was only natural that "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight" should become a Republican campaign song. But it wasn't until 1920 that an old song was revived and sung in its original form in support of a presidential candidate. In that year "The Sidewalks of New York," written in 1894 by Charles B. Lawlor and James W. Blake, was played by a band at the San Francisco Democratic convention when Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York was introduced and given a great ovation. It was his "musical trademark" when he became Candidate Smith in 1924 and Nominee Smith in 1928. Will the revival of "O, Susanna!" bring better luck to Gov. Al. Landon than the revival of "Sidewalks of New York" did to Gov. Al. Smith? Again—"read the papers on November 4."

Course of Lightning

The main flash of lightning does not travel from a cloud to the earth, but in the opposite direction. The main flash is always preceded by a "leader", which acts as a sort of pathfinder or trail blazer. The "pathfinder" travels from the cloud to the earth, while the main flash starts upward from the earth at the point struck by the "leader". It follows exactly the same path back to the cloud. The length of the lightning bolt has been found to vary from 1.5 to 4.7 miles

Movie • Radio

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

HAVE you heard Hildegarde on the radio? You must, not merely because she is delightful in a way all her own, but because it is always interesting to watch the progress of someone who is on the way to stardom.

Not so many years ago she was playing the piano in a motion picture theater. She went abroad. First thing she knew, the Milwaukee girl was singing for royalty—King Edward VIII when he was Prince of Wales, the King of Sweden, ex-King Alfonso of Spain, the Duke and Duchess of Kent—they all helped make her one of the toasts of Europe.

Now she has come back home, and broadcasts on Tuesday evenings from ten to ten-thirty, and on Saturdays from eight to eight-thirty over N. B. C.

Marlene Dietrich

Marlene Dietrich couldn't wait to get off to Europe—and now she can't wait to get home! She is making a picture in England, you know, and there have been delays (it's reported that Robert Donat walked out on it, for reasons not announced at the time) and she doesn't know when she'll return. She is so sold on Hollywood that she telephoned her studio dress designer to ask his advice on the gowns she will wear in the English picture—perhaps she was afraid that the designers over there wouldn't let her wear enough feathers!

Well, another grand picture has come along, one of the best in years. It is "My Man Godfrey," with—Carole Lombard, William Powell, Alice Brady, Gail Patrick, Jean Dixon, Eugene Pallette and Alan Mowbray. It is almost too funny—you find yourself laughing so hard at one bit of funny dialogue that you miss the next one.

Take it from Simone Simon, who has become so tremendously popular in so short a time, her name should be pronounced "Semone Semon"—but it takes a French student to get that last syllable exactly right. She is having a grand time in Hollywood; goes out practically every night, looking even younger and cuter than she does on the screen, and gets just about everything she wants at the studio by day.

It is good news for Nelson Eddy's many admirers that his new fall series of broadcasts is under way. He began them September 27 from Hollywood, on a nation-wide Columbia network of eighty-two stations, and will continue to broadcast from there until his concert engagements take him East in January.

Errol Flynn

You can't help liking Errol Flynn. He refuses to let making pictures dominate his life, perhaps because he did so many things before he became an actor. He learned to play tennis comparatively recently, entered the Pacific Southwest Tournament — and had to play Frank Shields, but he gave a good account of himself, though he was up against a champion. When he lived in New Guinea he collected rare snakes for Dr. Raymond Ditmars. Now he collects rare insects for British museums, and his wife, Lily Damita, goes along, though she loathes bugs and doesn't particularly care for the Mojave desert, where he does his collecting.

No doubt you've heard Edwin C. Hill who comments so ably on news events. Well, he's starting something original with his new series. He will begin with a summary of the week's news, and after that, with the aid of a cast of actors, will dramatize a presentation of the story of some unknown American hero or heroine.

Bayer Tablets Dissolve Almost Instantly

In 2 seconds by stop watch, a genuine BAYER Aspirin tablet starts to disintegrate and go to work. Drop a Bayer Aspirin tablet into a glass of water. By the time it hits the bottom of the glass it is disintegrating. What happens in this glass . . . happens in your stomach.

For Amazingly Quick Relief Get Genuine Bayer Aspirin

If you suffer from pains of neuritis what you want is quick relief.

Genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets give quick relief, for one reason, because they dissolve or disintegrate almost instantly they touch moisture. (Note illustration above.)

Hence — when you take a real Bayer Aspirin tablet it starts to dissolve almost as quickly as you swallow it. And thus is ready to start working almost instantly . . . headaches, neuralgia and neuritis pains start easing almost at once.

That's why millions never ask for aspirin by the name aspirin alone when they buy, but always say "BAYER ASPIRIN" and see that they get it.

Try it. You'll say it's marvelous.

Pageantry in England

Member of Royal Horse Guards In Full Regalia.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

THE English like pageantry. No one is long in London before that becomes evident. And when spring comes to the British capital, pageantry is not far behind.

A month before, the south coast has retained the winter's health seekers and a generous sprinkling of visitors from "The Colonies." To watch the opening of the mail in a drawing room of Penzance or Torquay is like leafing the pages of an imperial atlas or a stamp album.

The season's northward passage from Kent and Sussex changes the country's outlook. Then the visiting expatriates move north, and the Cornish Riviera emerges from its plate-glass windbreaks. The daffodils have begun to show themselves in London's parks.

How many hundreds of springs have worked their magic around Ludgate Hill? Yet the story is never old.

In St. James's Park the pelicans plume themselves for another round of admirers. Testy old Colonials, amid youngsters with the same straight backs, ride splendid horses along that mid-city strip of tanbark known as Rotten Row. Before St. Paul's and under the haughty noses of the Landseer lions in Trafalgar square children minister to the vernal voracity of the London pigeons.

In Whitehall, where the Horse Guards sit their coal-black mounts, warm red winter capes are removed to display white buckskin breeches. In front of the Old Admiralty, whence Nelson hurried off toward the Strait of Gibraltar and the battle commemorated by the name of Trafalgar Square, a flower seller thrusts out a sixpenny bunch of daffodils.

As if the bright lights around Leicester square had helped coax them forth, early blossoms circle the base of a statue to England's immortal poet and playwright. Leaning on a pile of his works, his legs crossed more carelessly than a sculptor allows in the case of a general or a statesman, Shakespeare broods in the center of a theaterland whose craft he glorified.

Nerve Center of Empire

Another spot gilded by daffodils is the garden outside the Houses of Parliament, a site where monarchs ruled from Edward the Confessor to Henry VIII. Since the days of Bluff King Hal, the House of Commons has turned this Thames-side meeting place into the democratic heart of a farflung Empire.

The World war Tommy sang to Piccadilly and Leicester square, but the nerve center of the British Commonwealth is this fortress of constitutional government beside Britain's historic river.

Three centuries ago, under the Palace of Westminster, a tall fellow with auburn hair sat amid barrels of gunpowder. In a few hours King, Lords, and Commons were to meet in the hall overhead. A watch provided by Thomas Percy ticked all England closer to chaos.

The Gunpowder plot was discovered. Intervening centuries have healed the grim memory of his execution, and Guy Fawkes Day has become a children's festival, with fireworks shooting from grotesque effigies to amuse the crowd. But even yet, before the King leaves Buckingham palace to open Parliament, red-coated beefeaters search the cellars beneath this mighty pile.

On Hampstead Heath coveys of kites, their strings coiled on reels strong enough for tunny fishing, shake their tails across the heavens, while Punchinello wags has long-beaked face before those still too young to read Punch. On a hundred lakes and streams the swans stretch their long necks in begging. Down the hidden lanes of Devon, Kent, and Sussex cyclists and motorists push their explorations.

The wide expanse of Dartmoor, the coves of Cornwall, the gossamer haze of English lakes, the pilgrim places of art and architecture, of religion and literature, all have their devotees.

Yet even these alluring places, so fondly dreamed of around tea tables in paneled rooms, are hard put to keep admirers from rushing off to some display of uniforms, banners, horseflesh, or costumes—perhaps a lady of quality wearing the same gown and the same title as did a famous ancestor in the age of Queen Anne or Nell Gwyn.

At a pageant the king may sit his horse while colors that have faced enemy fire are dipped in salute, or the tale of Runnymede, built up by Roman and Dane, Plantagenet and Tudor, may be retold in one stirring afternoon beside the Thames.

In the Midlands, smoke and haze often thwart the sun, but spring arrives with the pounding of hoofs and the cries of the crowd at the Grand National Steeplechase, which determines the winners of the Irish Sweepstakes, now duplicated on Derby Day.

The course is four and one-fourth miles, with 30 jumps. Beyond any of them, all but the lead horse may land on his rivals' sky-turned hoofs instead of on billiard-cloth turf, or trample a bright-clad jockey. An Aintree steeplechaser will swerve in the middle of a leap to avoid a fallen rider, but when a dozen leapers cross Becher's Brook together, like a pony ballet pawing the footlights, there is danger aplenty and drama for all.

A few days after the race half the men who slap reins on workaday horseflesh will be clucking to their steeds in the name of the year's Grand National winner.

After this dramatic attack, spring consolidates its hold. Small parties hie away to rustic spots beloved because they are known to few. How one island can contain so many favorite picnic sites is a mystery. "Gated roads," "private" signs, and turnstiles are designed not so much to keep out beauty seekers as to keep in an air of seclusion and quiet.

Everywhere citizens move out to greet the bursting bud, the new-born lamb, the soft spring breeze along white cliffs, or welcome warmth at the foot of red-rock sun traps near the sea.

England can be grim. There is the cruel tower where Anne Roleyn's slender throat was severed by a sword and those of Catherine Howard, Lady Jane Grey, and the Earl of Essex by an ax; but London River calls us. London Tower is a scene of the nation's tragic deaths; the Thames of its birth and growth and power. Who has not heard the aphorism: "The St. Lawrence is water; the Missouri is muddy water; the Thames is liquid history"?

Cruises on The Thames

Today a well-managed excursion cruises down London River under the auspices of the Port of London Authority. Shiploads of school children and adults are carried amid the busiest portions of London's 70-mile port. They are shown through the docks that feed and furnish a nation and link this tiny island to the Empire its restless mariners won, and to the world.

Leaflets are distributed which map the course, epitomize the river's history, and list the day's portion of a thousand ships a week converging from the far corners of the earth. Through loudspeakers, intelligent guides point out where Raleigh spread his cloak for Queen Elizabeth, where the time-ball of a modest observatory marks the stride of our sphere, where Francis Drake, expecting punishment, was knighted on the Golden Hind.

Once there were more boats upon the Thames than there were hackney coaches in the streets, and magistrates from the City were rowed to Westminster. Today many travelers ignore the "most significant waterway in the world," extended by the Grand Union Canal, which makes the industrial Midlands shipping suburbs of the London docks.

Near the upper reaches of tidewater is Kew, a vast open-air nursery for plants and "a convalescent home for all sore souls." Through the Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew the rubber plantations of Malaya passed on their way from the native forests in Brazil. India's post offices could not sell Asiatic quinine to relieve the tropical fevers of countless millions until South America's cinchona tree was bequeathed to Ceylon and the Himalayas through the propagating gardens of Kew.

Kew is one of London's best-loved playgrounds, especially when young spring has ringed its little lake with fuzzy foliage and touched the widespread green with masses of gay blossoms. Bluebell, lilac, magnolia and azalea, all have their devotees.

WOMAN USES COAL BIN AS SWEATSHOP FOR GIRL WORKERS

Six Are Found at Work in Dark Cellar; Plan to Prosecute Owner.

Newark, N. J.—State Labor Commissioner John J. Toohey, Jr., announced that he planned to make an example of Mrs. Antonetta Ranaldi, fifty, who conducted a sweatshop in the dark, cramped basement of her home, employing young girls to sew neckties for a New York manufacturer.

"I have been campaigning for two years," he said, "for a sweatshop law similar to the one which is enforced in New York, where a license fee of $200 is charged for such contracting shops.

"The New York contractors advertise in foreign language newspapers and smuggle their work into Jersey at night to get it done at starvation wages."

Although Mrs. Ranaldi protested she did not know she was doing anything wrong, Mr. Toohey said he would confer with Prosecutor William Wachenfeld and ask that an indictment be sought against her under New Jersey's so-called sweatshop law.

"I was only trying to make an honest living for my family," Mrs. Ranaldi told inspectors who raided her home at 200 Thirteenth avenue. "I thought this was better than going on relief."

In the shallow six-foot cellar the inspectors found six girls at work. They were crowded into a narrow seven-by-twelve foot space which formerly had been used as a coal bin, along with two sewing machines and two electric ironers.

One Girl Her Own.

The young workers included one of Mrs. Ranaldi's three children. One girl gave her age as thirteen and the others said they were sixteen. Three were negroes.

Mrs. Ranaldi said she started the shop because her husband, a part-time employee of the Public Service corporation, was unable to make a sufficient living. She netted about $13 a week, she said, and paid the girls "a few dollars" for their work.

"They weren't worth any more; they were always falling asleep," she told Mr. Toohey.

Mr. Toohey suggested that perhaps they fell asleep because ventilation in the basement was limited to two tiny windows opening on the sidewalk level. He entered charges of violating the sweatshop law, employing minors, operating a factory without a license, and having no insurance on employees. Mrs. Ranaldo said she never heard of such regulations.

Four Tahitians Marooned for Weeks on Desert Isle

Papeete, Tahiti.—From the tiny Bellinghausen Isles comes a tale of rescued castaways, which proves there still exist islands in the South Pacific where one can be marooned for weeks. The Bellinghausen group of atolls and reefs, west of the Society Islands, is uninhabited and is visited only at rare intervals by persons gathering fallen coconuts.

Passing there recently the lookout of the steamship Port Darwin observed a man signaling for aid. Heavy seas and the dangerous tangle of reeds prevented sending a boat ashore, but the Port Darwin wirelessed the British consul at Papeete. After several weeks the schooner Denys, dropping anchor off Bellinghausen, found four Tahitian young men. They told this story:

They had been employed on the coconut plantation at Mopiha, an atoll seventy miles away. They said they were beaten and starved and determined to escape to Raiatea, another island. They put to sea in a small boat, but lost their bearings. After five days their boat was cast on a reef of Bellinghausen and broken up by the heavy surf. A fifth man drowned. Until rescued they lived on coconuts and shell fish.

Two Hungarians Fight Duel Lasting an Hour

Budapest. — The longest duel in the world was fought here recently by two society youngsters: Frederick Steuhmer, son of the Hungarian "candy king" and Geza Kiss, a civil servant.

The duel developed from a private quarrel and took place at a fencing club. It lasted an hour without interruption. The two young men lunged at each other in nineteen rounds. In the end both were so exhausted that they were unable to raise their swords and the seconds declared the duel ended. They parted friends. Both were injured on the head and chest.

Life and Death

Starvation was used as a means of a living by Herr Greiter, of Budapest, or, as he was known in the circus profession, Professor Agrippa, who was for 20 years unchallenged Hungarian champion in the starvation act. People flocked to circuses and fairs to see Professor Agrippa, sealed in a glass box, starving without food and drink for days. His record of thirty-two days in a sealed box without a bite to eat, remains unbroken.

With the world crisis came a slump in the starving profession and Professor Agrippa fell out of a job. Recently an elderly man collapsed in a Budapest street. An ambulance sped up and took him off to hospital. On the way he died. He was Professor Agrippa. Physicians who examined him in hospital pronounced that he died of — starvation. — Montreal Herald.

Not So Dumb

By LOUISE WILLIAMS

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

"SO YOU rather liked Dick Goodwin, did you? Well, Dick's not bad—but he's something of a nut. He doesn't get far with any of us girls."

Kitty Draper's twenty-year-old hostess, Dorothy Blaine, looked with an expression of mild compassion on her guest as they sat in the living room of the Blaine summer home after the Sunday afternoon tea party when Dorothy had introduced her guest to the young men and girls with whom she "played round" during the summer. Kitty was twenty—she ought to be a better judge. Now, of all the men she had met the one she mentioned specially was Dick Goodwin. Just another proof of Kitty's deficiency. Kitty was a dear and rather pretty, but still really a little dumb.

Kitty tried to defend herself. "I didn't say I was crazy about Dick Goodwin. You asked me which one of the men I liked most, and I just said that I had had a very interesting conversation with him. We got to talking about hobbies and he mentioned the fact that he was interested in geology. So he talked about geology—"

"Dick would talk about geology. Meets a pretty girl for the first time—a girl who is willing to talk with him—and he talks about geology. That's really precious. Didn't I say he was a nut?"

"But why shouldn't a man talk about geology—if he's interested in it?"

"Doesn't have to talk about anything, silly—that way. I mean, at a tea party like this a man's just expected to sort of kid and — oh, you know—banter—light talk."

Meantime Dick had been driven home in one of his own cars with the Hurley girls, Rodney Steele, Ben and Margery Kelly and Stella Bates. Wedged in the back seat between Margery and Stella he was listening in some surprise to comments made about Kitty.

"Oh she's pretty enough," babbled Margery, "and I hear she has quite a bit of money in her own name, and she can dance well and all that. I see what Dorothy means, though—she is dumb."

"What do you mean, dumb?" asked Dick in surprise.

"Just dumb. You know what I mean," Margery said.

At first Dick's interest in the dumbness of Kitty was quite selfish. Here was a girl that had struck him as entirely charming. She had money, which wasn't anything to him because Dick happened to have enough of that commodity himself. Still it would have weight, he knew, with Ben and Rodney and their confreres. He had noticed that the men did not hover around her as they did some of the other girls and now they explained that this was because of some characteristic which in their lingo was indicated by "dumbness."

The next week was crowded with beach suppers, hatless, breathless motor drives along the curving shore road—sunny hours of swimming and tennis and later hours of dancing and card playing. Besides for Kitty and Dick there was a geological survey up the side of a hill five miles inland, arranged for six o'clock one morning so that it might not conflict with the program arranged by Dorothy for Kitty's entertainment.

To ask a girl to go pebble hunting at six o'clock in the morning was further proof that Dick was a nut—and of course any girl who would consider such an invitation in the light of anything but a joke was hopelessly dumb. Still in one way both Dick and Kitty were popular. It was Dick who always found it convenient to "change a bill" when the crowd had stopped at a roadside inn for refreshments. His two new cars were always ready for anyone who wanted to drive them. And Kitty just happened to have all sorts of pretty new clothes, parasols, bathing suits, shawls and scarfs that she would so much rather have one of the other girls wear than to bother wearing herself.

Two weeks later, after Kitty had gone home and Dick and Rodney and most of the other men had gone back to the city after their summer holidays, Ben and Margery Kelly, lingering on the beach with Dorothy, discussed Kitty.

"I know Kitty wouldn't mind my telling you of her engagement," said Margery. "I suppose everyone guessed it anyway. Kitty's immature and rather dumb, but she's a nice girl—"

"Maybe she's not so dumb after all," suggested Ben. "She did quick work with Dick all right. And Dick's a decent fellow and he's got a lot of money even if he is a nut—"

"I don't know whether Dick is such a nut anyway," observed Katherine. "He was chosen out of two or three hundred applicants as head of some geological survey from college. You said yourself he was the one fellow in the crowd who was likely to make his name in the world."

"Well, of course, there's that," said Ben indolently, but he was thinking neither of Kitty nor Dick — rather wondering to himself whether in all the world there was a more deliciously fashioned pair of lips than those of Dorothy Blaine.

HAIL CAUSES HEAVY LOSSES EVERY YEAR

"Ice From the Sky" Described by Authority.

New York.—That hail causes damage running into millions of dollars annually, many people may know. That it has sometimes changed the course of history, others may know. But what is hail! That few know the correct answer to this question, is safe to assert. To most people, anything that descends from the skies in icy form is hail. But is it!

"The biggest hailstone thus far on record for the United States fell at Potter, Cheyenne County, Nebraska, July 6, 1928. It was 17 inches in circumference and weighed a pound and a half," according to Charles Fitzhugh Talman, who, in "Natural History," published by the American Museum, writes about ice from the skies.

Big Ones in India.

"India is the home of big hailstorms and of big tales concerning them. Many of these storms have cost from half a dozen to a dozen human lives, one is supposed to have killed 84 people, and another is known to have killed three times that number." Mr. Talman adds that Indian hailstones assume remarkable sizes, but he does not take too seriously the report of one said to have been the size of an elephant, which took three days to melt.

"Judging from the meager data we possess concerning the maximum violence of thunderstorm updrafts, it would seem that something less than five pounds is the extreme possible weight of a hailstone, while a two-pound hailstone would deserve a place in a museum if it could be preserved there.

"A hailstorm is always confined to a relatively small area — much smaller than that of the thunderstorm of which it is an episode—though its narrow track may be hundreds of miles in length. Thus it happens that although a great many destructive hailstorms occur every year, the majority of human beings never experience one in the course of their lives.

Heavy Damage Yearly.

"According to an estimate that has become rooted in statistical literature, though it is probably much too small, hail causes throughout the world losses averaging about $200,000,000 a year. In the United States an estimate by V. N. Valgren, of the Department of Agriculture, based upon an 11 year record, indicates that the losses on the ten leading agricultural crops of this country average $47,500,000 a year."

Mr. Talman also gives an account of a great hailstorm in April, 1360, which assailed the army of Edward II, then in France attempting to take Paris, and forced him to make peace. "The chronicles of the time," says Mr. Talman, "place the English losses at 1,000 men and 6,000 horses; probably an exaggeration." In any event, Edward sued for peace and so the course of human history was changed by a hailstorm.

Big Boom Is Started in Australia Gold Fields

Sydney.—Australia again is enjoying a slight recrudescence of her early gold rush and gold finding days.

The most recent and important development has been on the famous Cape York peninsula, which was once the center of Australian gold fields. A single return there recently brought $28,000 from forty tons of stone.

Present indications are that the old fields will be worked over again, due to the increased value of gold.

In other parts of Australia nuggets of considerable value are being found. Stuart Hurnall, on his father's ranch near Ararat, Victoria, plowed up a 100 ounce nugget valued at $4,250.

It was on the same field that an 82 ounce nugget was found forty-eight years ago and only sixty feet from the present find.

Science Calls on Cats to Run Out the Rats

Bloomfield, N. J.—When rats invaded the General Electric plant here officials checked over their scientific equipment and found nothing to cope with the situation. So they petitioned the city pound for help.

Safety Rule Keeps Patrol Off Roads

Newburyport, Mass.—No matter who it hits, police have to enforce the edict that automobiles cannot be operated on Massachusetts highways without an O. K. sticker.

So Newburyport police had to keep their patrol wagon in the garage because it needed $70 worth of repairs to make its equipment safe. Mayor Andrew J. ("Bossy") Gillis did not appropriate enough money this year.

City Marshal James E. Sullivan laments that the patrol wagon is "falling to pieces"—and it has only gone 200,000 miles.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By L. L. STEVENSON

Stocks of the highest priced florists in the city and those of street peddlers who sell blooms for a few cents each both come from the same place. Of the city's 80 or so wholesale floral establishments, all save two are on Sixth avenue, or within a stone's throw of it, between Twenty-sixth and Twenty-eighth streets. Twenty-eighth street is the real floral capital of the town. On it, east and west of Sixth avenue, are 43 wholesale floral establishments, including one big market that houses 10 firms. A number, of course, are small establishments, which do both a wholesale and a retail business. Most, however, confine their attention to the wholesale trade. Some are specialists, dealing only in greenery of various sorts. On the whole, flowers in season play the biggest part in the business, though often out of season specials may be noted in the window signs.

* * *

Stocks come from all over the country, from the far South and the far West, with nearby growers in New Jersey and Pennsylvania furnishing the most. Rare blooms may be seen side by side with flowers of the gardens. There is little or no attempt at display. Flowers to the dealers are merely commodities—highly perishable, but commodities nevertheless. They are handled on commission as are onions and potatoes. Business starts at about 6 o'clock in the morning and continues briskly until 8. Friday, Saturday and Monday are the big days. In fact, at certain seasons of the year, almost all the business of the market is transacted on those days.

* * *

Time plays an important part in the flower business. It explains why there are days when roses may be purchased for five cents a dozen on New York's street. Roses that go to Park avenue in the early morning, later in the day may find their way to the subway. They are the same varieties and come from the same growers especially in summer, when roses cannot be held overnight. So those still in stock late in the day are bought by peddlers at bargain prices. Speaking of roses, learned that the well-known American Beauty is no longer grown. The reason is that it couldn't always be depended upon to flower so other long - stemmed varieties have taken its place.

* * *

Flowers come into New York now by the car and truckload. The business runs into the millions each year since New York purchases more flowers than any other city in the country. There are firms in the district, however, that go back to the days when their stocks were brought in by the basketful. In those times, the flower market was at 2 in the morning.

* * *

In many of the markets, discarded, broken or wilted blooms fairly carpet the floors. They are held not to be worth picking up and are merely swept away when business is slack enough for the opportunity. In the days of the flu epidemic during the war, that did not hold true. So great was the flower shortage then that discarded stock was gathered up and sold for at least a nickel a flower.

* * *

Eleven florists supply shops also are located in the wholesale flower district. Intricate designs for set pieces, or rather the frames for them, are available in almost unbelievable variety. For instance, it is possible to purchase a model which when properly decked out turns into an ocean liner. Floral cottages as well as floral musical instruments are also available.

Repays His Relief Cash After He Gets Job Back

Paterson, N. J., — Amir Hossan, forty-seven year old Arabian born dye worker, has paid in full what he regards a debt to the city's emergency relief department.

Hossan, during a period of unemployment, received checks totaling $29.10 from James O'Gorman, overseer of the poor. He took the money under protest. Last month when he obtained employment he turned over $10 from his first pay check to O'Gorman with the promise that he would pay the remainder as soon as possible. Later Hossan cleared up the balance of $19.10.

Salute From the New to Old in Transportation

This remarkable photograph was obtained at Pendleton, Ore., as a high-speed twin-engined transport plane of United Air Lines soared over a mule-freighter bound for the Pendleton Round Up. The plane, with its 1100 "horses," has a top speed of 202 miles an hour; the freighter, pulled by 12 mules, does well to cover four miles an hour. Planes operating between the Pacific Northwest, Midwest, and East follow the old historic Oregon Trail formerly used by covered wagons, stage-coaches and freighters.

BEDTIME STORY by Thornton W. Burgess

BILLY MINK POSSESSES THE WANDERING FOOT

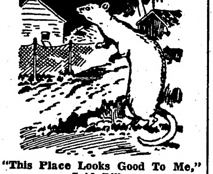
WHEN a person becomes uneasy and cannot settle in one place for any length of time, but wants to keep traveling, he is said to be possessed of the wandering foot. This means that he wants to wander about in search of new scenes and new adventures. To put it very plainly, he becomes a sort of tramp.

You remember that when Billy Mink discovered the traps along the Laughing Brook he decided that he would go visiting for a while. For some time he had felt a desire to go visiting. These traps gave him a real excuse for so doing. So Billy had turned his back on the Laughing Brook and started for another brook some distance away. He had not intended to go farther than this brook. But when he got there he found that the fishing was not as good as he had hoped it would be, so he decided to keep on moving until he found a place where food was plentiful, and he would be contented for a while.



"This Place Looks Good To Me," Said Billy.

Now, while Billy Mink is a great lover of the water and is almost as much at home in it as Jerry Muskrat, he is equally at home on land. In fact, Billy often wanders long distances from water. He believes in variety and there are times when he would rather hunt than fish. He is a very good hunter, as many a mouse and bird has found out too late.

So, leaving the brook where the fishing was poor, Billy started off across country for nowhere in particular. He is one of the most independent of all the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows. He never worries over where the next meal is coming from. He feels quite capable of taking care of himself wherever he may be. No one understands the art of hiding any better than does Billy Mink. He is quick as a flash, and the way he can disappear when apparently there is nothing to hide under is astonishing.

So Billy wandered about aimlessly just having a good time. He traveled mostly at night, though occasionally he became restless during the day and continued his journey then. In the Green Forest he hunted wood mice and grouse. In the open meadow land he hunted meadow mice. When he came to a brook he went fishing. So, at last, his wanderings brought him to a farmyard. There was a big barn there. Also there was a henhouse containing many hens. Between the henhouse and the barn was a big woodpile. At the sight of that woodpile Billy grinned. That was just the sort of a place he liked. You know he is so slim that he can slip through very small places, and he would be quite safe.

"This place looks good to me," said Billy, "I think I'll stay a while."

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

HINTS FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

WHEN buying meat see that it it is of good color and well mottled with fat.

A fresh fish will be bright of eye and firm of flesh with the odor sweet.

Use nuts in a loaf to take the place of meat. They are highly nourishing and are fine for all sorts of dishes.

If you have a neighbor who is using cake at about the same rate that your family does, why not exchange halves of cakes as two neighborly women do. Thus having a fresh half of cake with no work and no leftover to disturb the conscience.

When making mush for supper, prepare enough for frying for breakfast; everybody likes fried mush with sirup. Pour the hot mush into greased baking powder cans, kept for the purpose. When cold it slices without waste or crumbling.

When food scorches while cooking, set the dish in another of cold water—the steam rising from the food will dissipate the scorched flavor if it is not really burned.

To remove burned food from a dish without scratching, add soda to cold water and simmer until the food is softened.

Aluminum dishes which have been scraped will always have rough spots to catch food and cause burning. They should be rebuffed or they will always burn easily.

Lettuce, endive and such crisp green foods should be served at once after the dressing is added as they wilt readily. Keep lettuce well washed, in a thin bag of cheesecloth in the ice chest. It will be ready at a moment's notice to supply the salad.

With raw fruits and vegetables so popular, did you ever try using fresh young turnips cut on the coarse grater or shredder, also young uncooked beets, served on lettuce with a snappy dressing, either french or boiled? Sprinkle with fresh grated coconut, add a bit of sugar and you will have one of the prettiest of salads and it will taste very good, too.

Chicago's Jail Is Made Escape-Proof

Cook county jail in Chicago, where many notorious gangsters found temporary lodging during the bootleg era, is being made into a model fortress. New bullet-proof cages, manned by guards equipped with tear gas, rifles and machine guns, command all entrances and exits. Jail Officer Philip Pawlowski, shown above, keeps an alert watch on the lobby of the jail from his revolving seat in the five-windowed machine gun cage facing the exit to the street and the entrance to the cells.

THE UPWARD LOOK

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

SEEING the rose, I saw a vine
About a mighty trunk entwine,
And found the trunk to be a pine.

And looking up, to see how high
The tree above me, then my eye
Beheld beyond the tree the sky.

And yet we think some holy deed
Of ours the world will never heed,
So small the matter, great the need.

Yet I, who first beheld the rose,
The vine, and then the tree that grows,
Saw Heaven itself its gates unclose.

So has some little deed sufficed
To lift some soul by sin enticed,
Until it looked, and saw the Christ.

THE LANGUAGE OF YOUR HAND

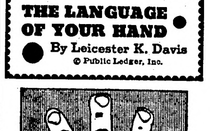
By Leicester K. Davis

© Public Ledger, Inc.



WHEN beginning an analysis of a hand to place its type, be sure to note all the characteristics which make it a distinct type. Note the general shape and conformation, whether short, thick-set, wide or narrow. Note the width of palm, the length and formation of fingers and thumb, whether they are straight, knotted or tapered. The first of the seven types of hands follows:

First. The Primal Type of Hand.

The outstanding characteristic of this type is its short, thick-set appearance. The fingers are stubby and rather clumsy looking. The thumb is extremely short, low set, heavy and often "Clubbed" on the side opposite the nail. The nail joint is often abnormally short and wide.

The palm and underside portions of fingers of this type are always heavily fleshed and when partially folded become pillowed by broad, deep creases.

One would be quite safe in placing the possessor of a hand of true primal type as one who is apt to find more satisfaction in material affairs than in the spiritual, esthetic or sentimental aspects of life.

All things being equal, a primal type of hand indicates pretty surely that the occupation chosen by its owner should be of a kind that calls for manual dexterity rather than concentration or analysis.

A stiff thumb on the primal type of hand is positive indication of a stubborn and overbearing will that is apt to have its own way without counting the costs or the feelings of others. If, however, the thumb may be bent backward with little tension, there is equally positive indication that its owner is very much inclined toward indolence, irresponsibility and extravagance.

Bitsy Grant Alone Supplies Thrills to Modern Tennis

PERHAPS it is because little guys must stick together or get stuck by an unappreciative world. Anyhow the word picture that was to be painted here is all jumbled up. Every time I try to daub the paper with some pretty phrase concerning the flame-tipped racquets of such tennis genii as Helen Jacobs and Fred Perry the result somehow comes out differently. Somehow I always come up with the sharp outlines of a fighting gentleman from Georgia—Bitsy Grant.

It is a most distressing situation. After witnessing the national championship at Forest Hills, a while back, I got loaded with all sorts of other information. I know that the tall, blonde Alice Marble has enough strokes to win a title, but that she has not yet achieved the proper match temperament. I can gab with the best of the experts about Donald Budge's equipment.

Bitsy Grant

I can tip off one of those antiperspiration companies that they have a good prospect in Perry. I can argue why the worst tournament in years brought out the best crowds. I can suggest that was because the celebrated gentleman conducting the affair introduced some new performers for a change. I know that Mrs. Molla Mallory is almost as active as a spectator as she was as a player and that she tried sitting on nine different chairs in the course of 75 minutes during one afternoon. But still there's the gent from Georgia.

I can wise up the gents who don't go to tennis matches, too, that they are missing something. That — although tennis no longer seems to turn out such excitable sisters as Mlle. Lenglen—the girls are far prettier than they were a few seasons ago.

It's Polite to Applaud Other Fellow's Error

I know that tennis still is the only sport where the polite thing to do is to applaud some unfortunate fellow's error. I suspect that if I were a linesman and one of the boys or girls tossed a point just to show what he or she thought of my bad judgment, I'd hand him or her a couple of the best where it would do the most good.

I know that Helen Jacobs wears a gold chain on her left wrist while playing and that Miss Marble is adorned with a wrist watch. If I were Miss Pedersen I would wear shorts that did not bag around my knees. If I were one of those khakiclad stalwarts who seem to do nothing all day long save take down nets, and then put them up again, I'd come out swinging a racquet some day just to see what would happen to the frozen faces of the elect.

I know that Frankie Parker needs a long rest so that he can get in such physical shape that he no longer needs to waft over those soft serves. I know that the ball boys get paid 75 cents a match and that some of them make as high as $25 during the tournament. I suspect that nose specialists, who see the way Perry keeps his mouth open while playing, immediately begin squirming because they want to operate on that long beak for adenoids.

I—but, as has been mentioned before, such items leave me cold. Until waning strength and Big Bill Tilden finally took the play away from him, and he retired, I used to go to tennis affairs to watch a frail little guy named Bill Johnston. Tennis did not seem then—as too often since—a dead-panned comedy of manners. Instead pulses ever strummed faster while that blazing inner urge with which few humans are blessed made Little Bill's scrawny muscles perform the impossible.

Now—for all that I would not give one Dodger double-header for all the tennis of the season—I again am willing to pay to get into the park. Tennis is a game where tall, strong and rangy men ever will meet with most success and Bitsy Grant probably would have to stand on tiptoes to look Rabbit Maranville in the eyes.

Yet—but come to think of it, maybe that really is why I like to watch this tiny gee.

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

NOT a soul seems to have noted that Princeton Football Professor Fritz Crisler is wearing specs for the first time this autumn . . . Could there be any McCoy to the gossip that Pie Traynor will be elevated to an office berth and Rogers Hornsby will become manager of the Pirates?

That World Series gold will be appreciated by Joe Glenn of the Yankee catching department. A little Joe is due almost any day now . . . Jack Ogden, the former Swarthmore collegian who has business-managed the Orioles so capably that Baltimore again is a good baseball town, would bear watching by big time basketball promoters. The University of Baltimore five, which he coaches during the winter, is composed mainly of New York boys and might make a very good Garden or Hippodrome attraction . . . Yale undergraduates, who were very vexed a few springs ago because Johnny Broaca (now of the Yankees) would not wear out his arm for the Alma Momsie, now have a similar peeve. His coach at Andover said that Prec Little was the best schoolboy end he had ever seen. But Prec just can't be bothered with coming out for the Eli squad.

Ball players say the real reason why that "young" Cincinnati team did so well this year is that most of the hitting, fielding and pitching was supplied by Kiki Cuyler, Ernie Lombardi, Tommy Thevenow, Babe Herman, Paul Derringer and one or two others who just missed voting for Lincoln . . . One of Giant Secretary Eddie Brannick's proudest memories is that in 1918 he won $27 from various Giants by betting he could stand on the left field foul line at Baker Bowl and throw a ball over the center field fence. The heave traveled more than 300 feet and cleared the high wall of the Philly park with plenty to spare.

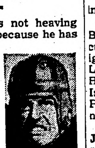
Why Shakespeare Isn't Heaving Pro Passes

Bill Shakespeare is not heaving pro passes this year because he has too swell a job as assistant to the secretary of a railroad . . . That celebrated weekly magazine which last year fell for the bookie blarney that the pari mutuels are unbeatable should look up a citizen named Horace Paul. Whisperers have it that he would run a mile before investing a nickel in a track book. But that he reaps a fortune each season playing against the machines . . . Although his football teams do not always elate Syracuse old grads, Coach Vic Hanson is tops with the town kids. That is because he operates a children's summer camp on the lake outside the city . . . Lou Ambers believes that one reason why he performed so capably while winning the lightweight title recently is that he finally learned to relax before a bout. He used to be so restless that he would wander about town or go from movie to movie on the afternoon when he had an important bout coming up. This time he went to bed and really slept.



Bill Shakespeare

Luck has played a miserable trick on a Fordham youngster. The boy is the best passer on the Ram football squad but his eyes have failed so badly that he cannot pick out his targets and has even worse luck on pass defense . . . Frank Crosetti and Arndt Jorgens of the Yankees do their best to see that Mr. Rockefeller gets along all right. Each fair evening they can be found eating in style, and out of doors, in his Radio City sunken gardens . . . Cardinal First Baseman Rip Collins is one of the most diligent of autograph signers. He never refuses . . . Although he has been one of the most successful photographers of race horses for 35 years, C. C. Cook seldom bets on the ponies.

A thought that should be preserved was uttered long ago by Rudolph Spreckels, the multi-millionaire turfman and sugar king. Talking to a young bettor who had more hopes than money, he inquired "How can you expect to bring up a family on horses' noses?" . . . It is somewhat out of line with the quoted statement of Mr. Herbert Bayard Swope in a town where 2 to 5 favorites so often meet with misfortune. The racing commission chairman is quoted as saying that the races never ruined anybody.

Players say the real trouble with Babe Dahlgren, the nifty fielder who will get another chance at the Red Sox first sack next season, is not weak hitting. He thinks wrong and not often enough, they testify . . . A very pretty feud will have some more innings if Jocko Conlon is added to the American league umpiring staff next year. He and Lou Gehrig never could get along . . . If Jack Dobson, son of the Maryland coach, did not have a knee injury which probably will prevent him from playing again, Army might be displaying another All-America back.

Pampero seems to be a lucky name for Argentine ponies. Jack Nelson, who sold a big brown with that name to Winston Guest in 1931, now has a similarly tagged small chestnut he expects to peddle for plenty.

Expert Offers Hint for Soothing Snakes

Dallas, Texas. — Best method of winning a rattlesnake's friendship—if his friendship is desired—is to treat him gently and even scratch the back of his neck, Jack Raymon, Chicago herpetologist, advises.

There is nothing that annoys a rattler more than quick movements, the reptile authority said. By easy, gentle handling the snake can be made into a friend in three or four weeks.

As for the nonpoisonous snakes, they are companionable creatures, he said, and writhe contentedly in the hands of a handler after 30 minutes.

NARCOTIC DRIVE IS STARTED BY T-MEN

Custom Agency Men Will Be Reorganized.

Washington. — The Treasury department, flush with its success against rum smugglers, has now opened a drive against narcotic smugglers. To this end, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau announced that customs border patrols would be reorganized into one centrally headed unit.

The custom agency service, numbering 570 men, will be divided into four districts encompassing the nation's land and water boundaries. District chiefs will be placed under the immediate supervision of Harvery A. Benner, deputy commissioner of customs. Benner's offices are in Washington. In the past the border patrols have been under the jurisdiction of the various customs collectors in a large number of districts.

"We are going to hit narcotics smuggling as hard as we hit liquor smuggling," said Mr. Morgenthau, "particularly on the Pacific coast where it is most prevalent."

The new patrol will be divided into the following districts:

Northeast patrol, headquarters, Buffalo, N. Y., to include the present customs collection districts of Michigan, Ohio, Buffalo, Rochester, St. Lawrence, Vermont, Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Philadelphia, Maryland and Virginia.

Southeast patrol, headquarters, Jacksonville, Fla., to take in the present districts of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Mobile and New Orleans.

Southwest patrol, headquarters, El Paso, Texas, to take in the districts of Sabine, Galveston, San Antonio, El Paso, Arizona, San Diego, Los Angeles, and San Francisco.

Northwest patrol headquarters, Havre, Mont., to include the districts of Oregon, Washington, Montana, Idaho, North Dakota, Duluth, Superior and Wisconsin.

Boys Menaced by Sharks; Capture One as Proof

Frisco, N. C.—Two thirteen-year-old boys related a tale of how they battled a school of maddened sharks from a rowboat, bagged one, escaped, and displayed the big fish to prove their story.

The boys, James Mitchell-Hedges, son of F. A. Mitchell-Hedges, an explorer and big game fisherman, and Raymond McHenry, set out in the shallow waters of Pamlico sound off Hatters island towing a rowboat. They waded out to a net they had set about 100 yards off shore.

One boy spied a triangular fin cutting through the water toward them. They hopped into the boat. They said the fish smashed the bow of the boat and tore the beading off the sides.

The shark left but soon came back with ten others which swam around the boat. One shark finally became enmeshed in the net. The boys rowed for shore, towing the imprisoned shark. It measured 11 feet and weighed approximately 700 pounds.

Tipsy Chipmunk Chases Fox Squirrel Up Tree

Spokane, Wash.—Deputies raiding a moonshine still on Mount Spokane found a colony of chipmunks quaffing of the dumped mash, chirruping, and chattering merrily. The officers were amazed, however, when one chipmunk broke from the party suddenly and chased a fox squirrel up a tree.

Pig Gets Jail Home

Steubenville, Ohio.—Sergt. Mat Phillips, keeper of the jail here, had a pig for an inmate. The 540-pound porker toppled from a livestock truck, and the only place the police sergeant had to keep the animal, until someone came to claim it, was in a cell.

Pheasant Hitches Ride

Farmington, Conn.—Now comes the hitch-hiking pheasant. This bird hopped into George Shaw's automobile on New Park avenue and rode blithely to the next stop, much to the amusement of the family dog who had a reserved seat in front.

Opossum Has Keen Scent

The opossum's keen scent tells where to look for the kind of food it likes. This mammal, a marsupial, is numerous in some sections of the country.

SYNOPSIS

Kezia Marsh, pretty, selfish and twenty, arrives home in Corinth from school and is met by her older brother, Hugh. He drives her to the Marsh home where her widowed mother, Fluvanna, a warm-hearted, self-sacrificing and understanding soul, welcomes her. Kezia's sister, Margery, plump and matronly with the care of three children, is at lunch with them. Hugh's wife, Dorrie, has pleaded a previous engagement. On the way back to his job at the steel plant founded by one of his forebears, Hugh passes Doc Hiller, a boyhood friend whom he no longer sees frequently because of Dorrie's antipathy. Fluvanna Marsh wakens the next morning from a dream about her late husband, Jim, whose unstable character she fears Kezia has inherited. Soon Ellen Pendleton comes over. She is an artistically inclined girl who is a distant niece of Fluvanna's and a favorite of Hugh's. She happily tells Fluvanna she has become engaged to Jerry Purdue. Ellen fears that her father and mother, Gavin and Lizzie, will not approve the match.

CHAPTER II—Continued

—4—

"So then——?"

"I'm going to throw a big dinner, have them all this Friday night. Suit you?"

Hugh hesitated.

"You'd like it, wouldn't you?" she challenged.

"I'd like having them here of course, but I wish it were because you wanted them. Not a concession to my feelings."

Dorrie turned her head to one side and looked at the willow tree. After a moment she said with slow sulkiness: "You'd better take it the way I do it."

He watched her with puzzled pain, watched her until he saw the coldness melt from her face, and another emotion come over it. She said in a faint voice, "You're worth a dozen of me, Hugh."

He was relieved. "What's brought this on?" he inquired laughing.

She shook her head. "Call it a mood."

"Forget it, Dorrie. You can be pretty sweet yourself!" He felt suddenly happy. She was chary with admissions of feeling. He never knew exactly how deep her feeling for him was. The occasional glimpses into her mind, when she grew introspective as tonight, were rare and accordingly precious.

The western light had entirely faded. The dusk ringed her around with magic. Her pale green dress shimmered like moonlight. A night-hawk wheeled restlessly overhead, uttering a raucous cry. Hugh, whose passionate feeling for her had never dimmed, felt her enchantment heighten, surround him with a mystical contentment, and yearning.

His eyes held hers. "You're lovely," he said on a breath.

"Thank you," she murmured, smiling.

The telephone tinkled inside the house.

"I'll go," said Dorrie, sliding off the chaise longue.

She never walked briskly, but when she came back she moved with more animation than was her wont.

"It's the Whitneys," she announced. "They want us to go out to Freeland Farms and dance."

Hugh gave a regretful look at the yard, bowered in bush and vine, at the moon, climbing now, a shimmering globe above the trees. "Sort of nice here," he commented.

She stood there, waiting for him to say more. The expression of her face was veiled, but he felt a vitality flow from her, a current of something indefinable.

"Do you want to go?"

"That's for you to decide," she answered almost coldly.

He took her attitude for reproach. He stretched his arms lazily. "Tell them, we'll go. Coming for us?"

"Yes. Can you be ready in ten minutes?"

He nodded. "But we won't stay late, remember! I have a job to hold down—if Cun hasn't."

She started for the house, then turned her head with her secret smile. "You always say that—'we won't stay late, remember'!"

"But we always do!"

She vanished in the rear door.

The Whitneys. Dancing. At least it wasn't bridge which had become so complicated lately with the new scoring and new systems which people quoted so confusingly.

Freeland Farms—always a crowd. The floor too small. But Dorrie wanted to go. . . .

"Hugh."

"Coming." He rose from his chair reluctantly.

Cun Whitney was of medium height, florid, and with curly brown hair. He was cheerful, talkative, and had an amazing vitality. He was restless, liked to go places, be with people; he was full of visionary schemes for making money which he never followed through. He was an excellent salesman, succeeding through sheer charm of manner and enthusiasm, but had been out of work since the November before. He was thoughtful and kind to his friends, and when Hugh had been laid up with influenza the winter before, had sat up with him all one night.

Joan was small, with an olive complexion, straight black hair which she dressed severely, and great smoky gray eyes with thick-black lashes.

"Hurry up," she called as Hugh and Dorrie came down the walk, "we're simply bursting to tell you the news!"

"What news?" asked Hugh. "Did the old man come through?"

"Right the first time!"

"Congratulations!" cried Hugh, climbing into the car. "Wonderful," said Dorrie.

"He has a job with the Crescent people and starts work the first of the month!"

"You see how glad she is to be rid of me!" complained Cun. "Sick of having me underfoot around the house!"

"You weren't at home much! You went down town every day," flashed Joan.

"Will you have to travel, Cun?" asked Dorrie.

"More or less—several days a week. And they came to my figure!— which is important."

"We'll look after Jonny for you when you're away — take her around. Eh, Dorrie?"

"Of course."

Joan's elation gave a lilt to her quiet voice. "It's the most glorious feeling! Almost worth the agony of suspense for eight months to experience it. Although I must say Cun was marvelous about it—always cheerful."

"Always marvelous!" said Cun. "I was the one who was afraid—afraid of his——"

Cun, as he drove, looked back over his shoulder. "Go ahead and spill it. What were you afraid of? My sinking into bad habits?"

"Oh, keep quiet."

Cun laughed and nodded. "You see, no confidence in me at all!—and from one who knows me best! Anyhow we're here, and it's a grand night and we're all good fellows! I felt like a celebration and told her to call you up. I knew Hugh would curse. But a little night-life is good for you, you old stick-in-the-mud!"

"You'd Better Take It the Way I Do It."

"We're not to be out late!" called Dorrie, mockingly. "Husband's orders! Just before we started!"

They found a table near an open window at the Freeland Farms, an old country mansion which had been turned into a road house. The space for dancing was limited, and waiters zigzagged and retreated with their laden trays, to avoid the swaying couples. It was not so hot as Hugh had expected; a breeze came in from the west; the room had good ventilation, extending up two stories with windows near the roof.

Hugh saw Ellen Pendleton across the room seated at a table with Jerry Purdue. The drama of their preoccupation with each other drifted through the noise and cigarette smoke. Ellen's face was flushed, her eyes were luminous as she toyed with her food and listened to Jerry propound some theory. Isolation enfolded them in the midst of the crowd.

He touched Dorrie's arm. "See Ellen with young Purdue?"

She smiled and nodded. "He looks the sort she'd fall for, lean and dark—with a way!" She explained to the others, "Hugh's favorite cousin with her young man."

"A cousin?" said Cun. "Alibi?"

Joan fanned herself with the menu. "Don't you know Hugh's related to all the Pendletons? That's Gavin's daughter, Ellen."

"I vow the whole town's a cousin to Hugh," said Dorrie languidly. "Hard to have any personal conversation. I never dare express an opinion of anyone I meet for fear of insulting a connection. Ellen is third or fourth in degree—what is it, Hugh?"

"About that. Great-grandfathers were brothers."

"Still they call it cousin! She studied art for a couple of years. Paints very well they say."

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Lloyd George Vs. Pershing.

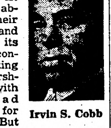
VERNALIS, CALIF. — That shell of a once great mentality which is David Lloyd George may be right when he says in his latest book that Gen. John Pershing "was quivering with suspicion that the British and French meant to rob him of his army."

A correspondent in France in 1918, I happen to know that that was exactly what the British and French did try to do — to break up the A. E. F.'s divisions for absorption into their own commands and thereby destroy its integrity as a consolidated fighting force, and if Pershing "quivered with suspicion" he had ample grounds for his suspicion. But he didn't quiver from any other emotions—not so as you'd notice it.



Irvin S. Cobb

After all our bragging about efficiency, we did slip in the matters of ordnance, airplanes, tanks, and, during the first few months, in transport service at the front. But there were certain elements in which we never failed — in man power and manhood and manly courage.

• • •

Uncle Sam in the Lion's Den.

EXCLUDING Britons and Scandinavians, ours remains almost the only important white race that hasn't a dictatorship or worse. And the high tide of communism laps these shores, which once we thought were insulated by time and distance against evil alien contacts.

We still stand aloof from entangling foreign alliances despite pressure from within and without, but no longer may we bar treasonable foreign propaganda — not with science making duck-ponds out of oceans. Moreover, sundry great powers work to turn out warplanes capable of spanning a sea or a continent on a single hostile dash.

Isn't it about time we realized—we, the foolish virgin amongst the nations, we who once fondly fancied this land was protected by its hemispheric isolation — that we're just about as isolated as Daniel was in the lion's den?

Benevolence in Reverse.

BY EDICT Japan has deleted from her dictionary all mention of the "war." To the Koreans and the Chinese and the Manchurians these should indeed be tidings of great joy— to find out what's been violently happening to them was merely a benevolent brand of peace.

Even so, it's barely possible that some of the survivors of this neighborly friendship may still be like the distinguished American actor—I think it was Jack Barrymore—who went to a luncheon where the guest of honor, a notable from foreign parts, was, as the saying goes, rather chucking his weight about.

So Barrymore leaned over to a tablemate and whispered: "The gentleman seems to be something of a formidable ass, doesn't he?"

"Oh, oh, I wouldn't go so far as to say that," said the other.

"Well, at least," murmured Barrymore, "he'll do till one comes."

• • •

Great American Pests.

WHEN he's not working at his regular trade, I know now what becomes of the gentleman with the brainpan development of a Potomac shad who makes a business of sitting at the ringside and yelling to some poor dub of a pugilist, while the latter is being whipped into a custard, "Go on, kid—he can't hurt you."

To show the other side of his nature, this party attends picture theaters and hisses madly as the likeness of the opposition presidential candidate is flashed on the screen.

Statistics show that his breed already numbers nearly two millions and is constantly increasing because, owing to a regrettable oversight of nature, this species spawns close to shore and the hatch all live.

Bodily Requirements

Our bodily requirements call for very much larger quantities of air than of food or water. The average food consumption is three pounds of food per person and water consumption four pounds, while the air we breathe in the course of a day weighs thirty-four pounds. This vast amount of air we breathe contains much more than the principal constituent gases, oxygen and nitrogen. It carries germs, mineral dust, smoke, pollen, organic particles.

Fort Knox, Maine

Fort Knox is in the town of Prospect, Me., across the river from Bucksport. It was started in 1846 but was not completed until 1886. Its purpose was to protect the headwaters of the Penobscot river. During the Spanish-American war the fort was used as a training camp for soldiers. It is the property of the state of Maine, by a gift deed from the government.

Scientist-Sleuths View Indian City Visited by De Soto

Ancient Louisiana Site Was Capital of Tribes

New Orleans.—A great Indian capital in Louisiana, visited by Hernando de Soto in 1542 in his weary quest for gold, has been explored to its depths by scientific excavators.

The modern archaeologists, seeking prehistory rather than gold, have better success to report than the Spaniards had.

Digging has revealed the career of one of the largest Indian "cities" east of the Mississippi. The great mound which has been explored was once built to a height of 80 feet, making it perhaps the highest Indian mound in the South.

A number of technical reasons for believing that this site is most probably the important Indian capital of Anilco, are found by Winslow M. Walker who explored the mound for the Smithsonian institution.

Was Thriving Community.

Accounts from Spanish conquest times describe this city as having about 400 good houses, with a beautiful square in the middle. The corn fields bore abundantly, and there were good stores of beans, maize, walnuts, and dried persimmons in this and surrounding towns. The Indian chief drew up before the town with a battalion of 1,500 picked men, but when De Soto's army advanced, the barbarian horde fled without shooting an arrow.

This Indian capital is now shown to have been an old, old settlement even then. The first settlers who started the great mound carried masses of clay in skin sacks and dumped and packed down the clay to build a platform. The detective science of archaeology infers from their broken pottery that these unknown Indian pioneers were very much like the famous Mound Building Indians of the Ohio valley.

Story of Mound Building.

Their mound building was interrupted when the platform was only a few feet high, and the raised place remained a camping site, littered by ashes, charcoal, bones and broken dishes while two little pecan trees grew up to mark the passing of time.

Then, Mr. Walker found, building was resumed by these people or others. With logs and cane layers and sand, a group of mounds were raised, and the whole was finally combined into one great terraced platform with ramps.

Whether this platform mound, perhaps 45 feet high in De Soto's time, was the high place on which the temple or the chief's house stood, is not certain. Lesser heights were raised for other structures about the town. The temple is described by the Spaniards as containing bones of the chiefs of Anilco in coffin baskets, and around the building were pikes on which the heads of captured enemies were stuck.

Invisible "Keep Out" Sign Makes Roots Stay Apart

Washington.—"No trespassing" signs are written in some kind of unexplored chemical language by growing roots, to keep other roots from invading territory which they have taken for their own.

Indications of this are graphically shown in a device invented by Prof. M. A. Raines of Howard university.

Professor Raines' new method makes the root system of plants visible throughout their entire growth. Against a slightly sloping sheet of glass he lays a sheet of dark paper or other absorbent material, kept moist by a series of wicks dipped into a supply of water. The roots sprouting from seeds placed at the top edge of the sheet grow down the moist paper, and can be studied in detail.

Ancient Roman Empire Is Being Surveyed

London. — Countries of the world that once formed part of the ancient empire of Rome are now making a survey of that one-time empire.

The French have completed their survey of the frontier in Syria, says a report to the British scientific journal Nature. A great part of the survey is necessarily being carried out by airplane, as many sites are in the desert and can only be spotted from the air.

Universe Growing Larger, Belief of French Astronomer

Reckons Milky Way's Age in Billions of Years

NEW scientific evidence has been produced that the universe is expanding, thus allaying the fears of those who worry because the sun and the stars are destroying themselves by turning their masses into the radiation they emit.

This evidence is presented in an article in the Astrophysical Journal published in Chicago.

M. Henri Mineur, astronomer at the Observatory of Paris, reports calculations showing that the stars of the Milky Way, despite their age of tens of thousands of millions of years, have only radiated away about one hundredth of their mass.

Thus if one takes M. Mineur's estimate that Milky Way stars are from ten to twenty billion years old, the apparent age of the universe, before all the mass is radiated away, would be about a trillion years. Compared to the life of a man who lives to be seventy-five years old, the star galaxy which contains the earth and the Milky Way is only a baby, about nine months old, and cutting its first teeth.

Upsets Other Theories.

Significant to astronomers is M. Mineur's calculations showing that the stars in the Milky Way must have been formed in the beginning with almost the same mass which they have today. Present-held theories of star evolution, therefore, must go by the board if the French astronomer's calculations and the observations on which they are based are correct.

Says the French astronomer:

"The upper limit we have found for the age of the stars is so small that, in so brief a time, the great majority of the stars cannot have lost more than a hundredth part of their mass. We must therefore believe that the stars were formed with nearly the same masses as they have now, and that the difference in temperature and spectral type actually observed are due to the fact that the stellar masses were already different at the time of their formation.

Evolution Not Likely.

"An evolution of the stars such as has been generally accepted is, then, impossible. Our result is, however, in perfect agreement with the theory of the expansion of the universe.

"G. Lemaitre has suggested a hypothesis for the formation of the extragalactic nebulae based upon his theory of the expansion of the universe, according to which the age of the Milky Way would not exceed ten thousand million years."

"Eat Eggs," Doctors Advise Sufferers With Arthritis

Richmond.—"Eat eggs" is the message of five doctors of the Medical College of Virginia to people who suffer from arthritis.

Drs. J. C. Forbes, R. C. Neale, O. L. Hite, D. B. Armistead and S. L. Rucker have found that diets which contain a great deal of sulphur and little carbohydrate are beneficial to sufferers from the painful disease.

Arthritis, these doctors find, is accompanied by the presence of indole in the blood. This is a chemical produced by the decomposition of body products. It has long been known to be deleterious.

Value of Sulphur.

To remove this indole the body needs sulphur. The Virginia doctors therefore feed their arthritis patients on diets which have such sulphur, such as is found in meat and eggs. To aid in preventing indole production in the body only very little carbohydrate is fed. Such foods as potatoes and rice are entirely eliminated from the diet.

The results of this diet, the doctors find, are promising. In one case the patient was kept on an ordinary diet for a month. There was a good deal of indole in his blood, and he suffered considerably.

After a month on the special diet there were only traces of indole in his blood, and he felt stronger, suffered less. At the end of another month there was no indole in the blood, and the patient was considerably improved.

Lapland Revealed as Warm in Stone Age

Stockholm.—More than 30 settlements of human beings dating from the Stone Age, or about the year 3000 B. C., have been unearthed in Swedish Lapland by Kurt Tinnberg, Stockholm, archeologist.

In a few months he has gathered some 3,000 flint tools, weapons, and utensils, said to be the most northerly ever found in Sweden.

Disproportionate Votes

One of the executives of King Features, who is putting out a new voting test called the Crossley Poll, explains the apportionment variation in election returns in the following language: "Each voter in Nevada counts more than 16 times as much in deciding who shall be the next President as the individual voter in the state of New York. Nevada has only 23,000 families, yet it has three electoral votes; while New York, with 138 times as many families, has but 47 electoral votes. A similar disproportion runs through the entire list of states."—Washington Star.

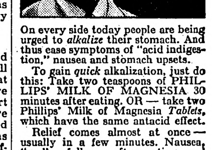
If You're Told to "Alkalize"
Try This Remarkable "Phillips" Way
Thousands are Adopting



On every side today people are being urged to alkalize their stomach. And thus ease symptoms of "acid indigestion," nausea and stomach upsets.

To gain quick alkalization, just do this: Take two teaspoons of PHILLIPS' MILK OF MAGNESIA 30 minutes after eating. OR — take two Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets, which have the same antacid effect.

Relief comes almost at once — usually in a few minutes. Nausea, "gas" — fullness after eating and "acid indigestion" pains leave. You feel like a new person.

Try this way. You'll be surprised at results. Get either the liquid "Phillips" or the remarkable, new Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets. Delightful to take and easy to carry with you. Only 25¢ a box at all drug stores.

ALSO IN TABLET FORM:
Each tiny tablet is the equivalent of a teaspoonful of genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

Why Laxatives Fail In Stubborn Constipation

Twelve to 24 hours is too long to wait when relief from clogged bowels and constipation is needed, for then enormous quantities of bacteria accumulate, causing GAS, indigestion and many restless, sleepless nights.

If you want REAL, QUICK RELIEF, take a liquid compound such as Adlerika. Adlerika contains SEVEN cathartic and carminative ingredients that act on the stomach and BOTH bowels. Most "overnight" laxatives contain one ingredient that acts on the lower bowel only.

Adlerika's DOUBLE ACTION gives your system a thorough cleansing, bringing out old poisonous waste matter that may have caused GAS pains, sour stomach, headaches and sleepless nights for months.

Adlerika relieves stomach GAS at once and usually removes bowel congestion in less than two hours. No waiting for overnight results. This famous treatment has been recommended by many doctors and druggists for 35 years. Take Adlerika one-half hour before breakfast or one hour before bedtime and in a short while you will feel marvelously refreshed. Leading Druggists.

Idle American Acres

Under the New Deal tariff policy, American imports of food from foreign countries represented the production of thirty-three and one-half million acres of American farm land.

To Amend Federal Warehouse Act

"As part of the plan for removing the depressing effect of surpluses, I shall propose an amendment to the federal warehousing act so that reserves of feed, such as corn, can be carried on the farm. * * * Under this amendment the farmer who stores his grain on the farm in such a way as to make it insurable will be entitled to a federal warehouse receipt. He then will be eligible to borrow from any banking agency. He will enjoy the same credit facilities as are available to owners of in stored in terminal markets."—Alf M. ## Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN © The Safety Man

Whenever we see a crippled man walking the highways our sympathies go out to him immediately. Everyone feels sorry for him because of the plight he is in and hopes that he will get along in his present condition as well as possible.

How many cripples, however, in the form of automobiles are on the highways? Who pities and sympathizes with them? If, by sight, we could have some way of determining this condition, indignation would rise high because of the terrible defects most automobiles have.

Would it surprise you that from tests made of the mechanical condition of cars in a number of states, three out of every four vehicles registered are dangerous because of some defect in safety equipment? This is a fact.

Tests show that brakes in 33 per cent of the cars are in need of replacement or repairs, and that lamps need to be replaced or adjusted in nearly 70 per cent. Tires are either poor or in only fair condition in nearly 48 percent.

These are cripples that should be taken off the highways.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of Minnesota

To be submitted at 1936 General Election

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
LEGAL DEPARTMENT

HARRY H. PETERSON
Attorney General

St. Paul, Minnesota, April 29, 1936

Honorable Mike Holm,
Secretary of State,

Dear Sir:

In compliance with the provisions of Section 46 of Mason's Minnesota Statutes of 1927, I herewith furnish you a statement of the purpose and effect of all proposed amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota which are to be submitted to the electors of said state at the general election in 1936, in accordance with certain acts adopted by the 1935 legislature.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

By the adoption of Chapter 393 of the Laws of 1935 the legislature has proposed an amendment to Article 8 of the State Constitution. The proposed amendment, if adopted, will not alter the form of any existing section of the Constitution, but will add a new section to be known as Section 8 of said article 8.

The proposed amendment reads as follows:

"Any of the public lands of the state, including lands held in trust for any purpose, may, with the approval of a commission consisting of the governor, the attorney general and the state auditor, be exchanged for lands of the United States and other privately owned lands as the legislature may provide, and the lands so acquired shall be subject to the trust, if any, to which the lands exchanged therefor were subject, and the state shall reserve all mineral and water and water power rights in lands so transferred by the state."

The Purpose and Effect of the Proposed Amendment.

The purpose and effect of this proposed amendment is to authorize the legislature to provide for exchanging any of the public lands of the state for lands of the United States and land privately owned, such exchanges to be made with the approval of a commission consisting of the governor, the attorney general and the state auditor. Such exchanges of land cannot now be made because the State Constitution does not permit the legislature to authorize the sale of school lands, state swamp lands and state internal improvement lands except by public sale. One immediate purpose in granting such authority is to make it possible for the state to acquire compact areas of land for forestry and other conservation purposes by exchanging land outside of such conservation areas for lands of the United States and privately owned lands within such areas.

The proposed amendment requires that all mineral rights, water rights and water power rights in lands so transferred by the state shall be reserved. The land so acquired will become subject to the same trust, if any, as the land disposed of. For example, if school land is given in exchange, the land received will become school land.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2.

By the adoption of Chapter 394 of the Laws of 1935, the legislature proposed an amendment to Section 1 of Article 9 of the State Constitution.

This section now reads as follows:

"The power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended or contracted away. Taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and shall be levied and collected for public purposes, but public burying grounds, public school houses, public hospitals, academies, colleges, universities, and all seminaries of learning, all churches, church property and houses of worship, institutions of purely public charity, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, shall be exempt from taxation, and there may be exempted from taxation personal property not exceeding in value $200, for each household, individual or head of a family, and household goods and farm machinery, as the legislature may determine:

"Provided, that the legislature may authorize municipal corporations to levy and collect assessments for local improvements upon property benefited thereby without regard to a cash valuation, and provided further, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect, modify or repeal any existing law providing for the taxation of the gross earnings of railroads."

If amended as proposed by the legislature, this section will read as follows:

"The power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended or contracted away. Taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and shall be levied and collected for public purposes, but public burying grounds, public school houses, public hospitals, academies, colleges, universities, and all seminaries of learning, all churches, church property and houses of worship, institutions of purely public charity, and public property used exclusively for any public purpose, shall be exempt from taxation, and there may be exempted from taxation personal property not exceeding in value $200.00 for each household, individual or head of a family, and household goods and farm machinery, as the legislature may determine:

"Provided, that the legislature may authorize municipal corporations to levy and collect assessments for local improvements upon property benefited thereby without regard to a cash valuation, and provided further, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect, modify or repeal any existing law providing for the taxation of the gross earnings of railroads.

"Provided further, that after January 1, 1937, no tax shall be imposed on any real or tangible personal property for any state purpose, except that authorized by Section 16 of Article 9 of this Constitution, and/or for the payment of indebtedness of the state incurred prior to January 1, 1937; but this proviso shall not limit, but the state shall have the right to impose taxes upon royalties, occupations, sales, receipts, incomes, inheritances, gifts, privileges, franchises, or licenses, or upon property on the basis of gross earnings or tonnage, or upon intangibles of every kind."

The Purpose and Effect of the Proposed Amendment.

The purpose and effect of the proposed amendment is to prohibit the imposition of any taxes on real or tangible personal property after January 1, 1937 for any state purpose, except as hereinafter stated, without limiting the right of the state to impose taxes upon royalties, occupations, sales, receipts incomes, inheritances, gifts, privileges, franchises, or licenses, or upon property on the basis of gross earnings or tonnage, or upon intangibles of every kind, said proposed amendment declaring that the state shall have the right to impose such taxes.

If the said amendment is adopted the state will retain the right to impose taxes on real or tangible personal property for either or both of the following purposes:

(1) To provide funds to be used to construct or improve roads and bridges in this state, as authorized by Section 16 of Article 9 of the State Constitution, for which purpose, under Section 16 of said Article 9, the legislature in its discretion is authorized to provide for an annual tax levy upon the property of this state, of not to exceed in any year one mill on all the taxable property within the state; and

(2) To raise money to pay indebtedness of the state incurred prior to January 1, 1937.

Respectfully yours,
HARRY H. PETERSON,
Attorney General.

What Happens to Savings in New Deal Pension Plan

The cruel deceit practiced by the Rooseveltian New Deal old age pension plan was exposed by Gov. Alf M. Landon in his address at Milwaukee. Calling the law "unjust and stupidly drafted," he pictured the tragedy of the New Deal in the following homily:

"Let me explain it in the simple terms of the family budget. The father of the family is a kindly man, so kindly that he borrows all he can to add to the family's pleasure. At the same time he impresses upon his sons and daughters the necessity of saving for their old age. Every month they bring six per cent of their wages to him so that he may act as trustee and invest their savings for their old age.

"The father decides that the best investment is his own I. O. U. So every month he puts aside in a box his I. O. U. carefully executed, and, moreover, bearing interest at 3 per cent. And every month he spends the money that his children bring him, partly in meeting his regular expenses, and the rest in various experiments that fascinate him.

"Years pass — the children grow old—the day comes when they have to open their father's box. What do they find? Roll after roll of neatly executed 'I. O. U.'s'

"I am not exaggerating the folly of this legislation. The saving it forces on our workers is a cruel hoax.

"There is every probability that the cash they pay in will be used for current deficits and new extravagances."

Landon Will Fulfill Roosevelt Promises

"I shall fulfill all outstanding obligations made by the present administration with the American farmer. By this I mean that those who have carried out their end of the bargain will receive the checks due them. I am equally emphatic in my views on meeting the suffering caused by the present drought. We will use the full power of government to relieve the present distress * * * There will be no waste and no politics."—Alf M. Landon at Des Moines, September 22, 1936.

Lords of Own Farms

"Most of us cooperated with the Triple A in its early days, since we had been promised it was only an emergency measure. * * * But as the program progressed, we discovered that the administration was trying to stretch the Triple A into a means for the permanent control of American agriculture from Washington. I cannot agree with such a policy. I cannot agree with the President. I believe the American farmer should be 'A Lord on his own farm.'"—Alf M. Landon at Des Moines, September 22, 1936.

Program Doesn't Make Sense

"Consider the contradictions in this policy. The administration was trying to hold down the nation's supply of meat by restricting the production of hogs. Last fall it was warning livestock men that there would be increased supplies of cattle on the market this spring. And yet it proceeded to make concessions on Canadian cattle that would bring more of them into this country. Such a program just doesn't make sense."—Alf M. Landon at Minneapolis, September 24, 1936.

The General Business class is studying filing.

Miss Hamlin is my teacher
I shall not pass
She maketh me to go to English class.
She leadeth me beside my Classmates.
She restoreth my confidence.
She leadeth me in the path of difficulty for my own sake.
Yea, though I sit up 'till midnight,
I gain no knowledge. For public speaking is with me and its rod and staff humiliate me.
She prepareth assignments for me in the presence of my enemies
She filleth my head head with facts; my brain runneth over.
Surely, public speaking shall follow me all the days of my life and I shall dwell in Miss Hamlin's English class forever.

To Merchants and Bankers

All persons who accept Old Age Assistance warrants are advised to make sure that the endorsement signature on the back of the warrants is the genuine signature of the person to whom the allowance is made. The Auditors of the Federal Social Security Board are requiring County Treasurers to reject for payment all warrants which are not endorsed the same as the verified signature on the application for Old Age Assistance. Person who use a mark for endorsement should have two recognizable signatures of witnesses.

In Memoriam

In memory of our dear mother, Mrs. Clara King who passed away one sad year ago, October 22, 1935.

Time has called, her roll is answered
A star shines forth from Heaven's shore.
Sounding footsteps on our threshold,
Come again as days of yore.
Always at the twilight lingers,
Shading day at eventide,
We do dearly miss you. mother
Bless the shore where you abide
Time may change the course of nations,
Time may wither forms of stone
But your going from our circle,
Is one thing time cannot atone.
We miss you dearly every hour
The sound of footsteps, voice of cheer
And as the time ticks slowly onward
God keeps you always, always near.

CARL A. JOHNSON

FOR REPRESENTATIVE

Marshall County, 67th District

I Favor

Sound, Progressive Lesislation for the benefit of the Farmer, Home Owner and local business men. Strict economy in state governmental affairs, including the elimination of extravagance in the existing departments of government.

A more equitable distribution of the tax load so as to lower taxes for the farmer.

I do not favor a sales tax. A liberal and progressive program of state aids for the operation of the public schools, feeling that the education of our children is a state as well as local obligation.

State assistance for the construction of farm to market roads. Encouragement for cooperative enterprises through beneficial laws.

Encouragement to industry and business so as to employ more labor at decent yearly wages.

An adequate Old Age Assistance program is desirable and neccessary and I heartily favor a program that will insure happiness and security for our people at the eventide of their lives.

I am Independent and as such my efforts will be spent in working for all of the people and not for any individual, clique or party.

Letter From Selvig

Crookston, Minn.
Oct. 19, 1936

Dear Friend:

It is a great pleasure for me to write a few words in behalf of Elmer A. Haugen who is candidate for Congress from the Ninth District. He is a valued friend whom I can highly recommend to you. I have known him many years and he is well equipped for that high office.

While in Congress for six years, I was closely associated with his uncle, Gilbert N. Haugen, Congressman for over 30 years from Iowa, who placed the McNary-Haugen principal so definitely before the nation. His nephew is thoroughly familiar with this principle of giving farmers true tariff benefits on their crops and livestock products. He will, if elected, carry on for the Ninth District valiantly and efficiently.

Sincerely yours,
C. G. Selvig.

Harmony of Life

TO EXIST is to bless. Life is Happiness. In this sublime pause of things all dissonances have disappeared. It is as though Creation were but one vast symphony, glorifying the God of Goodness with an inexhaustible wealth of praise and harmony . . . We have ourselves become notes in the great concert, and the soul breaks the silence of ecstasy, only to vibrate in unison with the Eternal Joy!

Failures are facts that prove a man has at least actually tried to be successful.

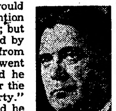
Senator Borah Maintains Independent Attitude

SENATOR WILLIAM E. BORAH of Idaho, whose attitude in the Presidential campaign is a matter of great interest to all parties, has declared he would confine his attention to state matters; but then, being irked by some criticism from Republicans he went further and said he was "going after the Republican party." The veteran said he had been accused of not being regular.



Senator Borah

"Well, what is a regular?" he asked. "A regular is a man with no ideas, who waits for someone to tell him what to do. My idea of being regular is in doing what you believe to be right in the interests of the people you represent.

"Let this be understood—I'm telling all parties, Republican, Democratic, Union—I'm going to advocate the things I believe in whether they cross party lines or not."

Pessimism Prevails at Last League Session

PESSIMISM and discontent marked the final session of the League of Nations assembly, the leaders admitting that little had been accomplished. Carlos Saavedra Lamas of Argentina, president of the assembly, even asked if he might not raise the question whether "civilization is on the verge of a final breakup."

The question of reforming the league covenant provoked a bitter controversy on whether nonmember states should be consulted. Russia was understood to be anxious particularly to bar German influence and achieved a minor triumph since no definite action to solicit nonmember co-operation was taken. A committee of twenty-eight was named to study reform proposals.

The assembly approved reports of its economic and disarmament committees. The economic report carried a British proposal to create a comission to study accessibility of raw materials. The United States and other nonmembers would be invited to participate. The report of the disarmament committee approved the reconvening of the world disarmament conference at an early date.

Disorders in Palestine Are Dropped by the Arabs

ARABS of Palestine, who had been on "strike" for 175 days in protest against unrestricted immigration of Jews, were persuaded by the British to call off the strike, which had been accompanied by great disorders and the killing of several hundred persons. The Arab high committee issued an appeal to Arabs throughout the country to return to work quietly, and this command was obeyed generally. Sir Arthur Wauchope, British high commissioner, was said to have informed the British government that it was now safe for the royal commission of investigation to begin its work of inquiring into the grievances of the Arabs.

According to a Hebrew newspaper of Jerusalem, the Arabs have arranged for backing by Italian Fascists for their aspirations. Also, the Moslem authority administering Islamic church property is reported to be prepared to sell Catholics a Christian holy place on Mount Zion.

Austria Private Armies Forced to Dissolve

KURT SCHUSCHNIGG,, chancellor of Austria, is taking his place among the European dictators. In order to consolidate military power in his own hands, he decreed the dissolution of all private armies, this being aimed especially at the Fascist Heimwehr headed by Prince Ernst von Starhemberg. The prince directed his followers to obey the edict, and Major Fey, Starhemberg's rival for control of control of the Heimwehr, called on the elements recognizing his leadership to preserve order.

Prince von Starhemberg.

The chancellor's order also affected his own Catholic storm troops. All the private troops were ordered consolidated with the Austrian state militia. This would increase Austria's official armed forces to about 158,000 men. The dissolution decree met strong opposition within the cabinet, and was voted after three ministers had walked out.

Schuschnigg's task now is to actually disarm the private armies. If he succeeds in doing this, his complete control over Austria may be conceded. It is recalled that the Heimwehr was ordered to disarm in 1931, that the government seized many weapons, and that a year later some 40,000 Heimwehr men appeared fully armed and uniformed. Von Starhemberg may not be really squelched this time, either. It is a certainty that he has a powerful friend in Premier Mussolini of Italy.

Typhoon in Philippines Kills Many Persons

ONE of the worst typhoons in the history of the Philippines swept across Luzon island, killing scores of persons and destroying villages. At least 310 perished and the authorities feared the death list would be much larger for four hundred were reported missing. Eighty-two bodies were recovered from the city of Cabanatuan alone.

Waterway Money Allotted for Atlantic Coast

MEMBERS of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways association, assembling in Tireton, N. J., for the annual convention, were informed by President Roosevelt that funds totaling $24,000,000 have been allotted for waterway improvements along the Atlantic coast during 1937. In a letter to President J. Hampton Moore of the association, to be read to the convention, Mr. Roosevelt also said:

"This year has been noteworthy in witnessing the completion of the 1,435 mile inside route of the intracoastal waterway from Trenton to Miami. Much credit for this accomplishment belongs to your association and it is to be congratulated therefor. Other waterway projects of permanent value to the nation sponsored by your organization have been completed or are progressing in a satisfactory manner."

John L. Lewis States Labor Peace Terms

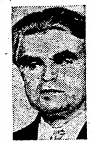
WILLIAM GREEN, president of the A. F. of L., who had just been calling on President Roosevelt at Hyde Park, N. Y., told the newspapermen that the prospects for peace between the warring factions in the federation were better and that those participating in the controversy were becoming "more temperate." However, that same evening John L. Lewis, the dynamic leader of the Committee for Industrial Organization, rather dashed the aforesaid prospects for peace. In Washington he laid down, as the only basis for restoration of peace in the ranks of organized labor, a program consisting of these two propositions:



J. L. Lewis

1. Revocation by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor of the order suspending ten C. I. O. unions on charges of insurrection.
2. Isolation of certain mass production industries which would be organized strictly on Lewis' "one big union" theory.

It had been stated that David Dubinsky, head of one of the suspended unions, had submitted a compromise peace proposal, but Lewis told the correspondents that he knew of no change in feeling between the battling factions; that he had made no move for peace and contemplated none; that the C. I. O. drive to unionize the steel industry was "proceeding satisfactorily" and that the Dubinsky proposal was similar to the one previously offered to and rejected by the A. F. of L. council.

Russia Angrily Warns Fascist Nations

HELP given the Spanish insurgents by Fascist countries so enraged soviet Russia that she gave notice that, unless it ceased she would free herself from any obligations to the agreement for neutrality. The representatives of the 27 nations on the international committee of non-intervention in the Spanish war were about to meet in London, and Moscow's challenge caused a real sensation. Moiseyvich Kagan, soviet delegate on the committee, specifically named Portugal, Italy and Germany as the offenders and called for an investigation. It is believed that if Russia is not satisfied in this matter she will send airplanes and other war material to the Spanish government.

The committee refused to take any action on the Russian complaint, averring that the charges were not specific enough.

Spanish Fascists pushed their lines so closely around Madrid that they called on the government to surrender the capital immediately and thus save it from a destructive bombardment. An airplane fleet showered the city with circulars telling the citizens that further resistance was useless. One of the most threatening of General Franco's advances was directed at Aranjuez, whose capture would cut off Madrid's food supply from the Mediterranean

St. Paul—Grants totaling $8,323,195 to 15 states to aid them in financing their public-assistance programs during the period, Oct. 1 to Dec. 31, were announced by the United States Social Security board in Washington. The grants included Minnesota, for the aged, $1,467,405.32.

Minneapolis—Forty Minnesota 4-H Club members left here for the National Dairy Show at Dallas, Texas, and 25 of them go on funds provided by The Minneapolis Journal, bringing to 4,367 the number of boys and girls who have been awarded trips and scholarships by The Journal since 1923.

Minneapolis—Trucks rolled out from 14 wholesale grocery and warehouse firms tied up for seven weeks by a strike of General Drivers Union No. 544. Under an agreement, the strike was at an end, and an estimated 350 men—at a payroll placed by employers at upward of $10,000 a week—were back on their jobs.

Duluth—State Senator Charles E. Adams died of injuries received when his automobile crashed into a tree. He collapsed while driving. Physicians said overwork had strained his heart. Senator Adams served as a member of the state senate continuously for more than 20 years, having been elected for his first term in 1915.

St. Cloud—Addressing the hundreds of club women from all parts of the state her for the forty-second annual convention of the Minnesota Federation of Women's clubs Wednesday evening. President Selke of the local teacher's collegeg said it becomes increasingly necessary that society provide more and more for its youth.

Minneapolis—Burial services were conducted at Le Claire, Iowa, for former Governor Samuel R. Van Sant. It was in this Mississippi river town that Mr. Van Sant, the fifteenth governor of the state and one-time national commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, started his business career. In its small cemetery the members of the Van Sant family are buried.

Minneapolis—A proposal to increase the seating capacity of the University of Minnesota Stadium to 80,000 will go to the board of regents for consideration before the end of the current football season. The new seats would be created by removing the running track, sinking the gridiron 15 to 20 feet and extending the tiers down to within a few yards of the sidelines and the eastern end line. With the field thus depressed a bank of seats could also be installed at the western end to be entered at the top from the promenade in front of the athletic building.

Minneapolis—Grateful to the press for its aid in obtaining her release after 48 hours in a Poland prison, Mrs. Frederick G. Atkinson, prominent Minneapolis clubwoman, was willing to forget her imprisonment because she failed to declare $14 in currency and a $5,000 letter of credit. Still irked by the red tape that caused her to be held two days by Polish border officials, Mrs. Atkinson, declared it was "such a relief to get back to America where everybody isn't military minded."

Puttering Around the House—

Time-Wasting Work of Putting Away Things Others Have Used

◆

WHEN a family is orderly, no one has to do much puttering about. When the members are not particular where they put their things, it becomes the undesirable duty of some person to spend much time in just this very thing, puttering. Hours are wasted daily in such trivialities as gathering up newspapers spread about, picking up and putting away gloves, hats, scissors, thimbles, pencils, etc. Whatever it may be that has been in use, and not put away by the user, or has been put in the wrong place, must be placed where it belongs or the house would reflect poor housekeeping.

Nondescript Tasks.

The time given to these nondescript jobs should be given by those who leave the work to others. Putting things away is part of the job connected with using the things, just as much as getting the things out, is part of it. The work is regular and legitimate and only becomes an annoyance when left for the wrong person to do.

No person wants her time frittered away doing the left-over jobs of others. Nobody enjoys having a person puttering around, either. It is distracting to attention, and disturbing to the nerves. From both the angle of the person who putters about and those who have to endure the annoyance of such activity, there should be some remedy found.

Remedies Suggested.

Mothers can teach their children to put their playthings away when through with them. This is the first step to take. Then she can instruct the little folk to put their outside things away when they come in from outdoors. Children can get into the habit of orderliness by being made to realize that what they don't do, has to be done by mother who is very busy and often too tired to do the extra tasks. Affection will gain the day.

Adults should consider how to break themselves of the reprehensible habit of leaving work they should do, to be completed by others. If they really determine to stop this bothersome fault, they will decrease the necessity of puttering about by the person who heartily dislikes the work, but who, for the sake of order prefers to do it rather than have disorder around.

A True Neighbor

OF ALL the best talents, that of belonging, of being a true member of the community, is the greatest, and for many in our large cities, the least expressed. To be a true neighbor, citizen, patriot—to take on the state, so that what it does you do; to have the state within you, so that all that wounds public life hurts you—is to recover the top root of existence, to lay hold of the most vital of all the strands of life.—Joseph Lee.

To accept good advice is but to increase one's own ability.

It's the Talk of the Quilting Bee

Pattern 5591

It's most certainly the talk of the quilting bee—this quaint Pineapple pattern! And why wouldn't it be? With nearly all the patch pieces the same width, you can cut your fabric into strips and snip off pieces as needed. Easily made, you start from the center and sew round and round till the block is done.

In pattern 5591 you will find the Block Chart, an illustration for cutting, sewing and finishing, together with yardage chart, diagram of quilt to help arrange the blocks for single and double bed size, and a diagram of block which serves as a guide for placing the patches and suggests contrasting materials.

To obtain this pattern, send 15 cents in stamps or coins (coins preferred) to The Sewing Circle Household Arts Dept., 259 W. Fourteenth St., New York, N. Y.

Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

SYNOPSIS

Kezia Marsh, pretty, selfish and twenty, arrives home in Corinth from school and is met by her older brother, Hugh. He drives her to the Marsh home where her widowed mother, Fluvanna, a warm-hearted, self-sacrificing and understanding soul, welcomes her. Kezia's sister, Margery, plump and matronly with the care of three children, is at lunch with them. Hugh's wife, Dorrie, has pleaded a previous engagement. On the way back to his job at the steel plant founded by one of his forebears, Hugh passes Doc Hiller, a boyhood friend whom he no longer sees frequently because of Dorrie's antipathy. Fluvanna Marsh wakens the next morning from a dream about her late husband. Jim, whose unstable character she fears Kezia has inherited. Soon Ellen Pendleton comes over. She is an artistically inclined girl who is a distant niece of Fluvanna's and a favorite of Hugh's. She happily tells Fluvanna she has become engaged to Jerry Purdue. Ellen fears that her father and mother, Gavin and Lizzie, will not approve the match. Hugh and Dorrie go out to the Freeland Farms to dance with their friends, Cun and Joan Whitney. Whitney, who has been out of work, announces that he has landed a new position. They see Ellen Pendleton and Jerry Purdue.

"Art?" said Cun. "I see. Cuckoo—but beautiful."

Dorrie moved in her chair slightly.

"Dance?" asked Cun, his eyes on Dorrie.

They went off together.

Hugh stood up. "Joan?"

As they swung into step he said, "Well, Jonny, the troubles are all over. I'm ever so glad that Cun has work. You've been a brick, but I could see it was hard on you."

Joan gave a smothered exclamation and did not reply. He looked down. Joan's eyes were filled with tears.

"What did I say? . . . Hurt you? . . . Awfully sorry." He was dismayed. "Come on; we'll go outside." He led her through the screened door to the long veranda.

They sat in a swing. "Overlook it, Hugh. Nerves, I think." She dabbed her eyes with his handkerchief. "And relief from the strain. A man has to work to fill up his time . . . Cun has to be busy more than most men—he's built that way. Then you spoke to me so sweetly and sympathetically and I went to pieces."

Hugh sat beside her feeling touched and bewildered. It was plain she had some worry on her mind about Cun.

Presently Joan rose, saying: "Steer me around through the hall to the dressing-room and I'll wash up . . . I must be all streaky. Hugh, I'm sorry I pulled this scene for you. You don't know how abased I feel."

"Forget it. Glad you did, if you want to know. We skim the surface of conventionalities too much with our friends. We'd be more understanding if we knew what was in the other person's heart."

"Most hearts don't bear showing."

"I can't believe that."

"I suppose we think it good manners," said Joan dubiously. "And to live on the surface of things isn't a bad way . . . take what comes today and not worry about tomorrow; forget you have a heart! I'm trying to achieve it. I never quite make it . . . still I try very hard."

He left her at the dressing-room door and went back to their table. Dorrie and Cun were nowhere about, and Ellen and Jerry had disappeared. He saw his sister, Kezia, dancing with Arthur Williams. He left the sandwiches untouched but opened a bottle of beer, and sat sipping it.

Dorrie and Cun approached; she was animated, laughing. "Where did you and Joan disappear? We tried to find you but you had hidden yourselves in some secluded corner. Of course you weren't parked in the automobile? . . . Or were you, Hugh?"

Joan came up just then, her face freshly powdered and bearing no trace of emotion. "We were mooning on the veranda," she said gayly.

Cun drew out her chair. "I'll have to look into this," he threatened.

"Is there a moon? It seemed terribly dark to me!" Dorrie teased.

"Explain your absence!" said Hugh with a smile.

"Never explain!" answered Dorrie lightly. "Explanations lead to nothing and nowhere! Hugh, you haven't danced with me."

At home and in their own room, Hugh sighed with contented fatigue as he untied his tie.

Dorrie slipped off her dress and sat down on the bench before the dressing-table to cold cream her nails. "Lovely evening, wasn't it, darling?"

"Enjoy it?"

"Very much."

"I did myself after we got started. Naturally they wanted to celebrate after such good news. It has been a tough winter and spring for them. Especially Joan."

Dorrie frowned a little as she bent her head lower. "Why especially Joan?"

"I think she felt it more. Fact is, she cried tonight . . . that was the reason we left the floor. I said something about the new job, and she broke down—hysterical relief, I think. Wept all over the place when I got her outside."

Dorrie's lip curled. "Silly."

"I thought it was rather natural. She's kept up a good front all along." He looked at her, troubled; he had expected more sympathy for Joan's predicament. "Reverse the case, Dorrie. Suppose I had been out of work for almost a year. Wouldn't you be a bit teary with joy when I did land something?"

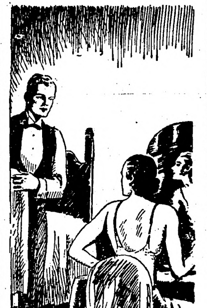
"No—I'd have confidence enough in you to be sure you'd get something splendid in place of the old one. Cun is a simply marvelous salesman. Everyone says so. He was sure to be placed in a little while. The future with the Crescent company is much better than his old place at the Arrow Steel."

"But even so——" He hesitated. "I gathered something else was bothering her. She seemed to feel that Cun might get into difficulties, not working."

"Oh!" Dorrie's eyes flew open, startled. "How odd."

"Perhaps."

"No, she didn't say what she was afraid of. Drinking—gambling. Cun's a popular fellow." He started for the closet and said from its depths, "She gave me quite a jolt. It was so unexpected, coming from her."



"You're So Gullible!"

"And I suppose when she wept, you comforted her?"

He laughed a little. "Yes; lent her my handkerchief!"

"You're so gullible!"

"Oh, I say now . . . Dorrie, really——" He stood over her.

Lights sparkled in her eyes from inward laughter. She lifted her face for his kiss. "Thin-skinned" she murmured, stroking his hair.

CHAPTER III

Ellen and Jerry lingered late at their dinner at the Freeland Farms. The dancing began at nine o'clock and the orchestra, a pianist, a saxophone player and a drummer, were just taking their places at the far end of the hall.

"They wanted to know whom I was going out to dinner with again. When I said you, they looked at each other—you know parents—and said that I seemed to be going out with you a great deal lately . . . so then I told them."

Jerry picked at his salad idly, then laid his fork down. His hair was dark brown, almost black, straight, and lay back, sleek and glistening on his head with the help of a pomade. His complexion was a smooth olive and went well with his eyes, the color of black coffee. When he smiled his eyes had sparkling depths, and his lips a combination of sensitiveness and sensuousness.

"And what did they say?"

For an instant Ellen looked troubled, remembering. Then, the dimples played over her face as pride in Jerry reassured her. "They want to see you—talk to you. When they do that, it will be all right."

"Sure?" Jerry was not smiling now. There was a hint of brooding in his eyes.

"I'm certain of it. I told them I'd bring you in after dinner."

Jerry gave a faint groan and looked at his plate.

"Frightened?"

"I feel as if I were to be shot at sunrise."

"Silly! . . . My parents have never committed a murder so far!"

"Yes, but it sounds ominous. I'm to be brought in—tried—executed! Couldn't we put it off until tomorrow night?"

When she did not answer, he went on: "Look your last on me as a whole man! I have a feeling I'll resemble a sieve in an hour or so—shot full of holes. I've met your father several times but he doesn't speak to me on the street, and your mother has never been—friendly! What will they say when they know I have the audacity to want to marry you?"

For an inexpensive, but extensive wardrobe just glance at this charming array of exquisite frocks.

Pattern No. 1945-B is a smashing hit in any office or social gathering and versatility personified. You can wear it as shown on the large figure with contrasting collar and cuffs and a self-fabric belt or make it with a twin collar and cuff, introducing another harmonizing color. It's outstanding because of its neat and trim appearance and because it makes up nicely in almost any choice bit of material. Cotton, shantung, silk, broadcloth, crepe or satin are a few exciting fabric mediums that create excellent effects. It is available for sizes: 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Corresponding bust measures: 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38. Size 14 requires four yards of 39-inch material plus two-thirds yard contrast.

Pattern No. 1914-B is an alluring double duty frock; simple, inexpensive and the proud possessor of a sleek silhouette. It's a marvel for getting around the kitchen in a jiffy and just the thing for visiting, shopping or business. Depending of course on the material you select. For housewear, try a gingham, percale or cotton with a bit of color to pep you up, and for a more dressier effect choose striped shirting, broadcloth, lightweight wool or crepe. It is available for sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48. Size 36 requires three and three-fourths yards of 39-inch material.

Pattern No. 1870-B. Those of you whose figures run to width will join your slimmer sisters in choosing this gay slenderizing ensemble, with a contrasting scalloped collar and jabot, so flattering to the face. The effect is exquisite in satin, crepe, broadcloth or silk, the result wholly and completely satisfying. With or without the jacket the frock is the ultimate in utility and style. It is available for sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires six and one-fourth yards of 39-inch material plus seven-eighths yard contrast.

Not For Self Glory

One of the highest type men who ever campaigned for office in Marshall County is placing his name for consideration before the voters at the general election on November third. We refer to Carl A. Johnson, a Marshall county born citizen who has lived his entire lifetime in Vega township. Mr. Johnson is not in the campaign for state representative for the glory of the office or for the salary that is involved, but, is rather seeking the support of the citizens of the country feeling that he will be able to contribute some good for the present and future welfare of the county and state in the legislature.

Mr. Johnson is running for this office as a non-partisan candidate. The law specifies that the legislature should be a non-partisan body of men and women working for the welfare of the state at large. He believes in upholding the law on this and all questions and even his closest friends have never asked him whether he would vote for the liberal or conservative candidate for speaker of the house. Neither Mr. Johnson nor anyone else knows who the candidates will be for the speakership — in fact no one knows who will be the, members of the legislature, as every seat in the house is up for election this fail.

Devoting his entire life-time to the farm and farmers cooperative enterprises, we are convinced and fully believe that a man of Mr. Johnson's ability and soundness of thought would ever knowingly give a single vote for any measure that would be detrimental to the farmers of Marshall county at large.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of Minnesota

To be submitted at 1936 General Election

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
LEGAL DEPARTMENT

HARRY H. PETERSON
Attorney General

St. Paul, Minnesota, April 29, 1936

Honorable Mike Holm,
Secretary of State,

Dear Sir:

In compliance with the provisions of Section 46 of Mason's Minnesota Statutes of 1927, I herewith furnish you a statement of the purpose and effect of all proposed amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota which are to be submitted to the electors of said state at the general election in 1936, in accordance with certain acts adopted by the 1935 legislature.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

By the adoption of Chapter 393 of the Laws of 1935 the legislature has proposed an amendment to Article 8 of the State Constitution. The proposed amendment, if adopted, will not alter the form of any existing section of the Constitution, but will add a new section to be known as Section 8 of said article 8.

The proposed amendment reads as follows:

"Any of the public lands of the state, including lands held in trust for any purpose, may, with the approval of a commission consisting of the governor, the attorney general and the state auditor, be exchanged for lands of the United States and other privately owned lands as the legislature may provide, and the lands so acquired shall be subject to the trust, if any, to which the lands exchanged therefor were subject, and the state shall reserve all mineral and water and water power rights in lands so transferred by the state."

The Purpose and Effect of the Proposed Amendment.

The purpose and effect of this proposed amendment is to authorize the legislature to provide for exchanging any of the public lands of the state for lands of the United States and land privately owned, such exchanges to be made with the approval of a commission consisting of the governor, the attorney general and the state auditor. Such exchanges of land cannot now be made because the State Constitution does not permit the legislature to authorize the sale of school lands, state swamp lands and state internal improvement lands except by public sale. One immediate purpose in granting such authority is to make it possible for the state to acquire compact areas of land for forestry and other conservation purposes by exchanging land outside of such conservation areas for lands of the United States and privately owned lands within such areas.

The proposed amendment requires that all mineral rights, water rights and water power rights in lands so transferred by the state shall be reserved. The land so acquired will become subject to the same trust, if any, as the land disposed of. For example, if school land is given in exchange, the land received will become school land.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2.

By the adoption of Chapter 394 of the Laws of 1935, the legislature proposed an amendment to Section 1 of Article 9 of the State Constitution.

This section now reads as follows:

"The power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended or contracted away. Taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and shall be levied and collected for public purposes, but public burying grounds, public school houses, public hospitals, academies, colleges, universities, and all seminaries of learning, all churches, church property and houses of worship, institutions of purely public charity, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, shall be exempt from taxation, and there may be exempted from taxation personal property not exceeding in value $200, for each household, individual or head of a family, and household goods and farm machinery, as the legislature may determine:

"Provided, that the legislature may authorize municipal corporations to levy and collect assessments for local improvements upon property benefited thereby without regard to a cash valuation, and provided further, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect, modify or repeal any existing law providing for the taxation of the gross earnings of railroads."

If amended as proposed by the legislature, this section will read as follows:

"The power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended or contracted away. Taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and shall be levied and collected for public purposes, but public burying grounds, public school houses, public hospitals, academies, colleges, universities, and all seminaries of learning, all churches, church property and houses of worship, institutions of purely public charity, and public property used exclusively for any public purpose, shall be exempt from taxation, and there may be exempted from taxation personal property not exceeding in value $200.00 for each household, individual or head of a family, and household goods and farm machinery, as the legislature may determine:

"Provided, that the legislature may authorize municipal corporations to levy and collect assessments for local improvements upon property benefited thereby without regard to a cash valuation, and provided further, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect, modify or repeal any existing law providing for the taxation of the gross earnings of railroads.

"Provided further, that after January 1, 1937, no tax shall be imposed on any real or tangible personal property for any state purpose, except that authorized by Section 16 of Article 9 of this Constitution, and/or for the payment of indebtedness of the state incurred prior to January 1, 1937; but this proviso shall not limit, but the state shall have, the right to impose taxes upon royalties, occupations, sales, receipts, incomes, inheritances, gifts, privileges, franchises, or licenses, or upon property on the basis of gross earnings or tonnage, or upon intangibles of every kind."

The Purpose and Effect of the Proposed Amendment.

The purpose and effect of the proposed amendment is to prohibit the imposition of any taxes on real or tangible personal property after January 1, 1937 for any state purpose, except as hereinafter stated, without limiting the right of the state to impose taxes upon royalties, occupations, sales, receipts, incomes, inheritances, gifts, privileges, franchises, or licenses, or upon property on the basis of gross earnings or tonnage, or upon intangibles of every kind, said proposed amendment declaring that the state shall have the right to impose such taxes.

If the said amendment is adopted the state will retain the right to impose taxes on real or tangible personal property for either or both of the following purposes:

(1) To provide funds to be used to construct or improve roads and bridges in this state, as authorized by Section 16 of Article 9 of the State Constitution, for which purpose, under Section 16 of said Article 9, the legislature in its discretion is authorized to provide for an annual tax levy upon the property of this state, of not to exceed in any year one mill on all the taxable property within the state; and

(2) To raise money to pay indebtedness of the state incurred prior to January 1, 1937.

Respectfully yours,
HARRY H. PETERSON,
Attorney General.

The Safety Man

It's amusing to ride with some people and hear the present day automobilist criticize the construction of highways.

He wants highway engineers not only to build roads straight and wide, but mark them so that all problems confronting him in driving will be called to his attention. Then he proceeds to violate all the laws of decency and safety, and pays absolutely no attention to the markings on the highway.

If we want wide roads, sloping ditches, wide shoulders, and all other safety measures on our highways, we ought to be sporting enough to use them correctly

Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Hjalmer Johnson were honored Sunday when friends and relatives gathered at the Nazareth Lutheran church to congratulate them on their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary.

A good program was rendered which included talks by Rev. Hanson of Holt and Rev. Ronholm of Newfolden, a reading by Mildred Odie and a speech of thanks by Hjalmer Johnson.

Betty Lou Johnson, a neice of the Johnson's, was the flower girl. Mrs. Johnson was presented with a beautiful boquet of roses and ferns, a gift from her daughters Ethel and Eunice. A purse of money was presented to the honored couple.

A bountiful luncheon was served in the church parlors which was decorated in rose and silver. The table was set for the Johnson family and speakers. It was decorated with a huge wedding cake, silver candles and fresh cut roses which carried out the color scheme.

Out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Fredrickson of Viking, Rev. and Mrs. Ronholm and family Othelia Lee, Mr. and Mrs. H. Stokke, Mr. and Mrs. A. Holmos, Mrs. Alice Knutson and and family, Mrs. Olaf Tollefsrud and Harry and Eunice all of Newfolden.

Sandberg-Lindholm

Miss Clara Sandberg, daughter of Mrs. C. L. Sandberg, and Austin Lindholm, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Lindholm of Strandquist, were united in marriage at a single ring ceremony at the Lutheran parsonage here. The ceremony was performed by Rev T. C. L. Hanson.

Miss Greta Fredrickson and Mr. Clifford Johnson were the attendants.

The bride is well known in this community. They will make their home on the groom's farm farm southeast of Strandquist

They left the next day for a trip to Duluth and the Iron Range.

Attention, Voters!

The Village Council of the Village of Holt wishes to call the attention of legal voters to the following question that will be on the County Ballot at the General Election to be held on Tuesday November 3rd, 1936. The question to be voted on will read as follows: "Changing of County System to Town System for caring for the poor."

The members of your Council has given this matter special attention and has gone on record against the proposed change. The members of your Council take the position that the County Officials are in better position to care for the poor as they are more familiar with the State and Federal Laws relating to care of relief and both the County Board of Commissioners and your Relief Worker of this County have done all in their power to keep the expense down to the minimum. If there has been any abuse in this respect the fault belongs to those who have not called this matter to the attention of your Relief Officer.

During the past years a number of families on relief have moved into your Village, and have now established residence there. Should the proposed change carry in this County, it will become the duty of the Village Officials to see that any and all people on relief be taken care off, and the greater share of this expense must fall on the tax payers of this village.

During the last three years this village has made no levy for the care of the poor and whatever increase we may have had in the County rate will be no comparison to the increase in your local rate, in case we will be called upon to give proper care as required by law. The Village Council requests that all voters go to the polls and vote on November 3rd, and that they give this question their proper attention by voting NO which will mean that they are against the proposed change.

Village Council of the Village of Holt.

Geo. Fricker, Village Clerk.

A more equitable distribution of the tax load so as to lower taxes for the farmer.

I do not favor a sales tax. A liberal and progressive program of state aids for the operation of the public schools, feeling that the education of our children is a state as well as local obligation.

State assistance for the construction of farm to market roads. Encouragement for cooperative enterprises through beneficial laws.

Encouragement to industry and business so as to employ more labor at decent yearly wages.

An adequate Old Age Assistance program is desirable and necessary and I heartily favor a program that will insure happiness and security for our people at the eventide of their lives.

$170.000 Made Available For Mud Lake Sanctuary

The release last week of federal funds totalling $170,000 for land acquisition in the Mud Lake area will give Minnesota one of the best waterfowl sanctuaries in the northwest, according to E. V. Willard, commissioner of conservation,

With the completion of land acquision and the construction by the U. S. Biological Survey of control works to flood lands, the Mud Lake area will be the largest and most desireable sanctuary in the state.

"This project was approved by the U. S. Biological Survey as a migratory waterfowl feeding and nesting grounds early in 1933". Mr. Willard stated.

"Because of the policies governing the purchase of lands by the Resettlement Administration and the manner in which the titles to the lands were involved by reason of tax delinquencies, the state was asked to acquire the lands by condemnation, later to be deeded to the government under an agreement whereby the government reimburse the state for any moneys expended in these proceedidgs.

"The funds now released are the first actually paid by the government and will pay for approximately 45,000 acres out of a total of about 23,000 included iin the original agreement between the state and the federal government. On the remainder, negotiations for title are being carried on by the state and the deeds should be ready for submission to the federal government within a short time."

The funds have been turned over to the Marshall county district court for payment to individual land owners whose lands were acquired by the state of Minnesota and subsequently deeded to the fereral government.

Edward May Abdicate to Marry Mrs. Simpson

King Edward

MERE scandal and gossip have no proper place in this department, but the "affaire Simpson," as the French would term it, has progressed until it assumes world importance. As arrangements are being made for the quiet and uncontested divorce of Mrs. "Wally" Simpson, American friend of King Edward VIII of England, it is rumored in London society circles that the bachelor monarch will abdicate in favor of his brother, the Duke of York, and marry the attractive woman who has shared so much of his time in recent months. In support of this rumor is the reported fact that plans are being made for renting the farms of the Sandringham estate in Norfolk, which is the king's private property. Also, there is a story that this estate may be sold to the Aga Khan, the immensely wealthy spiritual head of the Ismaili sect of Mohammedanism.

Should Edward give up the throne, it would eventually be occupied by Princess Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the Duke of York, and this succession would be decidedly popular with the people of England. The abdicating king might revert to the dukedom of Cornwall, which provides a net income of about $350,000.

There is nothing in British law to prevent the king from marrying whomsoever he pleases, but no ruler of the country since Henry VIII has wedded a commoner. Court gossip in London says that Prime Minister Baldwin and the archbishop of Canterbury recently appealed to Edward for greater discretion in his relations with Mrs. Simpson and were hotly rebuffed by the king.

English newspapers imposed on themselves a voluntary censorship in this affair, but it has been broken by the Sunday Referee which prints an article declaring the king "may marry by spring," that this would result in postponement of the coronation, and that tradesmen have been insuring themselves against such a delay.

Japan "Not Fortifying" Isles Under Mandate

FOR some time there have appeared in print stories about how Japan was establishing air and submarine bases in the former German islands of the South Pacific over which she holds a League of Nations mandate. It has been expected that the league's mandate commission would investigate these reports, and now Japan seeks to forestall such action by a formal report to the league in which she asserts she has "no fortifications, military or naval bases" in those islands. The Tokio government says it is scrupulously observing that part of the mandate which forbids the use of the islands for military purposes.

Following establishment of a south seas bureau in April, 1932, all Japanese armed forces and men of war have been withdrawn gradually from the islands, the report says, adding that the natives of the islands never have been subjected to military training.

Five Groups Accused by Trade Commission

CHARGES filed in Washington by the federal trade commission accuse five trade associations of attempting to corner the automobile parts and accessories business. The groups, which were ordered to show cause why they should not be compelled to cease their alleged combine, are the National Standard Parts association, Detroit; the Motor and Equipment Wholesale association, Chicago; the Automotive Trade associations of Greater Kansas City, Mo.; Mississippi Valley Automotive Jobbers association and the Southwestern Jobbers association. Their officials also are defendants in the suit.

The commission points out that the associations represent a "substantial proportion of the total volume of business of all manufacturers and jobbers of automobile parts and accessories throughout the United States." The commission charges that these groups "have combined together with others jointly, preventing the establishment of new and additional competitors," and with "executing certain agreements and conspiracies among themselves and with others."

Blum Warns Socialists of Republic's Danger

RADICAL Socialists are threatening to quit the "Popular Front" government of France because of discord with Communists, and they have been warned by Premier Leon Blum that the one condition whereunder the life of the republic can be prolonged is that the Popular Front "remain united." In an address to the radical leaders, Blum said a split in the coalition government would force his immediate resignation, and that dissolution of the parliament and new elections would result.

Monarchists of Austria, who would like to make Archduke Otto emperor, were encouraged by a speech delivered by Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg in which, defying the little entente, he shouted:

"No outsider, but only Austrians will decide whether the monarchy shall be restored!"

The day of a plebiscite to decide on the question of restoration of the Hapsburg claimant to the throne is "not yet in sight," the chancellor said. But, with Princess Adelheid, sister of Archduke Otto, listening, he declared that monarchist propaganda has a "proper place" in Austrian life.

"New Gold Standard" Tried by Uncle Sam

"IT IS a new gold standard, a way of doing business which has never been tried before," was Secretary Morgenthau's characterization of the agreement just entered into by the United States, Great Britain and France, whereby, subject to 24-hours' cancellation, they will exchange gold for each other's currencies. Financiers, economists and business men were taken by surprise by the move and immediately gave it close study. Some were disposed to label the maneuver "political expediency," but experts generally said it was a logical step in the sequence of monetary events but not positively in the direction of stabilization.

Secretary Morgenthau

The new plan, Mr. Morgenthau said, differs from the old gold standard in that it will permit the export or earmarking of gold only to and between governments instead of private business institutions and traders.

"The door is wide open," said Mr. Morgenthau. "We're not going out drumming up business, but we'll welcome all other countries which want to participate."

According to the Treasury department, the United States alone will announce a selling price for gold. France and England will keep their selling prices secret, though there will be a free flow of gold between the stabilization funds of the three nations.

It was believed that Great Britain was the prime mover in this new pact. As one commentator put it: "The agreement was made necessary when France debased her currency and placed an embargo on gold exports, because Great Britain suddenly discovered that nowhere in the world was there left a fixed yardstick against which to measure international commitments and handle international exchange."

No More Army Chaplains, Say Disciples of Christ

THE Disciples of Christ, in annual international convention in Kansas City, voted to send no more of the church's ministers to serve as chaplains in the United States army. The resolution adopted also asked the Federal Council of Churches "to sever its connection with the war system by dissolving its chaplaincy commission" and "to provide a non-military ministry of religion to men in the armed services at the church's own expense and under their own authority without involving the Church of Christ in any alliance whatsoever with the state or the military system."

Nineteen Die When Ship Sinks in Lake Erie

EIGHTEEN men and one woman perished in the waters of Lake Erie when the Canadian ship Sand Merchant foundered off Cleveland during a gale. Seven men, including the captain, were picked up after clinging to life boats for eleven hours. The woman who was lost was the wife of the first mate, who also drowned.

Northern Italy was shaken by earthquake shocks that were felt as far away as Jugoslavia and Austria. Twenty persons were killed by tumbling walls, and thirty others were injured.

Many Are Killed in Moslem-Hindu Riots

FOR three days Moslems and Hindus in Bombay fought each other fiercely with guns and knives in riots that started during the construction of a Hindu temple near a mosque. Before the authorities had restored order about fifty persons had been killed and several hundred wounded. Nine attempts to set fires were made and one Hindu place of worship was burned to the ground.

Samuel Merwin, Novelist, Dies Suddenly

DEATH came suddenly and unexpectedly to Samuel Merwin, one of the well-known contemporary American novelists. He succumbed to a heart attack in the Players' club in New York. Mr. Merwin, who was sixty-two years old, wrote, among other books, "Anthony the Absolute," "The Passionate Pilgrim," "Hills of Han," "Silk," and "Bad Penny." He was associate editor of Success magazine from 1905 to 1909 and editor the following two years.

Coast Maritime Workers May Decide to Strike

AUTHORITY of the national maritime commission to declare a permanent truce in current contract controversies is challenged by the negotiating committee for the Pacific coast maritime unions, and members of those unions are instructed to vote on a proposal for a coast-wide waterfront strike.

The maritime commission had peremptorily demanded that the Pacific coast ports be kept open while it sent an investigator to San Francisco to discuss the conditions which have long threatened to bring on industrial warfare.

In telegrams to President Franklin Roosevelt and the commission, the committee said the commission had caused "great unrest" among the workers through its participation in negotiations between shipowners and dock and shipboard employees.

The seven unions, claiming a membership of nearly 37,000 workers, are the International Longshoremen's association, the American Radio Telegraphists' association, the Marine Engineers' Beneficial association, the Masters, Mates and Pilots of America, the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, Marine Cooks and Stewards, and the Marine Firemen, Oilers, Watertenders and Wipers' association.

Russia Using Spanish War to Foment Discord

SOVIET RUSSIA made a second determined effort to aid the beleaguered government of Spain, and sustained a second rebuff. Ivan Maisky, Russian ambassador to England, handed to Lord Plymouth, British chairman of the non-intervention committee, a virtual ultimatum demanding immediate convocation of the committee to consider blockading the coast of Portugal against arms shipments destined for the Spanish insurgents. It was understood in London that Lord Plymouth replied that if the proposition were seriously made, it should be presented through diplomatic channels to the governments concerned. The Russian plan was for a blockade by English of French warships.

Observers in Europe are convinced that the Soviet government does not expect the powers to agree to any such blockade as is suggested, but is chiefly interested in stirring up discord.

Leaders of the Fascists were reported to have planned a steady, steam-roller advance on Madrid, and this offensive was already under way. The defenders of the capital were hastily building fortifications in the suburbs and surrounding the city with trenches. In Oviedo the dynamite-armed force of loyalist miners was still battling with the garrison and rebel troops sent to the rescue were about to enter the city.

Belgium Drops Alliances and Will Be Neutral

BELGIUM, which since the close of the World war has been tied tight to France by a military alliance, has decided to drop that and all similar alliances and to rely for her safety on strict neutrality and a larger army. King Leopold so informed the cabinet, telling the ministers that Germany's reoccupation of the Rhineland practically puts us back where we were before the great war." Belgium's geographical position, he said, "makes it imperative for us to maintain a military machine of such size as to dissuade any neighbor from using our territory to attack another state." The period of military service was extended from 12 to 18 months.

King Leopold

"Belgium must pursue a policy exclusively and wholly Belgian," Leopold said. "In any case our engagements should not go beyond keeping off war from our own territory. Belgium must remain outside of its neighbors' conflicts.

"Any policy of alliance with a single country would weaken our position abroad. A purely defensive alliance would not meet the case because, however prompt the intervention of our ally, it would only come after the invader's blow, which would be crushing."

Only America Lags in Naval Construction

FIGURES made public by the American Navy department show that since July 1 last every great naval power except the United States has increased the number and tonnage of its war vessels.

In the 2½ months from July 1 to September 15, the United States reduced the number of its ships from 324 vessels totaling 1,080,715 tons to 306 vessels, totaling 1,062,875 tons.

The Bored Are Boring—

◆ People of Outstanding Personality Are Interested, and Never Blase

"YOUNG people of today," a mother writes, "seem to regard it as a sign of immaturity or weakness to be thrilled with anything. Their idea of sophistication is to appear bored with everything, the having-done-all-seen-all attitude that finds it very difficult to be impressed with anything. It is most annoying to find that anything you can offer them for a good time seems to be inadequate, that the thrills of your own youth cannot be repeated for them. It seems to me they miss a great deal."

I would point out to this mother, says a woman writer of international note, that naturally we cannot expect that the thrills of our youth will equally impress the young people of this day. So much that came to us gradually as colorful experiences are a part of their daily background. But there is something definitely true in what she says of a pose, of a deliberate care never to seem impressed, of a pretense at being bored.

It may interest such young people to know that that super-sophisticate, G. K. Chesterton, said "there are no bores, only people who are bored." In other words there can be nothing interesting about a person who is bored!

That takes us right down to a bedrock fact that can be observed if we will note people of outstanding personality, people whom everybody finds interesting. Without exception they will be people who are vitally interested. They are never bored, never blase. They are able to give out what interests others, because through their interest in things and people about them they are constantly taking in. Their main charm is a certain aliveness, a vitality which has absolutely no relationship with being bored.

Supplement to the Holt Weekly News, Holt, Minn., for Friday, Oct. 30, 1936

School Notes

Primary Grades

We have twelve first grade children and seven second grade children in our room this year.

We were pleasantly surpris d one morning when we saw a geranium in each window. We wish to thank Mrs. Lorentson for helping beautify our room.

We studied the geranium in Nature Class last week.

In Art Class we have been working on toys for a toy sale. We hope to buy toy instruments with the money from our sale.

Upper Grades

The intermediate grades held a meeting Friday afternoon for the purpose of organizing a club. Officers were elected as follows: President, Arthur Kolden; Vice President, Lorene Fluke; Secy-Treas., Nadine Krogen; and program committee, Clifford Moberg and Marian Olson.

The purpose of this club was defined as follows:

To promote the generl interest of our room and to provide an organization to carry on many of the activites the room desires.

It was decided that each person should pay dues of one penny a week. The money thus raised is to be used for parties, picnics and for the purchase of such things as the group may desire.

A program consisting of poems songs and talks followed the business meeting. The girls in charge did well. Let's give them a hand.

The eighth grade seems to be having a tough time in English. All except Clifford. He doesn't need to study anyway.

Not For Self Glory

One of the highest type men who ever campaigned for office in Marshall County is placing his name for consideration before the voters at the general election on November third. We refer to Carl A. Johnson, a Marshall county born citizen who has lived his entire lifetime in Vega township. Mr. Johnson is not in the campaign for state representative for the glory of the office or for the salary that is involved, but, is rather seeking the support of the citizens of the country feeling that he will be able to contribute some good for the present and future welfare of the county and state in the legislature.

Mr. Johnson is running for this office as a non-partisan candidate. The law specifies that the legislature should be a non-partisan body of men and women working for the welfare of the state at large. He believes in upholding the law on this and all questions and even his closest friends have never asked him whether he would vote for the liberal or conservative candidate for speaker of the house. Neither Mr. Johnson nor anyone else knows who the candidates will be for the speakership — in fact no one knows who will be the members of the legislature, as every seat in the house is up for election this fall.

Devoting his entire life-time to the farm and farmers cooperative enterprises, we are convinced and fully believe that a man of Mr. Johnson's ability and soundness of thought would ever knowingly give a single vote for any measure that would be detrimental to the farmers of Marshall county at large.

Memory Lingers On

Washington.—It has been several months since the administration farm relief program, the agricultural adjustment act, was declared dead, but like the words of the song, "the memory lingers on." And it is quite apparent that mistakes as well as memories of the AAA will continue through the heat of the coming Presidential campaign and probably considerably longer for it is only necessary to recall that the stepbrother of the AAA, the federal farm board of the Hoover administration, still is the butt of much criticism and many pointed paragraphs.

One of the main reasons why the memories linger on, where those memories involve AAA, is Michigan's Republican Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg. Senator Vandenberg never did get enthusiastic about the merits of AAA as they were expounded by Secretary Wallace, Administrator Chester Davis and other New Deal spokesmen and when the Supreme court of the United States threw out the processing taxes upon which the law was predicated, Senator Vandenberg was in a delightful spot from a political standpoint. He has not found it necessary to say "I told you so" and has had, I imagine, a great deal of personal fun in simply hinting to or reminding others of his previous stand.

But it was not until the Michigan senator began pulling figures out of his senatorial hat, showing how benefit payments from the AAA had gone to great and wealthy corporations in sums as high as a million dollars or more, that he held a key to the New Deal skeleton closet. They know now, however, exactly what he meant when he announced in the senate several weeks ago that no such plan as the AAA could be administered without vast sums being distributed in what he termed unwarranted payments—unwarranted from the standpoint of help for the smaller farmers.

Secretary Wallace stalled off Senator Vandenberg's demand in the senate for a complete list of beneficiaries who received checks from AAA in excess of one thousand dollars for quite a while but there were too many senators who believed as Senator Vandenberg did, that the truth ought to be known. Of course, as the procedure usually goes in Washington, many things are done without actual force being used. It was thus in the case of the AAA payments. Democratic senators who foresaw their inability to prevent a senate vote demanding a list of AAA payments persuaded Mr. Wallace to make public the list voluntarily and it was done just in advance of senate action. So, we now have for the first time, at least, an indication of the grotesque results of the agricultural adjustment administration program that was hailed from the Atlantic to the Pacific as an ideal plan.

* * *

Dynamite in It

The dynamite in the situation lies in the fact that there were dozens, even hundreds, of corporations which received AAA checks among the big bounties paid to induce curtailment of basic foreign crops. This would not be so bad except for the fact that the brilliant planners of the AAA continuously stressed its value to the small, debt ridden farmers. Throughout the time the law was under consideration and through the two years of its operation, never did Mr. Wallace or Mr. Davis fail to point out in their numerous speeches how great sums of money, collected in processing taxes, were being distributed to thousands of farmers and that these payments were in time going to put agriculture on its collective feet.

Now, however, the truth of their statements has been proved but when the whole truth had been exposed on the floor of the senate, it was found to go far beyond the small, debt ridden farmers.

The whole truth disclosed, in fact, that several million dollars had been paid even to corporations chartered by the British government and with home offices in England. Wall Street, that home of "entrenched greed," received its share and its share was substantial. On top of all of this there lately has come a disclosure that a great wheat farmer in Montana received something like $50,000 for agreeing not to plant wheat on land which he had rented from the Indians through the Federal Department of the Interior for the specific purpose of raising wheat.

The list of huge benefit payments is much too large to include in this letter but the fact remains that it showed how even the best laid plans of mice and men oft go astray, even when those men are brilliant brain trusters who themselves claim to know all there is available for human understanding. Beyond that, the Vandenberg disclosures have set in motion discussion that will come pretty close to continuing into every farmhouse in the land. Unless I miss my guess, and I am no Doctor Tugwell, thousands of farmers are going to bitterly resent the fact that their payments were small, whereas gigantic corporations received sums ranging from ten to a thousand times as large.

* * *

Unfair Criticism

In behalf of the AAA officials, it must be said that there will be as, indeed, there has been already, considerable unfair criticism. The criticism to which I refer is of this type: that they should have discovered in advance of the payments that funds were going to these corporations. Assuming that they could have discovered that fact in advance, there was no alternative for them except to pay the checks authorized by law. Congress made the law, or rather congress passed it under the lash of the administration, but it was on the statute books and administrative officials are not supposed to disregard such provisions.

If there is to be criticism it should be directed at the initial framing of the statute that brought about the condition. The results that have attracted so much attention since Senator Vandenberg's exposure constitute one of the curious coincidences and queer quirks of planned economy.

And a further word about the criticism. A great many people are likely to forget that while their check was in three figures and some corporation received one in six figures, the condition results wholly from the fact that one owned more land than the other. You may properly say this should have been foreseen and I believe you will be making a correct statement. But surely this is a fact: the AAA officials cannot be blamed for sending out the checks when the law said they should do it regardless of the name or nature of the beneficiary. The fault lies solely and completely with those who, from their professional desks, conceived the whole scheme and gained President Roosevelt's approval for it.

* * *

Vulnerable Spots

Development of the vulnerable spots in the AAA crop curtailment program probably will prove beneficial to the country as a whole eventually. For one thing, these disclosures have forever choked off proposals of that kind. They may result as well in strengthening the new proposition for crop control through the medium of soil conservation. In other words, since the bulk of the congress thinks through legislation only in the terms of administration arguments, they will likely be less prone to enact legislation without knowing what results will be obtained.

It seems to me that the new farm-aid plan likely will be stronger and probably more workable and certainly less extravagant than was the AAA because the AAA weaknesses have been exposed. These exposures ought to have an effect also among thinking farmers who hereafter are unlikely to accept dogmatic statements and rainbow pictures painted for them by political demagogues and professional farm leaders without examining the practicability of the scheme. Personally, I am convinced that a great many farmers were led to believe that AAA was their only salvation and they gained this conviction solely because the other side never was told to them.

* * *

Fletcher's Brain Trust

While we are talking about mistakes and about the results obtained by brilliant theorists, I hear more and more discussion of the latest move by Chairman Henry P. Fletcher and his Republican national committee. Mr. Fletcher has hired ten university professors to head up what he calls the committee's research staff and in announcing their appointment he stressed a declaration that "the division is not a brain trust." But "brain trust" it is going to be called notwithstanding Mr. Fletcher's assertion that they were practical men and women of experience. They are going to be a brain trust in exactly the same sense that Mr. Roosevelt's "brain trust" has been denominated. And how else could it be? There actually seems to be little choice between the type of men Mr. Fletcher has chosen and the Tugwells, Hopkinses and other doctors and professors who have constantly had the ear of the President. These men will have Mr. Fletcher's ear and undoubtedly will pour into it their own theories of government and their own ideas of approach to the problem that confronts the Republican national committee, namely, the defeat of Mr. Roosevelt.

I have observed political battles for a good many years and I have observed the management of governmental responsibilities through a parallel period. The conclusion is inescapable, as far as I am concerned, that practical men always have done a better job, always have been better administrators and better planners, than the men and women who have spent their lives lecturing from a university classroom rostrum. I once criticized Professor Tugwell by saying that his qualification for the post of under-secretary of agriculture consisted of tending flowers in a window box and I am wondering now whether Mr. Fletcher's new brain trust is any better equipped for its job. However, we must not forget, the country now has one brain trust trying to find out what is wrong with another brain trust.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Faribault—A talk by Mrs. John J. Louis of Minneapolis featured the annual meeting of the Third District Federation of Women's Clubs here. Mrs. Louis compared the problems of modern life to those besetting the nation during Abraham Lincoln's administration.

Gaylord—Political leaders and friends from all parts of the state attended the funeral of Senator Claude H. MacKenzie, Republican national committeeman, here. Business houses were closed for an hour and a half during the services at the home and at the church.

Slayton—With Amy Wessel and A. J. Kittelson, state club agents, in charge, leaders of the 4-H club conference of seven counties met in the Methodist Episcopal church here. Counties included in the conference were Pipestone, Lyon, Rock, Nobles, Jackson, Lincoln, and Murray.

Minneapolis—All Minnesota has its faith placed in Patty Berg as she sailed last week to participate in the Curtis Cup matches at Gleneagles, Scotland, on May 6. Miss Berg, darling of the Florida tournaments this past winter, will team with a host of famous feminine golfers in an effort to down the British aggregation.

St. Paul—Brainerd, Austin, Owatonna, Fergus Falls, Duluth, and St. Paul were the safest towns in Minnesota during the past year. These municipalities received plaques for outstanding work in the war against traffic fatalities. Rice, Big Stone, and Cottonwood counties were awarded first places in their respective divisions.

St. Paul—Arthur E. Nelson, twice mayor of St. Paul, has filed as a candidate for the lieutenant-governor nomination on the Republican ticket. Twenty-nine years old when elected to the mayoralty post, Nelson served two terms, retiring in 1926 to enter private law practice. In 1928 he was the Republican candidate for United States senator from Minnesota.

Minneapolis—George Roscoe, Central high school's greatest athlete in recent years, was honored at a dinner by fellow members of the Central "C" club. Modest Roscoe could hardly speak when asked to tell about his past accomplishments. He was a star halfback on the University of Minnesota national championship football team last fall, and for three years, has been the school's outstanding basketball player.

Rochester—Among famous physicians who will speak at the eighty-third annual meeting of the Minnesota Medical Association May 4, 5, 6, will be Dr. Ferdinand Sauerbruch, Berlin and Dr. Leon Asher, Berne, Switzerland. Dr. Sauerbruch is Geheimrat Professor and internationally know lung surgeon. Dr. Asher, noted physiologist, is professor of physiology at Berne University. Other speakers include: Dr. Donald Guthrie, Sayre, Pa.; Dr. Frederick A. Coller, Ann Arbor; Dr. Elliott P. Joslin, Boston; Dr. Willis Manges, Philadelphia, and Dr. Fred M. Smith, Iowa City.

Mound—A. B. Gilbert of Mound became the first aspirant for the republican nomination for governor to declare himself by filing for the office on April 17. In his statement at the time he urged the convention to use the slogan "to clear away the fog around tax matters including the retail sales tax," to work for non-political police and to fight for the full home market for farmers. Gilbert ran second for the same office two years ago, was an official of the Nonpartisan league until 1924 when he joined the Republican party over the issue of admitting communists to the League and trade unions.

Robbinsdale—Two men were arrested and a huge supply of bootleg liquor was seized as federal authorities raided a large rectifying plant near Robbinsdale. Evidence seems to link the plant with a ring of alcohol law violators who have been using diverted alcohol in the manufacture of gin and other liquors. Bottles of coloring and flavoring were found on the shelves of the plant, while cartons of empty containers and jugs of distilled water were scattered about the floor. The G-men claimed that hundreds of gallons of the bad liquor have been sold to customers through Twin City liquor stores.

Little Falls—A robber who hid in the automobile of a farmer while his car was parked during a shopping expedition escaped the arm of the law, but only after slugging and seriously injuring William Pedley and Leo Deering. Pedley and Deering were on their way home from Little Falls when the robber arose from the back seat, slugged Pedley, and pushed him into a ditch. The attacker forced Deering to drive the machine to a lonely spot where he sought to rob him. Though he had $50 hidden under the rear seat of the car, Deering said he had nothing. The assailant struck him on the head four times and fled.

Brainerd—Striped and pocket gophers and wood-chucks will lead precarious lives this spring and summer. The county board of Crow Wing county has decided to pay bounties again this year on the animals. This means pocket money for rural boys and girls who last year earned $1,664.78 in their hunt for the animals. The county board will pay the same bounties as of last year, 3 cents for ordinary striped gophers, 5 cents for pocket gophers and 10 cents for wood-chucks, the bounty being paid during the months of April, May and June.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

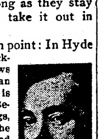
SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—Maybe the English have the right idea. The Reds spout as they please—so long as they stay off the radio and take it out in spouting.



Irvin S. Cobb

There's a story in point: In Hyde Park where the crackpots and clack-jaws speak their pieces, an impassioned radical is in full eruption. Being a hater of kings, he would drive the royal family forth and set fire to their official London residence. A heckler quarrels with the orator; the crowd joins in, about equally divided, trouble impends. A large calm policeman plows through the jam.

"'Ere, now!" he commands. "All them as is going to burn down Buckingham palace form on this side, please. All them as is not going to burn down Buckingham palace kindly form on that side."

When you start people laughing at an agitator you've killed him colder than though you used an ax. I wish we'd club in and laugh some of our half-baked Communists to death. But for desperate cases we might keep an ax or two handy.

Rise of Landon Boom.

AS ONE state delegation after another swings toward Landon, his campaign managers are as optimistic as a seed catalogue. To be sure, taking the first heat doesn't necessarily mean your nag will win the county trophies, but it certainly does cheer up the stable-hands—and sometimes starts a stampede for front seats in the grandstand.

For once in G. O. P. history the rank and file shun a brother from the Atlantic seaboard as though he were a pesthouse.

At the ensuing convention it looks as though all the easterners will get will be the seconding-the-motion concession.

And yet I can remember when, if you called a fellow a Wall Street Republican, you didn't have to smile as you said it.

War Debt Specters.

FIVE and a half million European troops are drilling and seven million more are practically ready for service, more by one million and a half than there were in 1914, when the last big mess broke out.

Those Americans who are being grievously taxed because the powers won't pay back what they have owed us since the armistice for refinancing and rehabilitating their own lands—and that, one way or another, includes every living soul in this country—are invited to save up these statistics for use next time they meet one of those gentle souls who'd cancel these mounting foreign debts. Not war debts, mind you, but peace-time debts.

So let's call them by their right name as we sing: "I didn't raise my dough to arm a soldier but by golly that's what happened to it."

Idlers on Relief.

AT LAST we know wherein the League of Nations really functions. It keeps a good set of statistics. It says that in the world are 24,000,000 unemployed, and of this total more than half are in the United States. Since we are spending more government funds to aid the idle than any country, can it be there are persons among us who prefer staying on relief projects to taking regular jobs?

Next time I pass a public works undertaking I'm going to put the question to some able-bodied party who, if he's following the frequent custom, will be whiling away the hours between meals by gently fanning himself with a shovel.

A pick handle, as I've often observed on one road-digging operation that's being financed by Uncle Sam, comes in handy for leaning purposes, but the shovel is preferable for fanning.

Kentucky Colonel.

OUT here they've found a mail-order theological mill which, for $10, ordains you to preach, christen, marry, bury, and—oh, goodie—take up collections. Mickey Mouse lately lost his commission as a Kentucky colonel, but on behalf of Joe Penner's duck somebody wrote in and he became the Rev. Drake Googoo, D. D. Thus are honors balanced in this world.

Recently, when the present bumper crop of Kentucky colonels was plowed under, we natives stayed calm. Nobody takes away our titles—we were born with 'em. In my youth, anybody good at guessing the weight of hogs was called "Judge," and a man who cured warts with stump water was "Doctor," and all the rest of us automatically were colonels, except one chap who was a major on account of having so many major operations. Poor fellow, he died before he attained his life's ambition. He wanted to run somebody's general store and be a general.

Dainty Collars and Jabots to Crochet

Pattern 1136

High time to be thinking up fresh accessory notes for spring wardrobe, isn't it? Then what better than these airy, lacy collars and dainty jabot for giving last year's frock a "lift" and changing this year's so it wins recognition! There's an open front collar in a square mesh design, a triangular collar that closes in back, both easy to do in petite boucle. The soft, flattering jabot of mesh with "nosegay" of Irish roses is made in cotton.

Pattern 1136 comes to you with detailed directions for making the collars shown; an illustration of them and of all the stitches needed; material requirements.

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—the most pleasant way to take it. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system and insure quick, complete elimination of the waste matters that cause gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. — WASHINGTON D. C.

The Coal Industry

Washington — During the recent bitter campaigning, both national political parties engaged in a good deal of palaver about the coal industry. As usual, the politicians were patting the miners on the back, telling them what wonderful assets to the nation they are, and carrying their demagoguery further by criticism of the mine owners every now and then because it was popular with labor to attack employers. Altogether, it was a rather sorry spectacle and, I think, did not do credit to either side to any extent.

But in this report, I want to stress a very much less obvious phase of the problem than was made apparent in any of the electioneering. With all of the verbiage cast aside, with all of the political hoodwinking forgotten, there is a very deep and difficult problem in the coal industry. I think it can be summarized in one question: What is the future of coal, the coal industry, and the thousands of men who know no other source of livelihood than that which they eke out in the bowels of the earth?

This question, if proper analysis is made, encompasses more than the usual factors that operate in economics. It does that because of policies of the federal government, among states and among municipalities. Because of the attempts to influence votes, the whole question has got into politics and that of itself is ruinous, an obstacle to a scientific solution.

Not so many years ago coal mine owners and coal labor units had what amounted to a monopoly on our fuel supply. Then came oil, oil with all of the scientific development that followed in its wake. Despite this, operators and labor leaders continued to take their toll from the hapless user of coal for fuel, be that user a great factory or an individual consumer in furnace or round oak stove. But that was not all. Electricity came along with its constantly increasing automatic control. First, of course, in the larger communities and later it came to villages and farm homes. Still, the mine owners and the coal labor leaders followed an unwise course, still, they continued to take their toll and before they fully realized what the circumstance was, they had succeeded by their acts in building up a desire on the part of millions of people to use some other sort of fuel. The end is not yet, and that is why the subject is most important at this stage of our history.

* * *

Public Ownership

During the Roosevelt administration we have seen an impetus given to public ownership of power plants never equalled. I think much of this development has gone on in a hit-and-miss fashion and that eventually the public will pay for the shiftless methods employed in development, but that is beside the point. The present question is whether our nation is going to continue to expand public ownership in such a way as to ruin an industry that is as much a part of our basic economic structure as any other unit of our natural life. I think sometimes it goes beyond that for the reason that, unless people awaken to the fact that they are being hoodwinked to a considerable extent by public ownership propaganda, it is likely to spread and public ownership will become a frankenstein, a parasite on our body public.

When I referred to the destruction of a great industry, I had in mind the thought that the consequences will run in two directions. Yet, paradoxically as it may seem, they constitute a cycle. It works out like this: As the demand for coal declines, it is quite natural that production costs go up. When production costs go up, they eventually reach the point where a further diminution occurs in demand. When that decline in demand occurs, there is only one answer: Labor is thrown out of work because you cannot produce and have those products piled high in storage. It takes money to keep labor and machinery occupied. The coal itself, after being removed from the mines, represents money and it is subject as well to deterioration. So, the ultimate to be expected on this side of the picture is an industry dying of dry rot.

On the other side of the problem is an equally important factor at work. It takes an immense amount of capital, massed in corporate form, to maintain a going concern whether that concern be coal mining, railroading or any other of our great industries. These industries operate largely on funds obtained through the sale of stocks and bonds of the corporation. But it has always been true, and human nature shows no signs of changing, that capital is not attracted to, it does not seek investment in, a declining industry. There you have a possibility at least of insufficient funds to carry through for the coal mining industry until it can readjust itself to the new place it must occupy in our economic structure. It will occupy a new place because it will readjust itself, but it has not done so yet and the consequence of this condition is, in my opinion, coal mine labor is due for some very hard sledding in the next decade, notwithstanding the honeyed words of the politicians.

* * *

Blame Demagogues

Now, to turn to the part that government plays in bringing about present conditions I have attempted to show how greed on the part of both capital and labor was responsible in a measure for building up what amounts to ill-will among many coal consumers. But the industry itself is not wholly responsible. Indeed, I rather hold the opinion that government is as much responsible for conditions as the industry itself, and when I say government, I must limit my reference to political demagogues. They always have been shortsighted and they are still shortsighted. They have been and they are now willing to sacrifice great masses of men and money for personal political gain of an entirely transitory character.

I have said before in these columns that the country is being sadly kidded—it is almost tragic—by the wonders of such parasitic organizations as TVA. The public ownership crowd have had a willing leader in President Roosevelt and his hangers-on have promoted his policies of public ownership without being honest as to the ultimate goal, or the eventual effect.

It is not alone that there have been millions wasted in the development of the Tennessee valley electrical mirage. It is not so much that taxpayers throughout the country will be paying a bill and paying it over and over again, that causes me to complain. It is not so much that the Tennessee Valley Authority will never be economically operated or become self-sustaining that brings this outburst. It is the fact that when a government, national, state or local, leads the way in this direction, it wields an influence upon a certain percentage of our population. Since public ownership advocates, in many instances, plain socialism, where in control of these agencies such as TVA, it is perfectly natural that they present to the taxpayers only the most rosy side of the story. They do not disclose to the taxpayers the adverse, the costly side, of the situation. Naturally then, hundreds of thousands of people believe that government can do this sort of thing better than private enterprise. They become convinced that private initiative has been turned into a spigot through which individual pocketbooks are drained. They do not realize that their pocketbooks are being drained much more heavily through public ownership by means of the taxes they take from you and me and everyone else. That is the sad story, made worse by the fact that through nearly four years the Washington government has been encouraging people to believe public ownership propaganda and distrust and destroy private investment.

Expensive Dream

Recent Treasury figures show that the Resettlement Administration has paid approximately $27,750,000 of its total appropriation of $134,518,000 for administrative expenses. That is, the organization which is the pride and joy of Professor Rexford Guy Tugwell has paid that amount of money to job holders in trying to carry out the professor's impossible dream.

While the sum shown as used for administrative expenses by Professor Tugwell is small, compared to the billions of total waste in the Roosevelt administration, the proper way to consider this circumstance is on a percentage basis. If you take your pencil you can calculate that about 20 per cent or one-fifth of all the funds appropriated to Professor Tugwell for resettlement, has been used in management of his plan. It may be a fraction under 20 per cent, but it is so close that even the fastidious Mr. Tugwell would not quarrel about the difference.

One-fifth of an appropriation that is designed theoretically at least to serve for relief purposes is entirely too much. It is not as great perhaps as has happened with one or two other relief appropriations, but it has always been claimed that the Tugwell scheme was planned to reestablish those who have been resettled on a permanent basis. That is to say, it was planned that the bulk of the money should be used in providing those people with a fresh start in life, but I cannot see where they are getting the full measure of help intended if a lot of job holders sit around in Washington offices or in offices in various states using up one-fifth of the total layout of cash.

SYNOPSIS

Kezia Marsh, pretty, selfish and twenty, arrives home in Corinth from school and is met by her older brother, Hugh. He drives her to the Marsh home where her widowed mother, Fluvanna, a warm-hearted, self-sacrificing and understanding soul, welcomes her. Kezia's sister, Margery, plump and matronly with the care of three children, is at lunch with them. Hugh's wife, Dorrie, has pleaded a previous engagement. On the way back to his job at the steel plant founded by one of his forebears, Hugh passes Doc Hiller, a boyhood friend whom he no longer sees frequently because of Dorrie's antipathy. Fluvanna Marsh wakens the next morning from a dream about her late husband, Jim, whose unstable character she fears Kezia has inherited. Soon Ellen Pendleton comes over. She is an artistically inclined girl who is a distant niece of Fluvanna's and a favorite of Hugh's. She happily tells Fluvanna she has become engaged to Jerry Purdue. Ellen fears that her father and mother, Gavin and Lizzie, will not approve the match. Hugh and Dorrie go out to the Freeland Farms to dance with their friends, Cun and Joan Whitney. Whitney, who has been out of work, announces that he has landed a new position. They see Ellen Pendleton and Jerry Purdue. Cun and Dorrie dance together and then disappear for a while. Dancing with Joan, Hugh is amazed to find her in tears. Apparently she has some secret worry over her husband, Cun. Hugh sees Kezia accompanied by a young man.

They rose and floated away to the rhythm of the sentimental music. Ellen felt closer to Jerry when they danced than at any other time. They seemed so completely attuned then, step seeking step, turning instinctively in each graceful movement. He was just enough taller; he gave himself to the spirit of the underlying sensuousness of the air, communicated it to her.

The music ended with an increased tempo and a final bang. They walked to their table where the waiter had placed their dessert.

The place was filling up. There had been only eight or ten for dinner, but now almost every place was occupied. Across the room Ellen caught the eye of Hugh Marsh, gave him a laughing salute. Dorrie and Joan nodded to her, and Cun Whitney too. She had never met Cun, but supposed it was a pleasant informality evoked by the friendship of the others.

She turned to Jerry. "That's Hugh Marsh—you remember we called at Cousin Fluvanna's one night? The one in green with the stunning hair is Dorrie, his wife."

Jerry put sugar in his coffee. "Your cousin, Hugh, is a good picker. What a profile!"

"Isn't it? Like a cameo."

"What kind of person is she?"

"I never feel I know her very well. She's not very friendly. You have the sensation she is passing judgment on you, finding you odd or amusing. It may be imagination on my part, or——"

"What?"

"I think a person so beautiful creates a wall around themselves. Such a picture that you're a little in awe of them, wondering over the effect. Your fault, really, for you make them conscious of the admiration you feel, and they're amused by it."

Jerry nodded. "She sounds high-nosed to me," he pronounced briefly, cutting through Ellen's struggling analysis. "Is Kezia like her?"

"You'll meet her soon. She wants me to take you over some night."

Just as they were leaving, Kezia came in with Arthur Williams and they met on the steps. Kezia turned cordial, radiant eyes on Jerry as she extended her hand. "Nice to know you. I've heard so much about you."

Ellen could see that Jerry looked pleased and impressed.

"El, you're not leaving, are you?" came Kezia's sweet aggrieved complaint. "Do stay with us and dance—we'd have a foursome!"

Arthur seconded the invitation. "Sure—a foursome. What's the idea of leaving now?"

But Ellen pleaded another engagement and they took their departure.

Jerry helped her ceremoniously into the car. His manners were much better than most of the men she knew, she thought with pride. If he hadn't learned them at home, he had picked them up from observation of others. They would pass muster with her mother, Kezia—anyone. She hugged the reflection to herself with pleased content. One more point in the sum total of the graces which endeared Jerry.

They drove down the winding drive to the main road. "I wish we had stayed," said Jerry, regretfully. "Kezia—she's charming, isn't she? I wouldn't have minded meeting Hugh and what's-her-name, too. We could have had a good time."

Ellen was conscious of a pang. The knowledge that she was dragging him away from the gay company for an awkward interview with her family, made her feel guilty. "We'll go out again sometime," she said quickly.

As they spun along the concrete road toward town, edged with suburban bungalows and an occasional farmhouse, she wondered what would Mother say? Any of the terrible things she had voiced before she left? She wouldn't hear Jerry insulted! She would be firm on that. But how protect him from the iniquitous insult of the look Lizzie could wear upon occasion? She had watched Fanny Plaice shrink and wither under its disdain and disapproval the time Caleb had brought her to the house. Her mother had asked Fanny icy questions designed to disconcert her. She hadn't come a second time, and presently Caleb had married Ena Mills. Mother shouldn't do that to her and Jerry! She must not. Ellen's delicate face looked almost steely in its valor as she decided that nothing would shake her determination to marry Jerry.

Mrs. Pendleton was evidently waiting for them, for she sat very erect in a torturingly stiff carved, high-backed chair. The living-room was in the full blaze of all the chandeliers. "Like a queen," crossed Ellen's mind in a nervous snickering instant. Mrs. Pendleton was a blond, big-boned woman, with distrustful, cold gray eyes and lips pressed close together. She hesitated about taking Jerry's hand, then withdrew hers quickly. Gavin Pendleton greeted them, gave short hard pulls at his mustache, then rushed out of the room, only to reappear in a moment.

"Ellen's father and I were very much surprised — very," began Mrs. Pendleton accusingly.

"But knowing Ellen," said Jerry, striving for lightness and ease, "knowing Ellen—you couldn't be, could you?"

"Just—what do—you mean—by that?" she spaced her words and fixed him with a glittering eye.

This is awful, thought Ellen. Mother giving him the third degree and Father waiting for his cue to play the heavy parent. . . .

"I mean that anyone should be forgiven for loving Ellen."

"Loving Ellen? . . . Mm-mm."

Gavin rushed out of the room, snapped on the lights in the dining-room, put them out, returned.

"You see," said Gavin, brusquely, "we don't know much about you." He turned, got as far as the French doors, came back. He stood with feet apart; his hand reached for his upper lip. "Haven't paid much attention to whom Ellen was seeing . . . gave us quite a shock tonight . . . Mother not strong . . . very bad for her . . . shock. Girls—mm—thoughtless —mm — parents — mm — consideration."

Lizzie raised her platinum-framed eye-glasses, held them at the corner. "Do I know your parents?" she asked insolently.

Jerry colored at her tone. Ellen rushed in with: "Mother, they are Mr. and Mrs. Paul Purdue and they've lived here all their lives."

"I've never met them."

It was slogging hopelessly. But Jerry braced himself and came through smoothly with: "Extremely nice parents—mine. Awfully fond of me and all that. I know it has come suddenly. I'm sorry that you're not well, Mrs. Pendleton, and that it has shocked you."

"I was feeling better, hoping, ever so faintly, that I might be able to enjoy the pleasures of life again . . . and then this comes!"

"But, Mother, it is nice. Something to be happy about! Why do you take that dismal tone?" cried Ellen exasperated.

Lizzie glared at her and drew a deep sighing breath. "I have been a martyr for years. No one knows what I have endured. Some days better—some days worse. I can never make plans like other people, never do the pleasant things I want to do. A sudden shock like this——"

Gavin disappeared from the room and came back with a cigar wrapped in cellophane which he offered to Jerry.

Jerry took a chair nearest Lizzie, shook his head gravely. "It must be terrible," he murmured. "I have an aunt who is an invalid."

Lizzie looked somewhat mollified. "It started with a sore throat, an infection in the blood stream. A very slow and dangerous disease. Few are ever cured." She actually smiled, although it was the slow, self-pitying smile of the invalid who enjoys her illness. "I've tried every doctor here that I have any confidence in, and I've been to specialists in other cities. Sometimes I am helped for a time—usually it is money thrown away. I manage to get about—just get about."

"Seems to me my aunt tried some kind of drinking water, a special kind."

Lizzie knitted her pale, scraggy brows. "Gavin, what was the name of the one I used so long?"

Gavin shook his head gloomily. "Dunno." He, also, took a chair as if the worst of the tension was over.

Congressman Richard Thompson Buckler is the Farmer-Labor nominee for U. S. Representative in Congress. He deserves your Vote and Support. He fearlessly led the farmers' fight in the State Senate and in the U. S. Congress. He voted for you. YOU vote for HIM now! When the farmers prosper, business and labor prosper.

Buckler Pledges Continued Support of and Advocates:

—the Frazier-Lemke bill plan which would provide farm and home loans at 1½ per cent interest and 1½ per cent amortization payments.
—the bill fixing guaranteed minimum price for farm products.
—adequate aid and relief for the drought-striken and needy.
—more liberal and adequate national federal old age pensions.
—fairer treatment for disabled veterans, widows and orphans.
—further legislation in behalf of the independent merchant and the small business man.
—a general federal aid for rural, village and city schools.
—federal government control of money and credits.
—extension of rural electrification

His Record is 100 Per Cent for the People.

Buckler voted and fought for the Frazier-Lemke Farm Refinancing Bill and all other legislation in behalf of the farmers.

Buckler was a member of the Steering Committee and a co-author and sponsor of the Robinson-Patman Equal Opportunity Bill.

Buckler voted for the bank deposit guaranty law.

Buckler voted for the bonus and supported all veteran legislation.

For character and honest, courage and fearlessness, ability and efficiency aggressiveness and experience, vote for and send R. T. Buckler back to Congress for a second term.

He favors a more liberal "Old Age Pension" than the present one which was the best that could be obtained from the reactionary group that controlled the last Regular and Special sessions. Taxes should be paid in accordance with income, is Mr. Morberg's contention, releasing the small homeowner and farmer from the burden of taxation.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of Minnesota

To be submitted at 1936 General Election

STATE OF MINNESOTA, LEGAL DEPARTMENT
HARRY H. PETERSON
Attorney General

St. Paul, Minnesota, April 29, 1936

Honorable Mike Holm,
Secretary of State,
Dear Sir:

In compliance with the provisions of Section 46 of Mason's Minnesota Statutes of 1927, I herewith furnish you a statement of the purpose and effect of all proposed amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota which are to be submitted to the electors of said state at the general election in 1936, in accordance with certain acts adopted by the 1935 legislature.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

By the adoption of Chapter 393 of the Laws of 1935 the legislature has proposed an amendment to Article 8 of the State Constitution. The proposed amendment, if adopted, will not alter the form of any existing section of the Constitution, but will add a new section to be known as Section 8 of said article 8.

The proposed amendment reads as follows:

"Any of the public lands of the state, including lands held in trust for any purpose, may, with the approval of a commission consisting of the governor, the attorney general and the state auditor, be exchanged for lands of the United States and other privately owned lands as the legislature may provide, and the lands so acquired shall be subject to the trust, if any, to which the lands exchanged therefor were subject, and the state shall reserve all mineral and water and water power rights in lands so transferred by the state."

The Purpose and Effect of the Proposed Amendment.

The purpose and effect of this proposed amendment is to authorize the legislature to provide for exchanging any of the public lands of the state for lands of the United States and land privately owned, such exchanges to be made with the approval of a commission consisting of the governor, the attorney general and the state auditor. Such exchanges of land cannot now be made because the State Constitution does not permit the legislature to authorize the sale of school lands, state swamp lands and state internal improvement lands except by public sale. One immediate purpose in granting such authority is to make it possible for the state to acquire compact areas of land for forestry and other conservation purposes by exchanging land outside of such conservation areas for lands of the United States and privately owned lands within such areas.

The proposed amendment requires that all mineral rights, water rights and water power rights in lands so transferred by the state shall be reserved. The land so acquired will become subject to the same trust, if any, as the land disposed of. For example, if school land is given in exchange, the land received will become school land.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2.

By the adoption of Chapter 394 of the Laws of 1935, the legislature proposed an amendment to Section 1 of Article 9 of the State Constitution.

This section now reads as follows:

"The power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended or contracted away. Taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and shall be levied and collected for public purposes, but public burying grounds, public school houses, public hospitals, academies, colleges, universities, and all seminaries of learning, all churches, church property and houses of worship, institutions of purely public charity, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, shall be exempt from taxation, and there may be exempted from taxation personal property not exceeding in value $200, for each household, individual or head of a family, and household goods and farm machinery, as the legislature may determine:

"Provided, that the legislature may authorize municipal corporations to levy and collect assessments for local improvements upon property benefited thereby without regard to a cash valuation, and provided further, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect, modify or repeal any existing law providing for the taxation of the gross earnings of railroads."

If amended as proposed by the legislature, this section will read as follows:

"The power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended or contracted away. Taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and shall be levied and collected for public purposes, but public burying grounds, public school houses, public hospitals, academies, colleges, universities, and all seminaries of learning, all churches, church property and houses of worship, institutions of purely public charity, and public property used exclusively for any public purpose, shall be exempt from taxation, and there may be exempted from taxation personal property not exceeding in value $200.00 for each household, individual or head of a family, and household goods and farm machinery, as the legislature may determine:

"Provided, that the legislature may authorize municipal corporations to levy and collect assessments for local improvements upon property benefited thereby without regard to a cash valuation, and provided further, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect, modify or repeal any existing law providing for the taxation of the gross earnings of railroads.

"Provided further, that after January 1, 1937, no tax shall be imposed on any real or tangible personal property for any state purpose, except that authorized by Section 16 of Article 9 of this Constitution, and/or for the payment of indebtedness of the state incurred prior to January 1, 1937; but this proviso shall not limit, but the state shall have, the right to impose taxes upon royalties, occupations, sales, receipts, incomes, inheritances, gifts, privileges, franchises, or licenses, or upon property on the basis of gross earnings or tonnage, or upon intangibles of every kind."

The Purpose and Effect of the Proposed Amendment.

The purpose and effect of the proposed amendment is to prohibit the imposition of any taxes on real or tangible personal property after January 1, 1937 for any state purpose, except as hereinafter stated, without limiting the right of the state to impose taxes upon royalties, occupations, sales, receipts, incomes, inheritances, gifts, privileges, franchises, or licenses, or upon property on the basis of gross earnings or tonnage, or upon intangibles of every kind, said proposed amendment declaring that the state shall have the right to impose such taxes.

If the said amendment is adopted the state will retain the right to impose taxes on real or tangible personal property for either or both of the following purposes:

(1) To provide funds to be used to construct or improve roads and bridges in this state, as authorized by Section 16 of Article 9 of the State Constitution, for which purpose, under Section 16 of said Article 9, the legislature in its discretion is authorized to provide for an annual tax levy upon the property of this state, not to exceed in any year one mill on all the taxable property within the state; and

(2) To raise money to pay indebtedness of the state incurred prior to January 1, 1937.

Respectfully yours,
HARRY H. PETERSON,
Attorney General.

In many states special committees have been appointed by the governors to study traffic conditions.

This is commendable.

Out of these studies and deliberations will come recommendations that will apply to each and every community in the states involved. There should be more of the studies made. Many conditions on our highways today are serious causes of accidents and, unless careful studies are made, will never come to light.

It is recommended that every community receiving these reports help the committee as much as possible in bringing to the front serious conditions in that community. There is not a community anywhere that does not have a traffic problem. These problems should be discussed freely and recommendations made to the committee so that action can be taken by the main committee.

Pioneer Called

Funeral services were conducted Wednesday afternoon from the Free Mission Church for Ole R. Saxberg, pioneer of this community.

Mr. Saxberg was born in Skaane Sweden on March 10, 1865, and came to America when he was 19 years old.

He settled on his farm northeast of Holt 30 years ago and lived there until he passed away.

On June 15, 1904 he was united in marriage to Alma Johnson, daughter of Erick Johnson. To this union six children were born two of which died in infancy.

Left to mourn the departed are: his wife; three sons, Melvin, Elvin and Arthur; one daughter, Emelia; all at home. Two brothers John Freeberg of Crookston and Henry Young of Middle River; also a sister-in-law Mrs. Nels Saxberg and sons Arvid and Martin.

Mr. Saxberg had been ailing for several years and was stricken with pneumonia a week ago. He passed away at a hospital in Thief River Falls suddenly on Saturday evening.

Carlson Funeral Service had charge of funeral arrangements, Rev. Myhrer officiated, and interment was made in the Ridge Cemetery.

The News joins friends in extending sympathy to the Saxberg family.

PEAS
Partial to Parties

MODERN parties are taking a new slant. The guests do the cooking. Erstwhile parties were notable for guests being guests and hosts being hosts. In fact so busy was the hostess for days before the party, in order that the guests might be served without lifting a finger, that it was not unusual to be entertained by a weary hostess.

It's Different Today

Perish the thought. Today the guests do the work—and like it.

Try giving a party where every guest prepares at least one dish. It's really good sport, and good eating. Be sure that you have plenty of canned peas on hand, for you'll be surprised how many people will say that their own particular crackerjack culinary performance calls for peas. Peas are partial to parties.

If you have some patty shells or pastry cases on hand and would like to supply a recipe for a guest who is racking his brains for something to make, here is a good suggestion:

Party Peas in Pastry Cases: Make a white sauce of two tablespoons butter, two tablespoons flour, three-fourths cup evaporated milk and all of the liquor from one No. 2 can of peas and one 2-ounce can of mushrooms. Season with salt and pepper. Add the peas and the mushrooms and also one-fourth cup of shredded pimiento. Reheat and serve in pastry cases, or in small patty shells. This serves six persons.

Wedding Reception

Relatives and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Art Moe gave them a wedding reception on Sunday afternoon at the Free Mission Church.

A nice program of songs by the Johnson and Fluke sisters, and Donna Mae Carlson, and Mrs. A. Langlie, and a speech by Rev. Myhrer, was rendered after which many useful and beautiful gifts were presented to the newlyweds.

Lunch was served and a sociable time had by all.

Deer Season Opens Nov. 15

An 11-day deer season for 16 northern Minnesota counties was designated by the state Conservation Commission at its regular meeting last week. The deer season will open from Nov. 15 to Nov. 25 inclusive.

At the same time the commission asked Governor Peterson to issue an excutive order providing for an 11-day bear season from Nov. 15 to Nov. 25 in all counties having a deer season. The commission also requested Governor Petersen to elminate the statutory bear season which extends from April 15 to May 15.

Fawns are not included in the deer season and will remain protected in all counties. The deer season will be fully open in Koochiching, Lake of the Woods, Roseau, Lake, Cook, St. Louis, Beltrami, Hubbard, Cass, Clearwater, Itasca, Crow Wing, Aitkin, Kanabec, Pine, and Carlton counties. Deer may also be taken in Becker county, east of the Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Sault St. Marie railroad; in Marshall and Kittson counties east of the old Pembina trail; and in Mille Lacs county north of the Great Northern railroad throug Milaca.

The Squirrel season will be open from October 15 to January 1, with a daily limit of seven and 14 permitted in possession. Raccoon may be taken from November 10 to December 1; mink from November 1 to Februrary 15; and skunk from October 20 to May 1.

Europeans Are Lining Up, Communists vs. Fascists

JUST about everything necessary to a general European war is now ready. At this distance it seems that Josef Stalin, dictator of Soviet Russia, will be the man to fire the starting pistol; and he is reported to be convinced that another great conflict is unavoidable. The nations of the continent are lining up as Communist or Fascist, either in the constitution of their governments or in their active sympathies. The immediate occasion for their disputes is the civil war in Spain. Nearly all the continental governments and that of Great Britain joined in an agreement of nonintervention, but that pact is about played out. Russia, accusing Portugal, Germany and Italy of aiding the Fascist Spanish rebels, has denounced the agreement and declared she reserves freedom to help the Madrid government; the accused nations deny the Soviet charges and retort that Russia already has sent many shiploads of war supplies and munitions to the Spanish loyalists. At least three ships, alleged to be Russian and laden with munitions for Madrid, have been bombed by insurgent planes.

Josef Stalin

Portugal severed diplomatic relations with the Madrid government, and the representatives of the two countries were recalled. Dr. Armindo Monteiro, Portuguese foreign minister, followed up this action by sending to Lord Plymouth, British chairman of the nonintervention committee, a long document accusing Russia of having planned and brought about the Spanish civil war. He named the Russian diplomats, agitators and soldiers who, he charged, were directing the operations. He alleged that Moscow sought to start a revolution in Portugal and thus provide a base for attacking General Franco's insurgent forces in the rear.

Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy have buried their differences for the time being and reached an agreement on a united policy. This was outlined in a communique published after Italian Foreign Minister Galeazzo Ciano had conferred with Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler. In the first place Hitler and Mussolini inform the world that they intend to recognize the insurgent government headed by General Franco as the legitimate regime in Spain, but they promise to respect the terms of the nonintervention agreement.

Other important declarations of policy by the two states are:

1. Co-operation to protect the peace of Europe and "the holy riches of European civilization" and family life.

2. Endorsement of a conference to rewrite the Locarno pact guaranteeing European borders, but only in the west. This implied that neither would agree to Soviet Russia's presence at the meeting.

3. Co-operation for the rehabilitation of the Danubian countries.

U. S. Submachine Guns for French Fascists?

POPULAIRE, the organ of Premier Leon Blum's Socialist party, alleges that a shipment of submachine guns from the United States has been added to the secret armaments of the Croux de Feu in preparation for a civil war in France. The Croix de Feu, a Fascist organization headed by Col. Francois de la Rocque, was dissolved recently by the government and was succeeded by the new Social party.

Populaire, referring to the submachine guns, said, these "terrible weapons used by American gangsters" arrived from America through the port of Havre and through Holland. The paper added that the weapons are being planted in caches in Normandie and elsewhere in the north of France. Furthermore, according to Populaire, great quantities of tear gas bombs and tear gas pistols are arriving from Germany for the use of the Fascists.

Mussolini Holds "Eternal" Peace Is Absurd

PREMIER MUSSOLINI, talking at Bologna, said that Italy's "olive branch grows out of an immense forest of 8,000,000 bayonets"; and next day at Imola he told 70,000 listeners that he hoped for long periods of peace, but not for "eternal peace, which is absurd and impossible."

"The Italian people, which gave its blood for the empire, is ready for any other trial when the crucial hour approaches," the Fascist chief shouted. "In order to make peace—just as to make love—it is necessary that there be two."

Spanish Rebels Pushing Toward the Capital

GENERAL FRANCO, head of the Spanish insurgents, ordered the immediate taking of Madrid and each day the state of the defenders of the capital became more desperate. The rebels closed in relentlessly, making effective use of bombing planes and armored tanks.

President Manuel Azana and some of his cabinet ministers slipped out of Madrid and appeared in Barcelona. Ostensibly they were making a tour of the loyalist fronts, but the general opinion was that they had fled from the capital to make a "last stand" in Catalonia, which province always is radical. Anyhow, Azana took over an office in the Catalan parliament building for himself and his secretarial staff. Senora Azana has quit Spain. She appeared in Toulouse, France, and departed for an unannounced destination.

British Government Curbs Oswald Mosley

GREAT BRITAIN is determined to keep out of the Communist-Fascist conflict if possible. Sir Oswald Mosley and his black-shirted Fascist followers have been trying to stir up trouble in England and in consequence the cabinet decided to put a ban on all political uniforms. It was expected that when parliament reassembled the government would announce drastic action to suppress the Mosley organization or at least to put a stop to its demonstrations and parades in Leeds, Manchester and the east end of London, where these Fascists like to create ugly feeling against Jews.

Sir Oswald Mosley

The public demand in England for action against the Fascists has been strengthened by the revelation that Mosley takes his advice from Berlin and Rome. It is reported, and widely believed, that Mosley's tactics of deliberately leading his Blackshirts into Jewish communities are based on advice given him by Paul Joseph Goebels, Hitler's propaganda minister.

Labor Conference Will Assemble on Nov. 9

SECRETARY OF LABOR FRANCES PERKINS announced that the third national conference on labor legislation, designed to stimulate the raising of work standards through federal and state co-operative efforts, will be called into session in Washington on November 9, and will last three days.

Governors of all the states have been asked to send official delegates including labor commissioners. Private individuals who have special knowledge of labor problems have been invited to attend the conference.

Green's Big Fortune Moved to a Bank

EIGHT armored cars escorted by armed private guards and state police, carried a fortune of $25,000,000 from the estate of the late Col. E. H. R. Green in South Dartmouth, Mass., to the First National bank of Boston. There it will be stored in vaults until legal actions may be taken to obtain income and inheritance taxes for the state of Massachusetts.

The fortune, which consists of the famous coin collection, valued at 5 millions; the stamp collection, valued at 3½ millions; a large amount of cash and securities, and a quantity of uncut diamonds, has been under constant guard at the Green home since his death.

Supreme Court to Pass on Wagner Labor Act

BEFORE taking a recess of two weeks the United States Supreme court announced that it would review and hand down a decision at this term upon the Wagner labor relations act. Many lawyers believe this law will be held unconstitutional, for in the Guffey coal act decision the Supreme court held that the relationship between employers and employees was local and beyond the power of congressional regulation.

Browder Not Allowed to Talk in Tampa

TERRE HAUTE is not the only town that refuses to listen to Earl Browder, the Presidential candidate of the Communist party. Browder went to Tampa to deliver a campaign speech but as he began talking a group of men violently broke up the meeting and upset the speaker's stand. The leader of the attacking crowd denied that their action was sponsored by any organization, saying "We are just a group of red-blooded American citizens."

SYNOPSIS

Kezia Marsh, pretty, selfish and twenty, arrives home in Corinth from school and is met by her older brother, Hugh. He drives her to the Marsh home where her widowed mother, Fluvanna, a warm-hearted, self-sacrificing and understanding soul, welcomes her. Kezia's sister, Margery, plump and matronly with the care of three children, is at lunch with them. Hugh's wife, Dorrie, has pleaded a previous engagement. On the way back to his job at the steel plant founded by one of his forebears, Hugh passes Doc Hiller, a boyhood friend whom he no longer sees frequently because of Dorrie's antipathy. Fluvanna Marsh wakens the next morning from a dream about her late husband, Jim, whose unstable character she fears Kezia has inherited. Soon Ellen Pendleton comes over. She is an artistically inclined girl who is a distant niece of Fluvanna's and a favorite of Hugh's. She happily tells Fluvanna she has become engaged to Jerry Purdue. Ellen fears that her father and mother, Gavin and Lizzie, will not approve the match. Hugh and Dorrie go out to the Freeland Farms to dance with their friends, Cun and Joan Whitney. Whitney, who has been out of work, announces that he has landed a new position. They see Ellen Pendleton and Jerry Purdue. Cun and Dorrie dance together and then disappear for a while. Dancing with Joan, Hugh is amazed to find her in tears. Apparently she has some secret worry over her husband, Cun. Hugh sees Kezia accompanied by a young man. When Ellen and Jerry speak about their engagement to Ellen's parents, Lizzie is disagreeable until Jerry sympathizes with her imagined ailments. Gavin, a banker, is cold to Jerry's proposal. While Lizzie unbends slightly, the matter is left pending.

"It's a shame when a woman is at the age when she can enjoy life most," continued Jerry, "and she is taken with something ghastly like that! My aunt was a wonderful looking woman too." He hitched his chair an inch or so nearer Lizzie, looked into her face with sympathy and interest.

Pale fires lit in her eyes, a revival of vanity. "Wonderful? . . . Perhaps not now, but you should see my pictures taken when I was Ellen's age! I remember when I was young and lived in Ridley, Mr. Parkinson—later he became the lumber capitalist out west somewhere, Oregon, I think—used to call me the Rose of Ridley! . . . You remember that, don't you, Gavin?"

"Uh-mm."

"Ellen has something of my look—at times."

"A girl is usually indebted to her mother for her charm."

Lizzie laughed and tapped him with her eyeglasses. "I see why my girl was so taken with you!"

The ice in her voice which had broken up with mention of her illness, now became a fluid running quantity, light, even playful. "But, seriously speaking, we feel our child is too young to think of getting married."

"Working?" asked Gavin in the first pause.

"H'much?"

"Thirty-five a week."

His fist at his lip, Gavin shook his head. "N'much."

"No, but I have hopes of getting something better. A fellow has to start at the bottom in the steel business. I intend to go to the school for salesmen if I can get in."

Gavin looked at him through his thick-lensed glasses. "Keep a car?"

"A sort of one." Jerry grinned.

Gavin glanced at Jerry's suit meaningly. He had computed its cost and suspected Jerry of extravagant taste ~~in clothes.~~ Lizzie shook her head at him. "Settle it again—no hurry," he muttered. He left the room precipitously and did not return.

Lizzie changed to a more comfortable chair, and drawn by Jerry's deferential attention, recounted in a tangential flow stories of her activities before she had been stricken, of her two sons, Caleb and Gavin Junior, the trouble she had keeping competent help, the oriental rugs she had bought, and the hotels she had found most agreeable in Atlantic City.

It was almost twelve when she rose to go upstairs. She even shook hands with Jerry cordially. "Be patient," she admonished them. "I'll see what I can do with her father."

Ellen went to the front steps with Jerry. "You ruinous man," she whispered, "captivating Mother like that!"

"I took your cue. You said 'Be nice to her' and I followed instructions."

She kissed him. "We might sit here on the steps while you smoke a cigarette."

"A cigarette? How about two?"

"Make it two," she answered laughing. She was proud, hopeful, unutterably happy.

The first Hugh Pendleton had come out from Connecticut in the year 1802, made his way with horses and an ox team over the hazardous mountain roads, and taken up land along the Penachang Valley in Ohio. He built a cabin near the stream and traded with the few settlers and the wandering bands of Indians. He sent for his family, his wife, with three small children, and his two brothers. Hugh started a store which flourished as the settlement grew into a village. He made trips to Pittsburgh by boat for supplies and bartered or sold, according to the need of the individual.

Presently the word traveled about that two settlers, Wyant and Nash, had erected a blast furnace on the shore of the river a few miles above the settlement. They turned out stoves, kettles and castings, crude in appearance, but serviceable.

Hugh's trips to Pittsburgh had awakened his interest in the need for iron in a new community, and a nebulous idea took form as he weighed out coffee and tea and flour. He talked of it to his sons, Hugh and Caleb and Silas, and fired their youthful imaginations.

Wyant died and Nash moved on to Indiana, abandoning the simple furnace, while Hugh figured and planned and explained to his sons.

The Pendleton boys went into partnership when they grew up, started another furnace. By the middle forties, Hugh Junior, Caleb and Silas Pendleton were the owners of a successful iron works which employed eighteen hundred men.

The Pendletons intermarried with the Woods, the Renshaws, the Moffats, the Debarrys, newcomers from Virginia, the east and England, until in the nineteen thirties the relationships would have taken a genealogical expert to unravel. The society of the town was a spider-web of distant cousinships turning up at unexpected places. Much of the leadership of old Hugh Pendleton had descended to the men of the family; the women had grace and fastidiousness. Alien blood mingled with theirs, warm blood, cold blood, but something racial persisted.

Fluvanna was the great-great-granddaughter of the first Hugh, descending through Hugh, his son. Her father had been Ely Pendleton, and she his only child—a swaying, anemone creature, fine-boned as most of the Pendleton women were. Light brown hair grew back from a curving hairline; the tracery of the brows above full eyelids might have been done by a pencil stroke; the nose was sensitive; the mouth curved and wistful.

Although James Marsh had been welcomed among them as a cousin of the Clements, there was not a great deal of approval of the marriage of James and Fluvanna. There were local grievances—families whose sons had yearned for Fluvanna and been passed over. Although pride in clothes was a Pendleton credo, James was thought to lean toward too great an elegance in dress. His handsome bearing was no novelty; many of the men had that; they suspected his grace, his flattery, as qualities which did not go with the solid virtues of monogamy. As the years went by, the older ones shook their heads oracularly as reports of his irregularities came in—gambling, drinking, neglecting his business, Ely Pendleton looking grim and Fluvanna, gay in company, but when off guard, seeming frightened and distrait.

She Was Proud, Hopeful, Unutterably Happy.

Ely Pendleton died suddenly, and Fluvanna and her family moved into the old house with her mother who was an invalid. A year or two of comparative ease and prosperity followed. James was thoughtful toward the suffering mother; debts were paid; the feverish prosperity of the War was on. James made money in the stock market and it erased the galling sense of obligation he had left when old Ely, stern-browed, thin-lipped, had met his pressing deficits. Mrs. Pendleton died just after Armistice day, and James was very kind that winter.

Then business took a holiday, stocks slumped, and Fluvanna began a gradual parting with the income her father had left in trust for her. Her mother's money had been left to her unconditionally, and that went in appalling amounts to cover the very good securities, sure to hit a hundred and ten, which James had bought on margin.

The more James lost, the more he drank, the oftener he was seen morose and truculent, leaning over his cards late at night, playing with men who were luckier than he. Late one afternoon, the town rang with the news that he had killed himself.

Wives, Know Yourselves!—

Accurate Analysis Will Do Much to Overcome Difficulty in Wedded Life

SPEAKING on the question of trial marriages, a well known writer said, "There should be no need for trial when two people know their own abilities and have measured themselves accurately. Two people who understand themselves will never, I believe, have any difficulty living happily together after marriage."

That is a new slant on the question of success in marriage, supplements a woman writer of national fame. Not "Know thy husband" — or "wife," but "know thyself!"

And, come to think of it, isn't most of the discontent and dissatisfaction in marriage traceable to ideas of ourselves—that may be misconceptions, no less than our illusions about the other person?

How many women's dissatisfaction with their husband has as its source the thought of all they gave up to marry him, all they "might have had" if they had married a certain other man?

How many women's discontent with the role of wife and mother springs from the thought of how much more fascinating pastimes they might have had if they had followed that career?

How many girl's impossible expectations of a fulltime lover and Prince Charming originates in an exaggerated notion of their own devastating beauty and charm?

If all discontented wives would look deeply unto themselves, measure themselves, stop fooling themselves, many might discover that the other man they might have married is a self-nurtured illusion; that the career of their dreams is not a soft snap and a joy forever; but a grueling, exhausting job which might have worn them out if they had qualified for it, which they probably would have been unable to do; that they themselves are neither devastating beauties nor always charming, but women who are frequently disappointing and difficult to live with. They might discover and admit to themselves that they are greatly in debt to their husbands for many things that make life easier and better and more worthwhile—that they would not get along so well without them.

Then they might think more of doing their part of trying to make those husbands happy. And that effort on the part of one must inevitably go a long way toward a mutually happy and successful marriage.

A NARROW window may let in light,
A tiny star dispel the gloom of night,
A little deed a mighty wrong
set right.
A rose, abloom may make a

Peas for Parties

PEAS appear so often on our family dinner menus that most of us do not regard peas as a party dish. Yet we have only to look over menus for entertaining to see how excellently the aristocratic pea fits into our social scheme.

We find the pea much sought after for buffet suppers to escort such dishes as chicken patties, lobster newburgs and salmon ramekins. We find peas guests of honor at bridge parties in the company of crisp vegetables for salad; and at dinner parties it is the usual thing to see the popular pea soup ushering in the first course of the meal.

Tested Recipes

Here are some recipes which you will like to paste in your recipe book under the head of "Entertaining."

Cauliflower and Pea Salad: Two cups of cauliflowerlets should be boiled tender but not mushy. Keep them whole and distinct. Marinate separately and thoroughly the cauliflower, one cup canned peas and one can of asparagus tips. Toss the peas and cauliflower lightly together and pile on the lettuce. Arrange the asparagus tips around the edge, and garnish with mayonnaise.

Corn and Pea Rarebit on Toast: Make a cheese sauce of two tablespoons butter, two tablespoons flour, one and one-half cups milk and one cup of grated cheese. Drain the contents of an 8-ounce can of whole kernel corn and of an 11-ounce can of peas. Sauté for a few minutes in two tablespoons butter, add to the cheese sauce. Season to taste with salt and pepper, serve on toast.*

A $1 Dinner for 4

*"All human history attests
That happiness for man,—the hungry sinner!—
Since Eve ate apples much depends on dinner."*

So said Lord Byron. Much depends, also, on how much the dinner costs, in these days when thrift is a watchword. Here is a dinner which serves four persons happily and costs only one dollar:

MENU

Cream of Bean Soup 21¢
Baked Eggs en Casserole 29¢
Fluffy Boiled Rice 5¢
Cucumber and Watercress Salad 14¢
Bread and Butter 8¢
Fried Bananas and Cream 20¢
Demi-tasse 3¢

Cream of Bean Soup: Thoroughly mix the contents of one can of consommé and one can of bean soup. Heat and add one-half of a 6-ounce can of evaporated milk. Season to taste and serve in cups.

Baked Eggs en Casserole: Sauté one small diced onion in four tablespoons of butter for a few minutes, then add three tablespoons of flour and stir until smooth. Add the contents of one No. 2 can of tomatoes and cook until thick and creamy. Add one teaspoon salt and enough pepper and paprika to season. Hard-cook four eggs, peel and cut in halves. Put a little of the sauce in each of four individual baking dishes, lay two half eggs in each and cover with the remaining sauce. Mix one-fourth cup of crumbs with three tablespoons grated cheese and sprinkle over the top. Bake until brown.*

The English 3 class plan to have some hot debates this week Robert, Inez and Lucille will talk on the 20th century being more conducive to development of character than Revolutionary Period, against Roy, Lorna and Clara. On Friday, Marian, Harold and Florence will debate on the question of Federal government regulations of conservation movement, against Opal, Doris and Vern. Alfred, Alton and Ferne will act as judges.

Our Sympathy goes to the Minn. Golden Gophers after the defeat on Saturday.

In his Modern and American History classes, Mr. Nybakken is offering a prize for the best guess for each state on the election campaign.

Roy Moline has two peculiar habits of chewing gum and sitting with his feet in the aisle. Tired of this, Miss H. exclaimed "Roy, will you take that gum out of your mouth and stick your feet in?"

Upper Grades

The Upper Grades had their Holloween Party on Friday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock. Numerous games were played. The ones most enjoyed were the cracker-eating contest (ask Clifford how he likes his prize—more crackers). The result of one game shows us why some of the boys get up so early to get their shoes on in time for school.

Refreshments were served by a committee of girls. Rev. and Mrs. Hanson were guests at the party.

Intermediate Grades

Last week we were all busy making Hallowe'en masks and decorations for the part which was given on Friday.

The 3rd grade has been studying Indians. They have constructed a wigwam and have made an Indian scene on the sand-table.

The 4th grade have new Minnesota history books and work books.

The 3rd and 4th graders have begun an Indian museum in connection with their Indian study.

Dale Lorentson has been absent because of illness. We miss him and hope he'll be back soon.

Erma Hanson is a new pupil in our room. This makes an enrollment of 32 in 3, 4, and 5 grades.

Primary Grades

Irvin Larson, Orval Kolden, Donna Mae Moline and Donald Fluke had 100 in Spelling on Friday.

In Arithmetic we are studying the clock and easy subtraction problems.

We have two new pupils in our room. Phyllis Hanson in the first grade and Donald Myers in the second, began school on Monday.

4-H Club News

(Crowded out last two weeks)

Itasca State Park

Do you know how Itasca got it's name? The name came from Indian words Veritas Caput, meaning true head.

That is one of the many things we learned during our four day stay there. This trip was awarded in connection with our 4H conservation work.

We spent three days exploring the park. On Friday we drove by car through the park to as many places as possible. We visited Douglas Lodge. While there Parker Anderson gave us a very interesting talk on trees. We also saw the Fountain of Youth and climbed a 100 foot lookout tower.

On Saturday we went on a hike through the woods and along the shore of Lake Itasca. We studied the beaver dams and saw trees three inches in diameter that had been cut down by the beaver.

We were also given the history of different parts of the park as we came to them.

On Sunday we went for a one and a half hour boat ride with 85 others. We went through several of the lakes and saw many interesting things and historical places. Some of them were: The Mohawk trail, where Morrison traveled in 1804 and 1812; Peace Pipe Spring; The First Base Tower, erected in 1901; Bog Bay; a large stone put up for Samuel Green, the first forester; Schoolcraft Island and Preachers grave

Every evening there was an assembly program with speakers who told us about conservation of wild life. Mr. [illegible], a former game warden, spoke, and one of the things he said was mans worst enemies were 1st the cat, 2nd crow, 3rd fire. Mr. R. King, a biology scientist, Mr. Stafford King, State Auditor, Mr. Cruikshank, Mr. Mac Callah and Mr. Peck were the other outstanding speakers during our stay. Mr. Kittleson lead us in singing and Mr. Ingvolson, Miss Wassel, Miss Suntag and Miss Schink led in recreational period.

As a whole I think this was the most well spent days and the most educational trip anyone could ever win.

Vivian Larson.

Hunters Asked to get Deer Data

Big game hunters this year are asked to cooperate with the division of game and fish in obtaining information about deer population on several hunting areas within state and national forests.

Checking stations will be established at all points of travel into these areas, and hunters will be asked to report their success and to permit certain measurements to be made of deer taken.

Hunters killing deer bearing ear tags are requested to report the number of the tag and the location of the kill to the division of game and fish. This information [illegible]

Hunters will also be asked to report the game [illegible] number [illegible] days spent in hunting, and the distance [illegible]

Use these columns to advertise that unneeded, but valuable article for sale or exchange.

Many Elk Outside Refuge

Several game wardens will be stationed near the Red Lake refuge during the deer season to warn hunters that they may encounter elk that may have strayed from the refuge.

Employees of the state forest service recently counted 31 elk in territory outside the northwest corner of the Red Lake refuge. Last year 27 elk were transferred from Itasca Park to the refuge, and the appear to be thriving.

Safetygrams BY FRED W. BRAUN The Safety Man

When you drive your car out of your garage are you sure that it is in A1 shape?

"Four wheels and no brakes" applies to many individual vehicles. Brakes should be adjusted periodically. Your lighting apparatus should meet these requirements: good headlight lamps, properly adjusted so as to give the greatest convenience in driving, and a well charged battery that will make these lights function as they should. Rear view mirrors are a necessity and should be properly directed. The steering gear should operate easily. Keep it adjusted so that your car responds as you want it to. In general, be ever on the alert for minor evidences of faulty equipment, when discovered have it adjusted promptly.

Farm For Sale

Deer Season Opens Nov. 15

At sunrise next Sunday thousands of Minnesota big game hunters will head for the north country in search of deer and bear.

The season as set by the State Conservation Commision extends from Nov. 15 to Nov. 25 inclusive

At the same time the commission asked Governor Peterson to issue an executive order providing for an 11-day bear season from Nov. 15 to Nov. 25 in all counties having a deer season. The commission also requested Governor Petersen to elminate the statutory bear season which extends from April 15 to May 15.

Fawns are not included in the deer season and will remain protected in all counties. The deer season will be fully open in Koochiching, Lake of the Woods, Roseau, Lake, Cook, St. Louis, Beltrami, Hubbard, Cass, Clearwater, Itasca, Crow Wing, Aitkin, Kanabec, Pine, and Carlton counties. Deer may also be taken in Becker county, [illegible] of the Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Sault St. Marie railroad; in Marshall and Kittson counties east of the old Pembina trail; and in Mille Lacs county north of the Great Northern railroad through [illegible].

The squirrel season will be open from October 15 to January 1, with a daily limit of seven and 14 permitted in possession. Raccoon may be taken from November 10 to December 1; mink from November 1 to Februrary 15; and skunk from October 20 to May 1.

All deer hunters are required to obtain big game hunting licenses. The resident license fee is $2.25, non-resident [illegible].

Northwest School News

That is one of the many things we learned during our four day stay there. This trip was awarded in connection with our 4H conservation work.

We spent three days exploring the park. On Friday we drove by car through the park to as many places as possible. We visited Douglas Lodge. While there Parker Anderson gave us a very interesting talk on trees. We also saw the Fountain of Youth and climbed a 100 foot lookout tower.

On Saturday we went on a hike through the woods and along the shore of Lake Itasca. We studied the beaver dams and saw trees three inches in diameter that had been cut down by the beaver.

We were also given the history of different parts of the park as we came to them.

On Sunday we went for a one and a half hour boatride with 85 others. We went through several of the lakes and saw many interesting things and historical places. Some of them were: The Mohawk trail, where Morrison traveled in 1804 and 1812; Peace Pipe Spring; The First Base Tower, erected in 1901; Bog Bay; a large stone put up for Samuel Green, the first forester; Schoolcraft Island and Preachers grave

Every evening there was an assembly program with speakers who told us about conservation of wild life. Mr. Munch, a former game warden, spoke, and one of the things he said was mans worst enemies were 1st the cat, 2nd crow, 3rd fire. Mr. R. King, a biology scientist, Mr. Stafford King, State Auditor, Mr. Cruiksbank, Mr. Mac Callah and Mr. Peck were the other outstanding speakers during our stay Mr. Kittleson lead us in singing and Mr. Ingvolson, Miss Wassel, Miss Suntag and Miss Schink led in recreational period.

As a whole I think this was the most well spent days and the most educational trip anyone could ever win.

Vivian Larson.

Hunters Asked to get Deer Data

Big game hunters this year are asked to cooperate with the division of game and fish in obtaining information about deer population on several hunting areas within state and national forests.

Checking stations will be established at all points of travel into these areas, and hunters will be asked to report their success and to permit certain measurements to be made of deer taken.

Hunters killing deer bearing ear tags are requested to report the number of the tags and the location of the kill to the division of game and fish. This information will facilitate the gathering of data as to distance normally traveled by deer and will eventually provide a standard for establishing the size of game refuges.

Hunters will also be asked to report the approximate number of deer seen, the number of days spent in hunting, and the distance covered.

Use these columns to advertise that unneeded, but valuable article for sale or exchange.

Many Elk Outside Refuge

Several game wardens will be stationed near the Red Lake refuge during the deer season to warn hunters that they may encounter elk that may have strayed from the refuge.

Employees of the state forest service recently counted 31 elk in territory outside the northwest corner of the Red Lake refuge. Last year 27 elk were transferred from Itasca Park to the refuge, and the appear to be thriving.

When you drive your car out of your garage are you sure that it is in A1 shape?

"Four wheels and no brakes" applies to many individual vehicles. Brakes should be adjusted periodically. Your lighting apparatus should meet these requirements: good headlight lamps, properly adjusted so as to give the greatest convenience in driving, and a well charged battery that will make these lights function as they should. Rear view mirrors are a necessity and should be properly directed. The steering gear should operate easily. Keep it adjusted so that your car responds as you want it to. In general, be ever on the alert for minor evidences of faulty equipment, when discovered have it adjusted promptly.

Deer Season Opens Nov. 15

At sunrise next Sunday thousands of Minnesota big game hunters will head for the north country in search of deer and bear.

The season as set by the State Conservation Commision extends from Nov. 15 to Nov. 25 inclusive

At the same time the commission asked Governor Peterson to issue an excutive order providing for an 11-day bear season from Nov. 15 to Nov. 25 in all counties having a deer season. The commission also requested Governor Petersen to elminate the statutory bear season which extends from April 15 to May 15.

Fawns are not included in the deer season and will remain protected in all counties. The deer season will be fully open in Koochiching, Lake of the Woods, Roseau, Lake, Cook, St. Louis, Beltrami, Hubbard, Cass, Clearwater, Itasca, Crow Wing, Aitkin, Kanabec, Pine, and Carlton counties. Deer may also be taken in Becker county, east of the Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Sault St. Marie railroad; in Marshall and Kittson counties east of the old Pembina trail; and in Mille Lacs county north of the Great Northern railroad throug Milaca.

The Squirrel season will be open from October 15 to January 1, with a daily limit of seven and 14 permitted in possession. Raccoon may be taken from November 10 to December 1; mink from November 1 to Februrary 15; and skunk from October 20 to May 1.

All deer hunters are required to obtain big game hunting licenses. The resident license fee is $2.25, non-resident $25.25.

To Quickly Ease Pains of Rheumatism

Bayer Tablets Dissolve Almost Instantly

In 2 seconds by stop watch, a genuine BAYER Aspirin tablet starts to disintegrate and go to work. Drop a Bayer Aspirin tablet into a glass of water. By the time it hits the bottom of the glass it is disintegrating. What happens in this glass . . . happens in your stomach.

Ask Your Doctor About Genuine BAYER Aspirin

Any person who suffers from pains of rheumatism should know this:

Two genuine BAYER ASPIRIN tablets, taken with a full glass of water, will usually ease even severe rheumatic pains in a remarkably short time.

Ask your doctor about this. He will probably tell you there is nothing better. For real Bayer Aspirin tablets not only offer a potent analgesic (pain reliever), but start going to work almost instantly you take them. Note illustration of glass.

Try this simple way. You'll be surprised at how quickly pain eases. Get real Bayer Aspirin by asking for it by its full name, "Bayer Aspirin" at any drug store. Now virtually one cent a tablet.

Stomach Gas So Bad Seems To Hurt Heart

"The gas on my stomach was so bad I could not eat or sleep. Even my heart seemed to hurt. A friend suggested Adlerika. The first dose I took brought me relief. Now I eat as I wish, sleep fine and never felt better."—Mrs. Jas. Filler.

Adlerika acts on BOTH upper and lower bowels while ordinary laxatives act on the lower bowel only. Adlerika gives your system a thorough cleansing, bringing out old, poisonous matter that you would not believe was in your system and that has been causing gas pains, sour stomach, nervousness and headaches for months.

Give your bowels a REAL cleansing with Adlerika and see how good you feel. Just one spoonful relieves GAS and stubborn constipation. Leading Druggists.

SYNOPSIS

Kezia Marsh, pretty, selfish and twenty, arrives home in Corinth from school and is met by her older brother, Hugh. He drives her to the Marsh home where her widowed mother, Fluvanna, a warm-hearted, self-sacrificing and understanding soul, welcomes her. Kezias sister, Margery, plump and matronly with the care of three children, is at lunch with them. Hugh's wife, Dorrie, has pleaded a previous engagement. On the way back to his job at the steel plant founded by one of his forebears, Hugh passes Doc Hiller, a boyhood friend whom he no longer sees frequently because of Dorrie's antipathy. Fluvanna Marsh wakens the next morning from a dream about her late husband, Jim, whose unstable character she fears Kezia has inherited. Ellen Pendleton comes over. She is an artistically inclined girl who is a distant niece of Fluvanna's and a favorite of Hugh's. She happily tells Fluvanna she has become engaged to Jerry Purdue. Ellen fears that her father and mother, Gavin and Lizzie, will not approve the match. Hugh and Dorrie go out to the Freeland Farms to dance with their friends, Cun and Joan Whitney. Whitney, who has been out of work, announces that he has a new position. Cun and Dorrie dance together and then disappear for a while. Dancing with Joan, Hugh is amazed to find her in tears. Apparently she has some secret worry over her husband, Cun. When Ellen and Jerry speak about their engagement to Ellen's parents, Lizzie is disagreeable until Jerry sympathizes with her imagined ailments. The matter is left pending.

It was whispered around that he had been threatened with prison, that he had used company money for his own use. People shook their heads over a wasted life, women discussed it at tea parties for a week, then the world moved on about its own consumingly interesting affairs.

Fluvanna was ill for several weeks. Dry-eyed, white, almost speechless, she lay in bed. Her friends whispered of shock—she had found him that way after she heard the shot. Small wonder she was ill with that, and if she knew half the things that were rumored!

When she grew better, she devoted herself to her children and went out very little. Her friends could not surmise the poignancies that harmless, idle conversation could awaken, could not vision the pain that talk of home and husbands and plans for the future could awaken in a tortured soul, bleeding with memories.

CHAPTER IV

Hugh was intensely annoyed as he buttered his breakfast roll. "You say you wrote to him, and then you got this letter? Why didn't you say something to me first?"

"I thought I might persuade you to change," answered Dorrie.

He shook his head. "It wouldn't do, darling, at all. Insurance is a business I know nothing about. It would take me a year or two to learn—and what would we live on during that time?"

"John thinks you might do very well in a few months. See what he says," she tossed the letter over to him from John Reeper, husband of her sister Beryl.

It was a mild communication, offering little or nothing; if Hugh wanted to take up the insurance business in New York, he would put him in touch with the right parties. Hugh groaned to himself that Dorrie should regard this as a business opportunity!

The lace on the flowing sleeve of Dorrie's negligee fell away as she lifted her arm to pour a cup of coffee. "Your father was in the insurance business—you should have some talent for it," she said idly.

Hugh disregarded that. "We'd have to move away."

"Exactly."

"You want to? Leave this little place, our place? The arbor-vitae hedge is coming along so nicely, and the peach and plum trees we planted——"

"Sentimental as a woman"

"I'd hate to leave Corinth—even if this were a real opportunity—and it isn't. The place where you were born sort of gets into your blood. You know everyone . . . and Mother—she's here."

"All the foolish objections first and the real one last!"

Hugh looked at her reproachfully.

"And you like the steel business? I've heard considerable complaint about how hard that is!" She was using the curling tone he disliked, very soft, edged with malice.

"I've spent eight years in it. My grandfather was in it; most of my relatives are. At least I know what it's about."

When she did not answer he went on pleadingly. "I haven't done so badly here, Dorrie. And it hasn't been my name or connections. Those don't count with competition keen as it is. I started at the bottom and they advanced me. I might get a good salary some day—yes, a really good one."

She threw out her hands; a small, wise smile curved her lips. "At least I've asked you! But it has turned out exactly the way I expected it to! . . . I'll write to Beryl today."

At the plant that morning, he visited the different departments, checking with the foremen on the progress of the work.

A little after ten a long distance call came in from Congress City about some steel mesh they had delivered for road building. Potter, the contractor, complained that it was not of the specified thickness, and was much annoyed. Hugh promised to send a man to look at it at once. Potter was a good customer; it wouldn't do to offend him.

He sent for the records, talked with the foreman and decided to make the trip to Congress City himself, a drive of 50 miles.

A fine day—and if he drove, why not take Dorrie? They could go over the New Portland highway, which wound along a ridge of the hills. Fine scenery. He tried to telephone her but the line was busy. She had told him she wasn't going out today—he would have some sandwiches packed at the club, drive up and get her. She would probably be glad to have the outing.

With his basket of lunch which the chef at the club had put up for him, and driving toward home, he felt an expanding glow within himself at this unexpected break in the daily order. A day with Dorrie, out under the sky and sun, would work its magic, would smooth out misunderstanding, draw them closer in harmony.

He saw Tillie, the maid, moving a dust cloth over an upstairs window sill as he went up the walk. Dorrie was telephoning at the hall table in a low almost inaudible voice as he entered the front door. She turned at the sound of his footsteps, and the look which came over her face, startled, almost angry, gave him a feeling of shock.

She hung up the receiver quickly without saying good-by.

"What brings you home? Forget something?" she inquired lightly. A flush colored her cheeks.

"No. I came to see if you would like to go jaunting."

"Where?"

"Congress City. The contractor there is kicking about the road mesh we sent. Want to go?"

She hesitated. "No, you go along alone. I'm not dressed and there are things I want to do."

The telephone pealed sharply. Dorrie whirled abruptly for it, but Hugh had already lifted the receiver to his ear. "Hello . . . hello . . . hello."

He hung up. "No one on the line apparently! . . . You don't want to go? What's the reason? Haven't made a date, have you? We could drive over the Portland highway—they say it is beautiful scenery."

The flush on her face had faded; she looked rather pale. "It does sound nice, reconsidering. I'll go."

"I had a lunch packed and thought we would eat along Lonesome River."

She smiled faintly in approval. "I'll slip into that green dress you like and be with you in a minute."

In the country Dorrie sang softly, a snatch of this, a bit of that, a rhythmical accompaniment to the purring of the engine. They chose the less frequented narrow roads which led past rich farms, gently-rolling hill farms, brooks dividing the pastures where cattle grazed, ponds which reflected the blue sky and its cottony wisps of cloud.

It was July when the season pauses in stillness. The sparkling, capricious spring was past; there was no hint of autumn.

The new highway crested the hills. They drove higher and higher until a panorama of countryside, the sweep of field, the darkness of wood, the stubble of cut grain and shimmer of piled wheat, extended in great rolling distances to right and left of them, so far that a blue haze met the horizon.

The deep valley beside them wound sinuously. Far down they caught the gleam of a small river, silvering over some rapids, escaping the fringe of hemlock and willow which leaned caressingly over it.

"Lonesome River," said Hugh. "See that flat rock down by the stream? We'll be eating lunch there in ten minutes."

They descended the mountain and came to a settlement of a dozen very old somnolent houses called Norwich. A lane to the right of the bridge led for a short distance along the river bed. They parked the car under some sycamores, and taking the picnic basket, started along the little-used trail by the water.

"Hungry?" asked Hugh, when they came to a ledge close to the water.

"Ravenous! What did you bring?"

She knelt over the basket and drew out some chicken sandwiches wrapped in oil paper, piled them on a napkin between them. "And fruit! Ginger-ale — and glasses! You thought of everything!"

"It won't be very cold. It's been over an hour since they took it off the ice."

"Never mind. It will be wet anyhow. Have you an opener?"

Lunch over they sat side by side for a few minutes, his arm around her.

"You've been nicer to me today than you've been for ages," said Hugh softly.

"Have I, old funny?"

Soot in City Air Seen as Possible Cause of Cancer

Tarry Deposits Injure Urban Dwellers' Lungs

NEW YORK.—Soot-laden city air may be causing cancer of the lungs in the inhabitants of cities. Conclusive evidence for this is lacking, but strong circumstantial evidence is brought forward by Dr. M. G. Seelig and E. L. Benignus of the Barnard Free Skin and Cancer hospital, St. Louis, in a report to the American Journal of Cancer published here.

Human death records and animal studies furnish the evidence with which the St. Louis scientists pin the guilt of causing cancer onto soot in the city air.

Figures from the United States Census bureau show that lung cancer deaths are more numerous in cities than in rural areas.

Soot Versus Death.

The relation between the greater number of deaths and the greater amount of soot in the air is close enough, the scientists state, "to warrant more activity on the part of public health authorities in the various anti-smoke campaigns."

The tar in soot and the way soot invades all the structures of the lungs make it capable of causing cancer. Tar itself has long been recognized as a cancer-causing substance.

Chimney sweeps' cancer has been traced to the irritation produced by tar encountered in the course of this occupation. Tar painted onto the skin of mice causes cancer. Whether or not tar, breathed into the lungs with sooty air, could cause cancer, as the death statistics suggest, was the problem the St. Louis scientists set out to solve.

Tests on Mice.

For mice apparently it can and does, which strengthens the assumption that it does also in the case of man.

In a group of mice that lived in a sooty atmosphere over a long period of time, eight out of a hundred developed lung cancer. By contrast, two out of a hundred developed lung cancer in a group that lived in a soot-free atmosphere.

Find Graveyard of Aboriginal Town in Washington Suburb

WASHINGTON. — A steam-shovel burrowing up earth at an army flying field in suburban Washington has struck the lost graveyard of the old Indian town of Nacotchtank.

This is the belief of archeologists at the Smithsonian institution, who are now studying the bundles of bones found arranged in an old Indian fashion.

The custom, common among southern Algonquian Indians, was to collect a bundle of skulls, another bundle of leg bones, and so on, and to pile sorted types into graves. Several barrels full of bones have so far been recovered.

John Smith Knew Town.

The discovery adds to knowledge of an historic Indian town picturesquely described by Capt. John Smith. An artist who accompanied Smith drew pictures of the natives and their houses, dances, and occupations, thus recording the early appearance of what was destined to be the capital of the United States.

Several Indian villages stood within the District of Columbia area, but Nacotchtank was the greatest. It has been described as an important trading town, and a sort of fashion center. The town's place in Indian fashion trade is inferred from the fact that chief exports were powdered graphite and ocher, which served as face and body paints to adorn Indians of Maryland and Virginia.

Nursing Bottle 1200 B. C. Found in Ancient Athens

PRINCETON, N. J.—A baby's nursing bottle, in the style of 1200 B. C., is a new discovery from ancient Athens. The bottle was unearthed in a baby's grave by the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, of which Prof. T. Leslie Shear of Princeton university is field director.

The bottle bears little resemblance to streamlined glass and rubber bottles that modern infants carelessly handle. The 3,000-year-old bottle was a little pottery pitcher with handle and spout and a nipple on the side, and it must have required the hand of an attendant to keep it right side up.

Fetching Blouse and Skirt

1958-B

Today's pattern — two separate garments—gives you an idea how chic you can appear when clothes are chosen with taste and discrimination. Any blouse as clever as this one can be worn successfully with a dozen different skirts and any skirt, equally fetching and serviceable, can justify a dozen different blouses.

An unusually flattering neck treatment with the folds giving way to a jabot effect and surplice closing, lends distinction to the blouse fashioned in a solid crepe, pastel silk, or gold metal, while the skirt relies on a slenderizing front panel ending in pleats to relieve its essential simplicity. Try a satin, velveteen, silk, crepe, or velvet for the skirt.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1958-B is available for sizes: 14, 16, 18, 20; 40, 42, 44 and 46. Corresponding bust measurements 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 16 (34) requires two and five-eighths yards of 39-inch material for the blouse and two and one-eighth yards for the skirt. Price of pattern, 15 cents.

Send for the Fall Pattern Book containing Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

The Noble Nature

IT IS not growing like a tree
In bulk, doth make man better be;
Or standing long an oak, three hundred year,
To fall a log at last, dry, bald and sear:
A lily of a day
Is fairer in May,
Although it fall and die that night
It was the plant and flower of Light.
In small proportions we just beauties see,
And in short measures life may perfect be.

A Tough Life—That of a Forest Ranger

The life of a forest ranger is not all it's cracked up to be. Instead of spending the summer hunting, fishing and trapping, the ranger is busy protecting game and scenery from visitors and answering their questions.

In the winter, he and another ranger hole themselves up in a log cabin, patrol the boundary of their domain on skis and protect the wild life under their care from the attacks of predatory animals and the guns of men. At night their leisure time is spent in assembling food, wood and clothing to keep warm, and preparing for the next day's tasks.—Washington Post.

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

THAT discussion about who will get the leads in the picture version of "Gone With the Wind" is still raging. One faction insists that the coveted roles were simply made for Miriam Hopkins and Clark Gable. Then a rumor sprang up to the effect that everything was settled; Tallullah Bankhead and Ronald Colman were to play them.

Usually those discussions peter out with the parts being given to people no one had even thought of. Sometimes the public is asked to make suggestions, and the mail comes in by the ton, demanding a popular favorite in at least one role; if there are enough requests some attention is paid to them.

Simone Simon

They do say that Ruth Chatterton is none too happy over the ending of "Girls' Dormitory." Originally it had a quite different one, with Miss Chatterton winning the hero, Herbert Marshall, when he realized that little Simone Simon was too young for him and that he had merely been infatuated with her.

But things happened. The little Simone, it seems, has a way of getting what she wants, off the screen as well as on. So a new ending was the result, and a rather unconvincing one it is, too.

Another of those delightfully nonsensical pictures — and an exciting one, too — is "Manhattan Madness," with Jean Arthur and Joel McCrea. They seem to have a special talent at Columbia for turning out this brand of entertainment — this one is well worth going out into a stormy night to see.

Jeanette MacDonald is going to have to work awfully hard before she is free to marry Gene Raymond and go off on her honeymoon—and she insists that that marriage is going to take place June 17th. Before that time she is to do three operatic roles—"Manon Lescaut," "The Firefly" and "Maytime." And as she likes to give a concert occasionally, that makes it hard.

Incidentally, we hear that she was asking a tremendous price for radio appearances, until she was reminded that, though she's well known to movie goers, folks who don't bother much about movies don't know her so well. But that may be just a rumor.

Phillips Lord, who writes and directs two of the popular radio programs, "Gang Busters" and "We, the People," doesn't listen to the more exciting broadcasts when he's just listening for entertainment. He likes Frank Black's music and Edgar Guest's "Welcome Valley."

Margaret Sullavan has never had a very high idea of her own achievements as an actress. She's even been accused of false modesty, because of the things she has said about her own performances. But she has proved what she meant by abandoning pictures, temporarily, and going into a stage play in New York. Says she's going to learn to act, something which can't be done in Hollywood.

Miriam Hopkins

Miriam Hopkins annoyed newspaper and magazine interviewers, we hear, when she was in New York on her way back to Hollywood from England. Made appointments with them for a certain day, and then went out early in the morning and just didn't come back. And Rosalind Russell annoyed one of the more important fan magazine editors by not being at all co-operative about an interview. So if you don't see much about either of them in your favorite magainze, you'll know why.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . It's reported that Clark Gable's ex-wife will marry one of the East's social headliners . . . If you hear that Elton Thomas wrote "The Adventures of Marco Polo," which Gary Cooper will do, remember that that's the pen name used by Douglas Fairbanks . . . The romance between Merle Oberon and David Niven is still blazing . . . Florence Eldridge, Fredric March's wife, who was "Queen Elizabeth" in "Mary of Scotland," has abandoned the movies for a return to the stage . . . Which will, no doubt, be the best way to get her what she wants in the movies . . . Bette Davis may have lost that legal decision to Warner Brothers, so that she can't make pictures in England—but remember, Bette likes to fight . . . Talk among radio folks is that Jack Benny needs a new script writer, this year's programs not being up to the standard established by the old ones.

Reminiscence

The scenery one remembers most fondly will be what he saw while sitting serenely in contemplative meditation.

Culture also consists in knowing what not to cultivate.

A good deal of common sense consists in just simply not butting in.

Virtue and Vice

Besides backbone, another thing equally lacking, altogether too generally, is self-respect.

A fault mender is better than a fault finder.

But They're Not Assets

A man of bitter and glittering words may not have many friends but he has hosts of envious admirers.

Good society wants good morals, and whenever they can't be, wants them kept out of sight.

Greatest triumph is to fish your friend out of the blues and make him laugh again.

Harvey S. Firestone
PUTS THE FARM ON RUBBER . . .
Farm-Proved FOR EFFICIENCY and ECONOMY

EVERY car owner who does much driving over unimproved roads and who has to use chains, can save the cost and bother of applying them by equipping the rear wheels of his car or truck with Firestone Ground Grip Tires. This wonderful new tire was designed and developed by Harvey S. Firestone working with his engineers on his own farm in Columbiana County, Ohio. It was tested on all kinds of roads and found so efficient that it was also adopted for tractors and all wheeled farm implements.

The rubber lugs of the tread are so placed that they clean as they pull, and since the design is continuous, the tire does not bump when used on paved roads. Two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords are placed under the tread — a patented Firestone construction feature which welds the powerful super-traction tread to the patented Gum-Dipped cord body, making them one inseparable unit. Gum-Dipping is used only in Firestone tires.

Farmers, country doctors, school bus operators, rural mail carriers, in fact, all who do most of their driving off the paved roads cannot afford to be without Ground Grip Tires. Go to your nearest Firestone Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store today and equip your car or truck with Firestone Ground Grip Tires — the tire that makes its own road.

FLORIDA PROSPERS

ONE of the principal reasons why Florida prospers today is because you can buy in cans grapefruit juice and grapefruit which has sunned and ripened in leisurely fashion in well-cared-for Florida orchards. And whether you serve it plain as a breakfast course or in one of the many delicious luncheon or dinner dishes made with this fruit, you'll recognize at once that it is good old Florida grapefruit. That's fame.

Try These Recipes

Circe's Cup: Cut apricots from a No. 2 can in halves, and add the grapefruit from one No. 2 can, leaving it in large pieces. Divide into glasses. Mix the juice of one lemon with the grapefruit and apricot juices, and pour over. Chill very well. Sprinkle liberally with finely-minced mint and serve. This serves eight persons.

Cranberry and Grapefruit Ice: Soften four teaspoons gelatin in four tablespoons cold water. Mash the cranberry sauce from a 1-pound 1-ounce can, add two cups water and heat until melted. Add one-half cup sugar and boil for two or three minutes. Dissolve the gelatin in the hot liquid, cool, and add the contents of one No. 2 can of grapefruit juice. Freeze in refrigerator trays, stirring often. This serves eight persons.

Cherry and Grapefruit Salad: Mash three packages of cream cheese with enough cream to make soft. Make a holly ring or circle of cheese in the center of each lettuce-garnished salad plate. Drain a No. 2 can of pitted red cherries, and using half of the cherries, pile them inside the cheese rings. Drain one No. 2 can of grapefruit and arrange three or four sections around the outside of each cheese ring. Serve with French dressing. Serves eight.*

Cook with Canned Beer

GANGWAY! Make room for new ideas.

Now that housewives have stocked their shelves with canned beer, they are making room also to add new recipes to their files. They have discovered that beer in the new convenient canned form, is ever ready for use—and consequently dietitians are discovering new dishes which are enhanced by the addition of beer.

Savory and Spicy

Here are two suggestions which are delicious for every-day meals or for smart entertaining:

Onion Rarebit: Slice six large onions thin and sauté gently in a little butter until tender and a golden color. Spread on slices of buttered toast and cover with rarebit made as follows: Melt slowly together in a large skillet four tablespoons butter, one pound of grated cheese, one-half teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon mustard and one-half teaspoon Worcestershire sauce. Add a little beer slowly as the cheese melts. Stir constantly until smooth and have the fire very low. Then mix two beaten eggs with the remaining beer (use one cup of canned beer for the entire recipe). Add to the cheese mixture, stir a minute or so longer, and pour over the toast and onions. This serves eight persons.

Spiced Chocolate Cup Cakes: Soften one-half cup butter, add one and one-half cups brown sugar slowly, and cream these two ingredients thoroughly. Add two well-beaten eggs, then add the following sifted dry ingredients alternately with one cup of canned beer: two cups pastry flour, one teaspoon baking powder, one teaspoon soda, one-eighth teaspoon salt, one teaspoon cinnamon, one-fourth teaspoon nutmeg, one-eighth teaspoon cloves and four tablespoons cocoa. Bake in cup cake pans and ice with chocolate butter icing or with any other desired chocolate icing. This makes twenty-four small cup cakes.*

Better Breakfasts

SEVENTY-SIX thousand six hundred and fifty meals is the allotted number for each of us to eat before we are three score years and ten. Divide this by three and you have the number of breakfasts—25,550 breakfasts!

Let's have lots better ones, then, since we've so many to eat. Perish the thought of 25,550 dull breakfasts! Spread the apple-green cloth, set out the flower-sprigged china, the prettiest sparkling crystal, and for a centerpiece use a lovely bowl of autumn flowers—glorious asters, fringed gentians that Wordsworth wrote about, and indescribable autumn leaves. Pewter is very inexpensive just now and adds immeasurably to the charm of the breakfast when used for coffee pot, sugar, cream and tray.

But don't forget the food. Here's a sample better breakfast:

Stewed Apricots and Pears
Cereal
Chicken Hash Raspberry Preserves
Melba Toast Coffee

Chicken Hash: Cut chicken from a 12-ounce can in small pieces, and add two cups of cold boiled potatoes which have been cut fine. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Add one-half cup of cream or top milk. Press into a hot skillet with enough fat to prevent sticking, and brown well, turning often with a wide spatula to promote even cooking and browning. This serves six to eight persons.*

On Thanksgiving Day

Let us all pause in our hurry and flurry of life and give thanks for home, family, abundance of food, clothing, health, peace, happiness and all the innumerable blessings we have.

Walter Swan arrived home Wednesday for a visit at the home of his folks, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Nyhns. He has traveled all through the southern states this summer.

Mrs. Joe Nelson and son called on Mrs. G. Fricker Tuesday.

Silver Wedding Held

About 200 relatives and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Sorenson gathered at the Mission church here Sunday afternoon to celebrate their 25th wedding anniversary.

A good program had been arranged on which Donna Mae Carlson was flower girl and Arvid Carlson of Middle River was toastmaster.

Helen Reierson of Thief River Falls played the wedding march and after the procession Mrs. Sorenson was presented with a beautiful boquet of chrysanthemums.

The following numbers were then given:
Song Mrs. P. Reierson and daughter Helen of Thief River Falls
Talk Mrs. L. Poppenhagen of Thief River Falls.
Song Quartette
Talk and mock wedding— Rev. Myhrer.
Song, "My Mom" dedicated to Mrs. Sorenson — Donna Mae Carlson.
Talk - Mr. Reierson of T. R. Falls

A telegram from Orville Lufkin from Iowa was read.

Several others said a few words of congratulations after which the honored couple was presented with a 50 piece set of silverware and a sum of money. Mr. and Mrs. Sorenson expressed their thanks to all.

A beautifully decorated wedding cake centered the table set for the honor guests and near relatives and a delicious lunch served to all.

NOTICE

Next week being Thanksgiving week please bring in your notices early so ye editor can roast turkey on Thanksgiving Day. We print on Wednesday, No copy after Tuesday night.

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

About 23 out of every 100 persons killed by automobiles in the United States are children under the age of 15 years. Accidents kill more children in this age group than disease. Think of it!

Parents and teachers should warn the youngsters of the things listed below so they will remember them and be guided by them.

1. Never cross a street without looking in both directions to see if any cars are coming.
2. Always cross the street with the lights.
3. Never cross a street diagonally or in the middle of a block.
4. Never step into the street from behind a parked car or moving vehicle.
5. Never play in the streets.
6. Never "hook" rides on trucks or wagons.

P. C. A. Conference Held

Repayments of more than $23,000 on their short-term loans were made by members of the Thief River Falls Production Credit association, during the firs 8 months of this year, according to information given out at the conference of North Dakota and Northern Minnesota production credit boards of directors held at Detroit Lakes, Nov. 16-17. The association includes the following counties: Eastern Marshall, Roseau, Lake of the Woods, N Beltrami, Pennington and Red Lake.

The 5000 members of these associations have used their membership and credit standing to make short-term loans of a few hundred up to several thousand dollars each for such purposes as purchasing livestock, machinery or supplies for their farms, paying for labor, repairs, etc.

The average loan of this association is $394 and on Sept. 1 its 299 members had obtained $81,000 through the association from January to that date. During the same time they had repaid over $23,000 which is 17 per cent of the total volume of their loans outstanding at the first of the year plus those of the succeeding 8 months, a repayment record that drew compliments for the directors and members.

George Susens, president, and J. S. Montgomery, secretary of the Production Credit Corporation of ST. Paul, which supervises the associations, and President F. H. Klawon and Secretary A. E. Sevareid of the Federal Intermediate Credit bank thru which they obtain their funds by discount, attended the conference. Gharts showing a comparison of the membership, volume of loans, rate of growth, expenses, and income, of the 12 associations afforded topics for discussion.

The board of directors and secretary-treasurer of each association made up the delegates to the conference, the local delegation comprising: F. S. Erdman, pres., Red Lake Falls, F. D. Voth, v-pres. Holt; Alfred Longren, dir. Thief River Falls; V. C. Noper, dir. Thief River Falls; Bert Grahn, dir. Roseau; R. J. Lund, sec-treas. Thief River Falls.

A. O. Aspelin and Caroline spent last Thursday at the E. Rolland home at Thief River Falls.

Membership In Red Cross an Evidence of Good Citizenship

The Red Cross Roll Call is now in progress. Many are joining daily and are thus contributing their part in the relief-program of our beloved America. Your membership points to a spirit of patriotism, because the Red Cross is the only organization in the country; which, regardless of creed or color or race, ministers to the needs of our fellow-men when disease, disaster and destruction cause the hearts of men to tremble.

The official Red Cross workers in this community for this drive are Glenn Carlson and Harold Gavere. These workers will attempt to call at the homes or business places of this community within a few days. Your support will be appreciated.

Let us rally to colors. Join the thousands of your fellow-Americans by becoming a member of your American Red Cross.

Christmas Seal Sale Opens

E. O. Nybakken, Supt. will be local manager of the 1936 sale of Christmas Seals in Holt. The appointment marks the opening of active local work upon the 1936 sale.

"All of us have many ways in which to spend our time, as all of us have many ways in which to spend our money," said Mr. Nybakken in accepting the chairmanship. "In the same way that everyone who spends money for Christmas Seals shows his belief that this expenditure for better community health is worthy, I feel that time spent in the cause of the Christmas Seals is worthy.

"I am certain both that many hours will be given by willing workers to the Seal sale and that the Seals these workers will distribute in Holt will find more purchasers than in any recent year."

Many Attend Auction Sale

A large crowd that filled the church parlors to capacity turned out for the Ladies' Aid auction sale at the Nazareth Lutheran church on Friday evening. The proceeds of the sale and lunch were $170.20.

Shipped Many Turkeys

The Carlson Mercantile Company bought and shipped to the eastern markets 65,000 pounds of turkeys which amounted to some over three carloads.

Letter From Oakey Family

We received a letter from the V. E. Oakey family in which they state that they have located at Silverton, Oregon and are living in town at present. They had dinner with the E. Tollefsrud family Saturday evening.

Wanted

Wanted—Sealed bids for 3 ton lignite coal. Bids will be opened 1 p. m. Nov. 20, 1936. We reserve the right to reject any or all bids.

Deer Deer

Sunday morning the deer and bear hunting season opened and a number of sportsmen of Holt and community availed themselves of the opportunity to get away from the hum-drum of every day life, and sallied forth to live in the open and leave care and worry behind.

Those who went out on Sunday only were Iver Larson and Clarence Larson who brought in a nice deer, Walter Wegge and Ivar Ostby, who got a big buck, and John Sorum and Oscar Furr who each got one according to reports coming to this office.

Some of the others having luck were Theo. and Olaf Ness, who each brought in one on Monday. They also shot a nice fox. Stanley Lysne, Bill Paskewitz and Dennis Wegge returned with one Tuesday, Jesse Sorum one, and Harlan Gunheim, Carl Arness and Willie Sorum one.

Local 4-H Boys Attend Show

They were awarded the trip in connection with their beef calf work in 4-H Club work and were with several others, representing Marshall County at the show. The boys reported having a fine time and let's give them a hand for their good work.

Nels Offerdahl had the misfortune last week of having his team of horses run away while he was driving to Middle River. He was badly hurt, having bruised his back and hurt his foot. He has made several trips to Thief River Falls to have it taken care off.

Floyd Gibbons Adventurers' Club Hello Everybody!

"Three Terrible Hours"

By FLOYD GIBBONS,
Famous Headline Hunter

THE sea, boys and girls, has produced some pretty tough customers. What I mean, Pop-eye the Sailor isn't entirely the figment of a cartoonist's imagination. He's more than half truth. The lads who spend their whole lives fighting the elements in the places where those elements are at their worst, develop the sort of constitution that a dray horse would envy. Some of their feats of endurance are almost unbelievable.

Well sir, we've got a sailor with us today, in the person of Distinguished Adventurer Janis Libert of Brooklyn, N. Y., but I'm going to let you judge for yourself whether or not Jan is one of the lads who can take it when the sea starts dishing it out. And just to give you something to judge by, I'm going to tell you the story of an adventure he had on St. Patrick's day, March 17, 1920.

Jan was signed on as an able seaman on the S. S. Tewkesbury, out of the Peruvian port of Antofogasta with a cargo of nitrate, bound for Hamburg, Germany. They had passed through the Panama canal, coaled ship at St. Louisburg, and then beat their way through high seas and heavy snowstorms until they were nearing the Newfoundland coast. There the first trouble began.

She Struck a Submerged Ledge.

A few miles off Newfoundland the ship was caught in a heavy undersea current that began dragging them toward the barren cliffs that marked the coast. The Tewkesbury was doing 11 knots an hour, in an effort to beat out to sea again, but the current was dragging it inshore at the rate of 30 knots an hour, and it was only a matter of arithmetic to figure out how long she'd stay afloat.

Jan says it was five bells St. Patrick's day morning—2:30 a. m. to us landlubbers—when the Tewkesbury struck a submerged ledge about a ship's length away from the 250-foot cliff that rose in front of them. As they struck, the VESSEL'S BOTTOM WAS RIPPED OUT. The stern broke off and slid from the ledge into 30 fathoms of water.

Immediately, the crew tried to launch life-boats, but one by one they were dashed to pieces against the side of the ship by the heavy sea that was running. There were two lifeboats left—barely enough to carry off the crew of 28 and the 3 passengers—when Captain Privox, the skipper, ordered two men to get into the next boat and fend it off from the sides while it was being lowered. One of the men was Jan Libert.

Jan Was Left to Do the Job Alone.

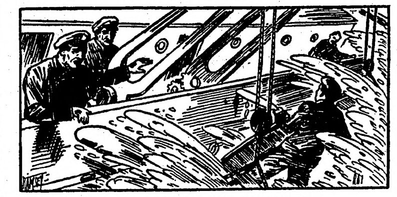
It was a hard job—and a dangerous one. It's no cinch to fend off a heavy lifeboat in a sea strong enough to dash a steamer against the rocks. But how dangerous, Jan had no idea in the beginning. He got a hint of it, though, when his partner caught his hand in a pulley and smashed it while trying to pull in a piece of slack rope. That left Jan to fend the boat off alone—a perilous, two-man job, in the hands of one.



It Was a Hard Job—and a Dangerous One.

IT WAS A BATTLE FOR LIFE. Not only Jan's life, but the lives of a dozen others as well. If that boat smashed up, there would be only one left, and that barely half big enough to hold the passengers and crew. The seas were so high that Jan had all he could do to keep the boat from smashing—so violent that the skipper couldn't send another man down to help him. The Newfoundland waters were cold as ice, and the Newfoundland winds were colder still. As Jan labored to keep the boat away from the side, the salt spray collected on his hands—soaked his clothing—and froze there!

The lifeboat was pitching and tossing like a chip in a hurricane. It was impossible to load the crew into it while the lashing storm kept up its furious assault. And so, FOR THREE HOURS Jan fought a battle against cold, ice and the Atlantic—three terrible hours during which time the only chance to rescue all the crew lay in Jan's freezing hands.

Snow was falling by the time the wind had calmed and the loading of the boats started. Then minutes after fresher, less weary men took over the task of fending off the boat, Jan's hands were frozen and useless. Still he wasn't much better off than when he'd been fighting the elements alone. Tremendous seas rapidly filled both boats and, due to the cliffs that stretched along the shore, the only place either of them could land was at Peters river, 15 miles away. Frozen though he was, Jan knew it would be a long time before he got a chance to thaw out again.

Too Cold to Heed the Warning.

While some of the crew rowed and the others bailed for their lives, the two boats started out on a heartbreaking journey. For FOUR MORE HOURS they kept up the struggle. "And believe me," says Jan, "if I thought I was cold before, I now knew what cold really was like. As we pointed our boat toward the beach, a fisherman hailed us and warned us not to try to land there. But we were all so cold and weak that we knew it was our only chance."

Desperate, the freezing mariners headed their boats into the breakers, not knowing what new danger to expect. They found out soon enough. As the combers threw the boats into shallow water, they hit sunken rocks and capsized, hurling their occupants in all directions. A wave hit Jan and hurled him under water—whirled him round and round. He was too weak to fight it. He thought he was finished then.

He was about to give up when he felt gravel under his feet. He stood up—sank to his knees in soft sand, and remained there, rooted to the spot, exposed to the full force of the giant combers that rolled over him one after another. The world began to go black in front of his eyes, and the next thing Jan remembered was someone's hand clutching at his neck—dragging him to shore.

For the next few weeks, Jan saw everything through a gray haze. At first he thought he was going blind from exposure. After a while, though, the fog vanished from before his eyes, and he could see as well as ever. You have the whole story now—and you can judge for yourselves if Jan can take it when Old Man Sea dishes it out.

First Settlement

Cochin, Southern India, situated on the Arabian sea, was the site of one of the first European settlements on the Indian peninsula. Cabral dropped anchor in the harbor in 1500 after his attack on Calicut, 100 miles up the coast. Two years later Vasco da Gama visited the port. The next year Albuquerque arrived and built the first European fort in the East

Memorial to Pocahontas

Pocahontas was buried in the chancel of St. George's church, Gravesend, England, where there is a memorial tablet and two stained glass windows set up by the Virginia chapter of the Colonial Dames of America. She died in 1617, at the age of twenty-two, when she was on the point of returning to Virginia with her husband, John Rolfe.

MINNESOTA NEWS

St. Paul—The properly barbered gentleman of 1937 will wear his hair "long", relatively speaking, Minnesota Master Barbers said at the opening of their annual convention in the Hotel Lowry.

Minneapolis—Retail trade at department stores in Minneapolis and other northwest cities increased 17 per cent last month over October, 1935, while the gain for the first 10 months of 1936 was 10 per cent.

Minneapolis—Discussion of forest fire problems and methods of improving fire protection were the principal topics at the meeting of the United States Indian Service superintendents and foresters of the lake states region.

Comfrey—Authorities are seeking the person who fired the .32 caliber bullet which seriously wounded Alex Nelson, 49 years old, marshal here, as he was walking through the city park. Nelson was taken to a hospital in Springfield.

Duluth—Funeral services for Mrs. A. B. Kaplin, 32 years old, fatally injured in an automobile accident near Hinckley, were conducted. Rabbi Harvey Wessel of Duluth officiated. Her husband was the former state commander of the American Legion.

Ely—Razing work in the demolition of the Ely community center, a public land mark here for almost a half century, has begun under a WPA project to make way for the new community building to be constructed on the site under a government WPA grant.

Collegeville—Robert M. Devitt, a graduate of St. John's University here in 1935 and now studying for his master's degree at the University of North Dakota, has been recommended as a candidate for a Rhodes scholarship. He will appear before the Minnesota Rhodes scholarship committee.

St. Paul—Probably the most expensive initiation paddle extant is owned by Robert Raustadt, pledge of the Phil Delta fraternity at Hamline University. It cost 15 cents and one right forefinger. In the process of cutting wood for the paddle on a circular power saw, Otto Lange, cut the forefinger off his right hand.

Robbinsdale—A mass immunization of school children was Robbinsdale's answer to the danger of a diphtheria epidemic. Parents, teachers and pupils co-operated in the program which made it possible for six local doctors, headed by Dr. Edward A. Colp, Robbinsdale health officer, to immunize the children in a few days.

Hutchinson—Plans have been completed by the Gopher campfire club to purchase the cock of 44 wild geese of all varieties and the five deer at the Anderson Wild Life refuge and keep them intact on a new reserve on the north bank of the Crow river in this city. The collection of geese is the most complete of its kind in the United States, officials declared.

Minneapolis—Minnesota's football schedule for 1937 is complete. The addition of the opening game, September 25, with North Dakota State rounds out the program. The Bison clash was announced by Frank McCormick, Gopher athletic director. The schedule also includes games with Nebraska, Indiana, Michigan, Notre Dame, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Northwestern.

So. St. Paul—At the conclusion of the best Minnesota Junior Livestock show in history here, prize exhibits brought record prices. Leona Padelford, 4-H club girl of Austin, raised the grand champion beef, for which Swift & Co. paid a record price of $1.45 a pound, a total of $1,471.75. Robert McCarney of Litchfeld, sold his pen of prize-winning turkeys for $2 a pound. Sales of all animals exhibited amounted to $55,000 for the 4-H club members who competed.

St. Paul—The peaceful life of Minnesota deer was disrupted when an army of hunters invaded their haunts for the opening of the annual deer season, which will continue to November 25 in sixteen counties and parts of four others. Counties fully open are Cook, Lake, St. Louis, Carlton, Pine, Kanabec, Koochiching, Itasca, Aitkin, Crow Wing, Cass, Hubbard, Clearwater, Beltrami, Lake of the Woods and Roseau. The season also will be open in that part of Kittson and Marshall counties east of the old Pembina trail, running from the north boundary of Kittson county to the south boundary of Marshall county; all of that part of Becker county east of the Soo railroad line and all of Mille Lacs county north of the Great Northern railroad tracks running through Milaca, Foreston and Beck.

Princeton — Gridiron warfare in Minnesota high school football circles drew to a close with several elevens still retaining records showing no defeats or ties. Princeton led a list of undefeated untied elevens which included Deer River, Warroad, Cloquet, Moorhead, Minneapolis Miller Vocational, Farmington, West Concord, and St. Augustine, Austin. In addition to completing tough schedules undefeated and untied, Farmington and St. Augustine were able to hold their opponents scoreless.

SYNOPSIS

Kezia Marsh, pretty, selfish and twenty, arrives home in Corinth from school and is met by her older brother, Hugh. He drives her to the Marsh home where her widowed mother, Fluvanna, a warm-hearted, self-sacrificing and understanding soul, welcomes her. Kezias sister, Margery, plump and matronly with the care of three children, is at lunch with them. Hugh's wife, Dorrie, has pleaded a previous engagement. On the way back to his job at the steel plant founded by one of his forebears, Hugh passes Doc Hiller, a boyhood friend whom he no longer sees frequently because of Dorrie's antipathy. Fluvanna Marsh wakens the next morning from a dream about her late husband, Jim, whose unstable character she fears Kezia has inherited. Ellen Pendleton comes over. She is an artistically inclined girl who is a distant niece of Fluvanna's and a favorite of Hugh's. She happily tells Fluvanna she has become engaged to Jerry Purdue. Ellen fears that her father and mother, Gavin and Lizzie, will not approve the match. Hugh and Dorrie go out to the Freeland Farms to dance with their friends, Cun and Joan Whitney. Whitney, who has been out of work, announces that he has a new position. Cun and Dorrie dance together and then disappear for a while. Dancing with Joan, Hugh is amazed to find her in tears. Apparently she has some secret worry over her husband, Cun. When Ellen and Jerry speak about their engagement to Ellen's parents, Lizzie is disagreeable until Jerry sympathizes with her imagined ailments. The matter is left pending. Unexpectedly Hugh has to visit a neighboring city on business. Returning home to ask Dorrie to accompany him he finds her telephoning. In confusion she quickly hangs up without saying good-by. After hesitating about Hugh's invitation, she finally agrees to accompany him.

CHAPTER IV—Continued

—9—

"I am glad I had to go to Congress City." He waited. "Not pining to have me go to New York? Got over it?"

"It's all right. If you couldn't—you couldn't, I suppose," she answered. "Sweet here, isn't it? Too bad we have to leave. I could loaf here all afternoon."

"And yet at first you said you couldn't go. When I came in"—his brows puzzled. "By the way, who were you phoning to when I came in? You hung up without saying good-by."

Her body stiffened against his ever so slightly. A subterraneous tiny pain moved in Hugh.

"None of my business of course!" he said with an apologetic laugh. "Shouldn't have asked you. Excuse me." He sprang to his feet.

"You would ask that!"

"I'm not checking your phone calls, my dear. It was just an idle question . . . I didn't think how it sounded when I spoke."

She traced the rock with her finger. In a moment she said: "Anyone who is having a birthday in a few days shouldn't be too inquisitive."

"Next month—August."

"Well, even then?" she parried good-humoredly.

The pain vanished.

He looked at his watch. "One-thirty."

"Time to go?"

"Afraid so."

Ellen switched on her light and looked at the clock on the mantel. A quarter to four and she hadn't been able to go to sleep! Two hours and a half of this tossing about.

She poked at the pillow to soften it. What were some of the things which made you go to sleep? Counting? Squeezing your eyeballs and then watching the funny lights that came under your shut lids?

Scenes from the evening over at Marshes' kept intruding. "Hello, Ellen! Hello, Jerry!" Kezia had smiled enchantingly up at Jerry. "You're ever so nice, aren't you? Almost up to Ellen's description!" She had helped Ellen with her coat and whispered, just loud enough for Jerry to hear, "He's precious. You're in gorgeous luck, Ellen."

Kezia's hair had been in soft curls all over her head, an effect which looked natural, yet had taken time to achieve. She wore a long white organdy dress, with a huge scarlet chiffon handkerchief drawn through a bracelet.

"Just two tables of bridge—you know Art? And that's Hugh over there . . . Hugh, put up the card tables like a love!" she said. Margery and Will Platt, and Mrs. Marsh — Dorrie — beside the mantel."

And Dorrie had been very cordial, had said to Jerry: "Welcome to the family!" Her voice had a rich moving animation sometimes. "We look like the home guard drawn up to receive you, but we're really not so formidable."

Hugh had been fine—always was. "I wondered why you were so disturbingly pretty this spring, Ellen . . . so this is the reason!" Will Platt had told her of the pictures he had seen in the Roerich Gallery recently . . . poetry and symbolic mystery, he called them. That was while Kezia was out fixing the lunch. She had come in and called—not Art Williams—but Jerry to come out and help her with the ice cubes. They were gone a long time, and came in laughing . . .

But the thing which kept her awake was trivial—even ridiculous. All evening long no look from Jerry, no quick little glance of reassurance that said: "Hello, dear . . . all right?" So absorbed in being agreeable to Dorrie, to Margery, to Kezia, that she might have been anyone—just someone whom he had met for the first time and was not interested in! . . . Of course she didn't want him to act dithering in her presence—give her burning glances. She liked him to be reserved. Still, if only once his eyes had flickered in her direction with trust and mutuality, made her aware that he remembered . . .

She clasped the palms of her hands together. "You know, God," she said soundlessly, "that I don't bother You very often, but I do believe in You. For I prayed to go to art school . . . Mother was so against it. Suddenly she gave in—gave in all at once for no reason at all! . . . So You must have done it. . . . And this time it is about Jerry . . . I love him so terribly that I don't believe I can go on living if I don't get him. I don't have to tell You—You understand. Please don't let him stop loving me—ever . . . Thank You. Amen."

Three hours before this Kezia switched out the light in her room with the gold and green chintz draperies, snuggled down in her pillow. The night wind rustled the oaks, stole in with the fragrance of honeysuckle; the window was a framed oblong of silver from the moon; the clock downstairs tinkled the half hour. Kezia was very sleepy, very contented with herself.

The power she had over men was tremendous—simply tremendous. It was all quite easy, just as Lolly had said. It worked every time. You made your eyes soft and innocent, got your face very close to theirs, spoke low, and said "You" a great many times . . . It had worked with Walter DeGraffe, with Arthur, with Pete Matthews—Pete was almost engaged to that Pease girl, too—with Eric Olsen, with Jerry Purdue tonight.

Ellen didn't need to think she had that boy on a hook! . . . When he was getting out the ice cubes, he had turned his eyes on her—he had keen eyes, dark brown with a sort of droop to them—and said,

"I'm Not Checking Your Phone Calls, My Dear."

"Don't stand so close; I might splash that dress. Mind if I say you look charming tonight?" She hadn't moved from his side but answered in a half whisper, "You're sort of unusual yourself—you fascinate me." He had laughed and replied, "I'm not really sophisticated, you know!" . . . He had understood. It was enough for a start.

He'd be calling her up soon, she assured herself. Like the others. She might have a little fun with Jerry—show Ellen—then hand him back to her . . .

CHAPTER V

The telephone jangled constantly for Kezia. Young people came and went with chatter and laughter, the radio played at all hours and meals frequently were delayed, for Kezia was always hurrying from one engagement to another. The constant clamor began to pall on Fluvanna, and her usual serenity was now occasionally disturbed.

It was a little hard to become adjusted to the furore of excitement after the quiet winter. Fluvanna assured herself that it was good for her—good to have a gay young person in the house. Kezia must have this youthful time of pleasure. This springtime of her life was so fugitive; its memories threaded the pattern of life with shining strands for the years to come.

For the past week, Margery had been having illness in her family and had sent the boys over to stay with her each day. Michael and Will were a strenuous pair, aged three and five, who came at nine each morning, and departed with tears and grubby embraces at five when Will Platt came to take them home. She had been strangely languid each night, too tired to glance at a paper or a book.

She stood near the window after lunch, glancing over some mail she had received. The telephone rang. It was Margery.

"Mother, can you take the children out in the car this afternoon? Millie Jennings is here visiting, and I haven't seen her for ages. I haven't been out of the house since Baby took sick ten days ago." Her voice had a plaintive note.

Cross-Stitch Towels

Pattern 1302

You'll enjoy doing these—they go so fast! You'll enjoy owning them—they're so effective! The simple cross stitch dishes contrast so well with the dainty flowers. Any bride-to-be would be delighted with a set of these—they'd certainly make an effective Fair donation. Lose no time, for you'll want to make a number of sets. Pattern 1302 contains a transfer pattern of six motifs averaging 4½ by 8 inches; illustration of all stitches needed; color suggestions; material requirements.

Send 15 cents in stamps or coins (coins preferred) for this pattern to The Sewing Circle Needlecraft Dept., 82 Eighth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

Household Questions

To prevent that hard crust forming on left-over cooked cereal pour a cup of cold water over it before placing in the refrigerator.

• • •

To braise roasts, steaks or chops first brown the meat, then put in a tightly covered utensil with very little water either on the top of stove or in oven and continue cooking slowly until meat is tender.

• • •

When "buttered" crumbs are called for, the best way is to melt butter, add crumbs and mix well and then sprinkle over the top of food. If butter is merely "dotted" over the top it does not evenly mix with the crumbs.

• • •

To clean fireplace bricks, cover them with a paste made of powdered pumice and household ammonia. Let it dry for an hour, then scrub with warm soapy water.

• • •

A little salt added to pumpkin sauce will greatly improve the flavor.

OF COURSE, children should never drink coffee. And many grown-ups, too, find that the caffein in coffee disagrees with them. If you have headaches or indigestion or can't sleep soundly... try Postum. It contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened.

You may miss coffee at first, but after 30 days you'll love Postum for its own rich, satisfying flavor. Postum comes in two forms—Postum Cereal, the kind you boil, and Instant Postum, made instantly in the cup. Either way it is easy to make, delicious, economical, and may prove a real help. # SIMPLIFY THANKSGIVING

IT'S just an old American custom, this Thanksgiving ritual, but it's one to be proud of. So long may it endure! And don't let any modern dietitian talk you into substituting baked fish for stuffed turkey, or fruit souffles for pumpkin pies. Serve a one-hundred-percent Thanksgiving dinner, but select foods which can be used also for a later buffet supper.

For no matter how adequate the dinner, there's going to be a supper. You know that. You know that along late in the evening, memories of that tender, savory turkey and that mellow, spicy pumpkin pie are going to lead thankful folks toward the refrigerator—for just a bite more.

Ways and Means

If you have simplified your menu so that one cooking will serve both meals—the dinner and the buffet supper—then instead of being the harried hostess you can be your own guest for supper. You can linger by the flickering candlelight over good food and good talk, linking up memories of other happy Thanksgivings with these fleeting ones, and you can be truly thankful.

Let's get down to ways and means. There'll be turkey of course. Then order a turkey that is sufficiently large so that you will have two cups of diced cold turkey left over to make a delicious turkey and rice casserole as the main dish for your buffet supper.

There will be celery also to add to the turkey dressing. Reserve the celery hearts to use as one of the appetizers for the evening buffet.

There are many salads that can be tossed together with remnants of the Thanksgiving dinner, but perhaps you would like to make a gelatin salad a whole day before the holiday and put it in the refrigerator ready for Thanksgiving evening. A very delicious recipe for this sort of salad follows.

Preparedness Counts

Your tart shells for pumpkin tarts may be made a day in advance also. Then when you make your pumpkin filling for the dinner pie, make sufficient to fill the tart shells for the buffet dessert. The following recipes serve eight persons:

Celery Hearts
Watermelon Pickles
Turkey and Rice Casserole
Golden Harvest Salad
Buttered Finger Rolls
Jellied Pumpkin Tarts
Coffee, Cider or Hot Chocolate

Turkey and Rice Casserole: Put alternate layers of rice, turkey and ham in a casserole, starting and ending with rice. Use three cups of hot boiled rice, two cups of diced cold turkey and one-half cup of diced cold ham. Dust the layers lightly with salt and pepper. Pour over the contents of one 1-pound can of cream of mushroom soup, and cover with buttered crumbs. Heat until well browned in a hot oven. This makes liberal servings for eight.

Golden Harvest Salad: Soften one tablespoon of gelatin in four tablespoons of cold water. Dissolve with one-third cup of sugar in one and two-thirds cups of boiling water. Add one-fourth cup vinegar, three-fourths teaspoon salt and cool until it becomes as thick as honey. Then add the contents of one 11-ounce can of diced carrots, one-half cup diced cucumbers and two tablespoons diced green peppers. Turn into eight individual wet molds and chill. Serve on crisp lettuce hearts and garnish with mayonnaise. Or you may serve on the same plate with the turkey casserole.*

Adams vs. Jackson

In 1828 John Quincy Adams, running for President against Jackson, carried only the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland, all of them seaboard states. Jackson carried all the rest. In 1832 Clay carried only Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland and his own inland state of Kentucky.

Many Attend Auction Sale

A large crowd that filled the church parlors to capacity turned out for the Sewing Circle auction sale at the Free Mission church on Friday evening. The proceeds of the sale and lunch were $109.07. Henry Nohre was the winner of the quilt that was given away.

The Weather

The weather the past week has been of the rough and tumble variety. It all started last Friday with a cold wind and a heavy dust storm.

Saturday was fair. Sunday and Monday were blustery days, Tuesday morning a warm rain fell here turning into sleet and ice as it cooled off during the day. A little new snow covered this on Wednesday and made a skating rink out of all sidewalks streets and roads.

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN

The Safety Man

Every day the papers write of hunting accidents. "Hunter accidently shot." "Rifle or shot gun explodes when hunter drops gun." And so on.

A loaded gun should not be taken into a house, hunting shack, or car. Many times some other person tries out the sight pulls the trigger, and a fatality is the result. Pulling a loaded gun through a fence by taking hold of the barrel is a dangerous stunt.

Do not clean a gun until yon have made a positive inspection of chamber and barrel. Never point a gun at anybody. Its a foolish and senseless action.

The supposedly unloaded gun is the gun that has killed many people. If you cannot handle a gun, stay away from it.

Everyone is welcome-in fact we urge you to come and take part. If you are unable to come to this meeting, plan to attend the next one two weeks from Wednesday.

S'More Deer Stories

Most of the deer hunters from Holt and vicinity have checked in for this season and some reported poor hunting because of having no snow.

The Editor and son Milton and hunting party have brought in three deer during the season.

The first five days of the season, H. O. Hanson and son Milton, Harry Engen, Hilmer Erickson, Willie Sorum, Rev. T. C. L. Hanson, and Harlan Gunheim all of Holt, and Carl Arness of Fork hunted near Itasca State Park. It was while the Editor of this paper was taking an early morning nap on a log out in the woods there that the report got out around Bagley that one of the men from the Holt hunting party had been shot.

The Editor has been almost gone four times this year so the report did not scare him when he awakened.

The gang brought home two deer from this trip and one from Randen on Sunday.

Former Holt Resident Passes

Last Friday we received a letter from Mrs. Roy Kirkman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. A. Nelson of Virginia, stating the sad news that Mr. Nelson had passed away suddenly on Nov. 2. Mr. and Mrs Nelson and family lived at Holt for many years, owning the farm now owned by J. O. Johnson. They moved to Virginia about twelve years ago.

Knutsons Go West For Winter

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Knutson and sons Harlan and Raymond, left on Monday for a trip to the west coast and south for the winter. Mr. Knutson sold his farm recently to the state for the Mud Lake game refuge.

The Knutson's have worked hard out in the farm country there for the past thirty years without a good vacation and are entitled to a good trip.

Annual Meeting Held

A large number of the members of the Nazareth Lutheran congregation and Ladies Aid attended the annual meeting of both those organizations at the church last Thursday evening.

Walter Larson was reelected as president of the church council and Marvin Sandberg vice-president. Others re-elected to the board were: Hjalmer Peterson, treasurer; Gilbert Sanoden, secretary; Hans Fosholm, deacon Guy Anderson was named as trustee for three years. He took the place of his brother A. B. Anderson.

Four new families were taken in as members of the congregation during the meeting. They were Mr. and Mrs. Leo Horien and family, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Sorum and family, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Holst and family, and Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Larson and family.

The Ladies Aid elected new officers for the coming year as follows: Mrs. Harry Engen, President; Mrs. Alfred Larson, vice-president; Mrs. Henry Nohre, secretary and Mrs. J. P. Augustine, treasurer.

Both organizations are in fine financial condition according to reports of secretaries.

Card of Thanks

We wish to take this means of expressing our sincere thanks for the party given us at the Free Mission church on our 25th wedding anniversary.

Especially do we thank those who worked so hard to make it a success, those who were on the program, and all for the lovely silverware and purse of money.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Sorenson, and family.

Christmas Seal Sale Opens

E. O. Nybakken, Supt. will be local manager of the 1936 sale of Christmas Seals in Holt. The appointment marks the opening of active local work upon the 1936 sale.

"All of us have many ways in which to spend our time, as all of us have many ways in which to spend our money," said Mr. Nybakken in accepting the chairmanship. "In the same way that everyone who spends money for Christmas Seals shows his belief that this expenditure for better community health is worthy, I feel that time spent in the cause of the Christmas Seals is worthy.

"I am certain both that many hours will be given by willing workers to the Seal sale and that the Seals these workers will distribute in Holt will find more purchasers than in any recent year."

4-H Club News

The November meeting of the Holt 4-H was held at the Holt school house Friday evening.

Vivian Larson was re-elected president; Evelyn Larson was elected vice president; Beatrice Larson re-elected secretary and reporter and Angeline Augustine elected treasurer.

These officers assisted by Marian, Lloyd and Marlan were chosen to act on the program committee for 1937.

Mr. Karvonen, Chester and Eleanor Larson and Mrs. D. C. Myers were chosen as adult leaders.

Mr. Reierson the county agent was present and delivered an inspiring talk. Lloyd and Clifford Larson gave interesting reports on their trip to the Junior Livestock Show.

Enrollment cards were handed out to those who wish to join.

The leaders which we have chosen seem very enthusiastic about the year's work and the members will be indeed thankful for any service they offer them.

We especially appreciate the wonderful offorts of Mr. Karvonen in aiding us this year to "make the best better."

Nelson-Moberg

Miss Emma Nelson and George Moberg were quietly married at the Lutheran parsonage in Holt on Monday evening at 8 o'clock The single ring ceremony was performed by Rev. T. C. L. Hanson. Their attendants were Miss Olga Nelson, sister of the bride and Gerald Moberg, brother of the groom.

The bride wore a lovely gown of wine colored velvet and the bridesmaid a rust colored silk tunic dress.

Mrs. Moberg is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Knute Nelson and Mr. Moberg is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Hilmer Moberg.

The newlyweds will make their home on the Moberg farm in Mud Lake where the groom is engaged in farming.

Well At Creamery Completed

The big new well at the Farmer's Cooperative Creamery here which was dug this fall by Hilmer Erickson, local blacksmith, is now completed and was last week put in use for the creamery.

Mr. Erickson stated that they had to go down to a depth of 246 feet before they found good water this time. The old well which had been in use for over 23 years was only a shallow 83 foot drilled well.

The new well is on the west side of the creamery and is in direct connection with the boiler room and power line shaft for the pump. The well which is a six inch, could not be lowered more than a few feet at hard pumping of about 50 gallons of water per minute they stated.

SYNOPSIS

Kezia Marsh, pretty, selfish and twenty, arrives home in Corinth from school and is met by her older brother, Hugh. He drives her to the Marsh home where her widowed mother, Fluvanna, a warm-hearted, self-sacrificing and understanding soul, welcomes her. Kezias sister, Margery, plump and matronly with the care of three children, is at lunch with them. Hugh's wife, Dorrie, has pleaded a previous engagement. On the way back to his job at the steel plant founded by one of his forebears, Hugh passes Doc Hiller, a boyhood friend whom he no longer sees frequently because of Dorrie's antipathy. Fluvanna Marsh wakens the next morning from a dream about her late husband, Jim, whose unstable character she fears Kezia has inherited. Ellen Pendleton comes over. She is an artistically inclined girl who is a distant niece of Fluvanna's and a favorite of Hugh's. She happily tells Fluvanna she has become engaged to Jerry Purdue. Ellen fears that her father and mother, Gavin and Lizzie, will not approve the match. Hugh and Dorrie go out to the Freeland Farms to dance with their friends, Cun and Joan Whitney. Whitney, who has been out of work, announces that he has a new position. Cun and Dorrie dance together and then disappear for a while. Dancing with Joan, Hugh is amazed to find her in tears. Apparently she has some secret worry over her husband, Cun. When Ellen and Jerry speak about their engagement to Ellen's parents, Lizzie is disagreeable until Jerry sympathizes with her imagined ailments. The matter is left pending. Unexpectedly Hugh has to visit a neighboring city on business. Returning home to ask Dorrie to accompany him he finds her telephoning. In confusion she quickly hangs up without saying good-by. After hesitating about Hugh's invitation, she finally agrees to accompany him. They spend a delightful day and Hugh is happy. At a family party, Kezia encounters Jerry. Ellen is disturbed when Jerry is absorbed by Kezia. Kezia goes out of her way to charm Jerry.

CHAPTER V—Continued

"Of course, dear. Eric is polishing the car but I think he'll have it finished soon."

"Oh, he's working on it?" Margery hesitated. "Could they play around the yard if the car isn't available? . . . I hate to ask you—they were there so much last week . . ."

"Of course. Bring them on your way to Millie's."

Kezia, coming down the stairs, said, "Margery want the car? What's the matter with her own?"

"She wants to see Millie Jennings and has asked me to take the boys out."

"Do we have to have those little devils again today? The baby is better, isn't she? They were here yesterday and all last week. Margery imposes on you!"

"They can play around the yard if Eric isn't ready. It's not much to do for Margery. She's worn out, and it will be good for her to get away for a couple hours. And they're not little devils—just a couple of healthy normal boys."

"Other people are worn out too," muttered Kezia under her breath.

Fluvanna smiled. "You, my dear?"

"Last night I was trying to come in quietly so I wouldn't waken you and I stumbled over a scooter in the hall. Barked my shin—look at it!"

"Last night? Kezzie, whom did you go out with last night? I don't believe you mentioned it—and I didn't recognize the car."

Kezia's face became bland and innocent. "Didn't I tell you? A crowd of us went to Emmy Markham's. Bees Snyder is as funny as a clown! You should hear him take off Lem Potter and Mrs. Lem Potter! And we had a swell supper. Went to the kitchen about twelve-thirty and cooked bacon and eggs, ate watermelon. No mail for me? . . . I think I'll go up and write some letters. I owe everyone I know."

She was disappearing up the stairs when Fluvanna said: "Was Ellen Pendleton at Emmie's?"

"No," Kezia answered, carelessly.

Fluvanna thought she had heard Jerry's voice from the drive under her window when Kezia came in. She must have been mistaken. Perhaps it had been Bees Snyder. Certainly not Jerry if Ellen had not been there . . . She remembered that Kezia hadn't really told her who had called for her. Not that it mattered. It only illustrated the secrecy which was one of her traits, that fierce guarding of unimportant trifles, that resentment of being questioned or called to account—even by implication.

Kezia reminded her of her husband. Her thoughts flew away to him. He had hated questioning so. Yet he could be loquacious on occasion, expansive, humorous, wistful, flattering, a man of many moods. She remembered how well he had dressed. He wore a cutaway coat on Sunday, the silk hat and the winged collar which were the fashion of the time. His bearing had an alien elegance which spelled romance to her. Generous too. Once he gave a cripple the contents of his purse—then borrowed money from Fluvanna to pay for their dinner at the hotel. When he received change from a purchase, he always put it in his pocket without counting it.

That house on Lincoln street in which they went to housekeeping, five old-fashioned rooms and the bath downstairs . . . the big elm which drooped before the door . . . the enchantment, laughter, tears of early married life. Jim had loved horses and attended every race meet within a radius of 50 miles. Jovial sometimes when he came home—sometimes discontented. He also liked cards. Late for dinner, late for engagements; a card game had detained him.

The memories became a moving picture screen reproducing scenes in flashes, scenes impervious to the assault of time. Friends, parties, the birth of Hugh, financial pressure, disagreements and the sweet toll of reconciliation. Jim, gay, hopeful, magnetic; Jim, morose, silent. He always dominated the picture with that positive driving force of his, perverse, ill-considered, but a power, nevertheless. She thought sadly that it was human nature to love those persons best who had a streak of perversity in their make-up. Or perhaps one is only more aware of that love—they test it so.

Several times he had been forced to borrow from her father to meet various demands, but was never able to repay the loans.

After the death of her mother and his losses in the stock market, Jim's habit of drinking increased. He did not use soft words when he drank. Some inner demon spoke in cruel, vindictive phrases. When she saw him after one of those nights when he had come in with stumbling, uncertain steps, his handsome face puffy, his hand trembling so he could scarcely hold the coffee cup, she was amazed at the conflict of love and hate which struggled in her. He reminded her of bleary old Tom Gaveney who took away the rubbish . . . But it was really Jim, her husband, to whom she was bound for life. Their three children, Margery, Hugh and Kezia were at school and might come home any time. No one must know—no one at all. Draw the blinds. Send the maid to the laundry. Telephone the office that he wasn't well. Head up; smile at friends and strangers. The banner of pride must float bravely while the craft is sinking.

And then that day.

The freshly ironed shirts and children's garments lay on the bed. Put this pile in Hugh's room; sew the lace on Margery's dress; socks of varying sizes, colors must be sorted, mended; a stitch here, a button there . . .

She had never been able to put away freshly-laundered clothes since without a leaden feeling, for suddenly she looked up and saw Jim.

He was standing by the chiffonier, one elbow on it, watching her.

"Jim? You home? Have you had your lunch?"

He did not answer at once. His gaze was somber but not unkind. He sat down in a chair and motioned for her to take one.

A foreboding gripped her. She watched his hands, lean, restless, clutching the arm of the chair until they were white at the knuckles. An odd ring on his little finger—a ring which he had inherited from his father—was raised into prominence.

"I'm in a bad way, Fluvanna."

"Sick?"

He shook his head.

Her glance hardened. "Money again? I—Jim, you know——"

"Yes, I know what you're going to say. You've done a lot. Helped me out a dozen times. But this time—this time"—he struck the arm of the chair with his fist—"you must! Must, I say!"

She rose without a word, went over to the bed, gathered up some of the garments and put them in a drawer. She wouldn't . . . she wouldn't. Draining away everything she had. She had been too easy. She had to think of her children, their education, future——

"I must have $15,000."

"Fifteen thousand dollars!" The sum startled her. For what? . . . "I haven't it. You know I haven't."

His eyes swept the room, came back to her. "Sell something Put a mortgage on the house."

"I won't. Nothing can make me."

"Won't, eh?" His lips curled in a hateful smile. "You'd rather see your husband go to the penitentiary, I suppose."

The penitentiary? His words resounded like the echo of waves, and the blood seemed to slip quietly away from her body, leaving only flesh and nerves. The penitentiary!

"I don't believe you," she said faintly.

He did not reply. Then scarcely knowing what she was doing, she went into the adjoining room where Kezia slept. Kezia had left a legless doll on the floor. Mechanically she picked it up and put it into the closet.

Then Jim was in the doorway. He was holding a revolver idly in his hand. Horror froze in her. Was he going to kill himself—before her? . . . But he pointed it at her.

"Jim, you wouldn't. Don't—try to be funny," she gasped.

"I must have it before four o'clock."

She smelled the odor of whiskey. "Stop waving that revolver around! You know it's loaded."

"So it is."

She backed away from him, out into the hall. She wanted to call him a coward and a bully, but she was too terrified. There was something brooding and insane in his look.

"You say you won't?"

"I can't. How can you threaten me this way? What if the children should see you?"

"You could borrow it on your steel stock."

FLOYD GIBBONS' ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello Everybody

"The Needle That Slipped"

By FLOYD GIBBONS,

YOU never can tell an adventurer by what he looks like on the surface. Take Herb Berman of Brooklyn, N. Y., for instance. Herb went to Rutgers university and learned to be a pharmacist and a chemist. Today he's a traveling representative for a firm that manufactures tooth powder. Not very adventurous, you might say—but all that happened after he'd kissed Old Lady Adventure goodbye and told her to look around for another boy friend.

Maybe you wouldn't think it of Herb to look at him now, but the truth is that he's got a past. He ran away from home at the age of sixteen and went to work in a munitions plant that was turning out explosives for the Allied armies. And in 1918, when he was eighteen years old, he was fighting in Palestine, Egypt and Turkey with the British forces.

Today he's going to tell us a strange tale of an experience that happened to him on his trip overseas—the story of how a needle slipped, and how doggone lucky it was for Herb that it did.

Discomfort and Death Aboard.

Herb enlisted in the Canadian army, and they shipped him off in the captured German steamer, the Hundsen, with a convoy of 11 other ships. That trip was no pleasure jaunt. The quarters in the main hold were damp and crowded. There was the continual fear of being torpedoed by U-boats. To make matters worse, the ship ran into a storm off Newfoundland and almost sank. The hatches were battened down for three days.

Below decks, the quarters were a shamble, with close to a thousand seasick landlubbers making matters no better. And to make them even worse, the dreaded Spanish influenza broke out, and, coupled with the nausea of the seasickness, some of those poor devils were in a terrible plight.

Before long, the Grim Reaper himself began to stalk among the coughing, moaning, fever stricken men. Flu victims were dying at the rate of eight or nine a day. Herb says the havoc of those three storm tossed, fever ridden days will never be erased from his memory. But there's one other experience that he'd remember even longer than that if it were humanly possible. That's the episode of the slipping needle.

Took a Nap Among the Bodies.

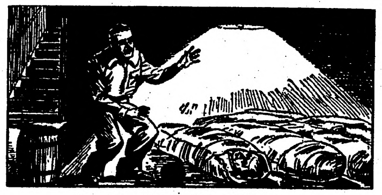
It was the last night of the storm, and Herb had been picked for an unpleasant detail—the irksome duty of standing watch over a dozen or so corpses of men who had died during the day. He slid down a ladder, dead tired and still weak from sea-sickness, into a cold, damp, tiny room, bare except for the bodies, wrapped in blankets and rolled up in the pieces of duck canvas that were to be their shrouds. He sat down on a box in the corner, but the moment he did, he began to doze off.



"God Have Mercy! He's Come to Life!"

For a while he tried to fight off the sleepiness that was all but overpowering him. Twice he woke up to find he had slipped off the box and was lying on the floor next to his dead buddies. Finally he gave up trying to stay awake. No one would be down for a couple hours, unless it was the sail-maker come to sew up the bodies. His body cold and clammy, and his head spinning, Herb reached for a blanket and wrapped it around himself.

The blanket gave little warmth. Herb pulled a canvas sheet from a pile in the corner and wrapped that around him too. Then he stretched out on the cold floor, and in another moment he was fast asleep.

"How long I slept," says Herb, "I couldn't tell you. But suddenly I awoke with a start as I felt a sharp, piercing pain in my right thigh. I tried to sit up, and suddenly I felt as if I had been put in a straight-jacket. My back wouldn't bend, and I could hardly move a muscle.

Cut Himself Out of the Shroud.

"It was pitch dark. I tried to jerk an arm loose and rub my eyes. Then suddenly, from right beside me I heard a piercing scream—heard a horror-stricken voice cry: 'God have mercy! He's come to life!' "

"Before I could utter a word, I heard a man's retreating footsteps bounding up the stairs. By that time I was thoroughly aroused from my sleep. I worked an arm loose, reached for my trench knife, and began cutting at whatever it was that bound me. The knife ripped through canvas from my knees to my waist. I managed to untangle myself and sit up."

By that time there was a clatter of feet and a babble of voices at the top of the stairs. A group of men headed by the sergeant of the guard, consternation written on their faces, descended slowly into the hold. By that time, too, the cause of all the screaming and hullabaloo had dawned on Herb.

Saved by a Jab With the Needle.

The man who had done the screaming must have been the sail-maker. He had probably come down while Herb slept, to sew up the dead soldiers in their shrouds. Herb, being wrapped up in canvas, must have looked pretty much like the corpses, and the sail-maker had gone right on sewing him up until a careless jab with the needle awakened Herb and interrupted the operations.

For the rest of that trip, Herb had to take a lot of kidding. The boys pointed him out as "the would-be stiff" and never gave him a chance to forget he was the guy who tried to desert by going over the side in a dead man's haberdashery. But underneath all the joking, Herb can see a serious side to that gruesome episode. "After many years," he says, "I still dread to contemplate what would have happened if the sail-maker had been more deft with the needle and I had first suffocated and then been consigned to the sharks. Just one more among the thousands of missing—men who went away and never came back."

Size of Some Skulls

The average man has about 1,450 cubic centimeters of brains and woman's capacity is 1,250 to 1,300. Daniel Webster's skull measured close to 2,000; Bismark's, 1,965; the poet La Fontaine's, 1,950; Beethoven's 1,750, and Kant, the philosopher, 1,740. With one exception, these were the biggest heads ever measured and all fell short of the skull of an Aleut, who is thought to have lived several hundred years ago. The exception was the skull of the Russian writer Turgeniev, which had a capacity of 2,030 cubic centimeters, for No. 1 ranking.

Use of Sugar Cane

Sugar cane, a coarse grass, is believed to be a native of Asia or the East Indies. It was unknown in Europe until the Middle Ages, when the Arabs introduced it into Sicily and Spain. Sugar cane was taken to Brazil about 1500, to Mexico a few years later, and is now cultivated in most warm countries. Two kinds of syrup are made from sugar cane. The first is the golden syrup left over from the manufacture of sugar. The second, such as a Mississippi plant will make, is merely the juice of the sugar cane boiled down, and is known as molasses.

How Many Pennies Your Child's Life?

Don't Try to "Save" on Home Remedies—Ask Your Doctor

There is one point, on which practically all doctors agree. That is: Don't give your child unknown remedies without asking your doctor first.

All mothers know this. But sometimes the instinct to save a few pennies by buying "something just as good" overcomes caution.

When it comes to the widely used children's remedy — "milk of magnesia" — many doctors for over half a century have said "PHILLIPS." For Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is the standard of the world. Safe for children.

Keep this in mind, and say "PHILLIPS' MILK OF MAGNESIA" when you buy. Comes now, also in tablet form. Get the form you prefer. But see that what you get is labeled "Genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia." 25¢ for a big box of the tablets at drug stores.

ALSO IN TABLET FORM: Each tiny tablet is the equivalent of a teaspoonful of genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

FOR the moon and the stars that shine,
For the stout heart that beats with mine,
For my home and its daily cares,
For dreams that grow along the years,
For those friends whom I hold most dear,
For my senses, e'er keen and clear,
For the seasons which come and go,
For the books that I've learned to know,
For music and its lovely way,
For the sun pouring out gold all day,
For the hills of my native land,
And the clasp of my children's hand,
For the life that binds me to these
Let me be thankful, dear God—please!

Stuffing for the Thanksgiving Bird

GOOD stuffing for Thanksgiving bird is of prime importance to the success of the yearly feast. It must, first of all, be well selected, a delicately flavored stuffing for the roast chicken and turkey, a more strongly flavored one for the roast goose or duck, writes Helen Robertson in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Second, it must be perfectly seasoned. Not too strongly to overwhelm the deliciousness of the bird, nor yet so bland in taste as to be uninteresting. Third, it must be of the proper consistency, not too moist, nor yet too dry. And fourth, there must be enough.

Bread being the usual foundation of the dressing, let us talk of it first. All kinds of breads may be used in the dressing providing the white bread predominates. Cold biscuits, pieces of corn bread, slices of toast, slices of whole wheat and of rye may all be used. Use part crust too, as well as the crumb. The bread should be dry and if part or all is lightly toasted, so much the better. And bread cut into small cubes makes better dressing than when crumbed.

Bread Cut Into Small Cubes Makes Better Dressing.

For the very large turkey, upward of eighteen or nineteen pounds, two and one-half to three pounds of bread will be needed for the dressing, while for the smaller bird of around ten pounds, one and three-fourths to two pounds of bread may be used. And for the smaller bird, one pound and under should be sufficient.

Celery, oysters, mushrooms, chestnuts, the other ingredients you will use are of course dependent upon your own personal tastes and upon the bird you are serving. Here is a basic recipe for dressing for the twelve to fifteen-pound bird.

Bread Dressing.

|---|---|
| 3 qts. stale bread cubes | Sage to taste |
| 2 tbsp. salt | 1 cup melted butter |
| 1 tsp. pepper | 2 cups chopped celery |
| 1 tbsp. chopped parsley | Cooked giblets |

Prepare bread, sprinkle with seasonings. Pour over them melted butter and enough boiling water or stock from cooking giblets and neck to moisten. In adding butter and stock, toss the ingredients together lightly with a fork. Never press them together.

If you like onion in dressing, saute one or two slices in a portion of the butter before adding it to the dressing.

For oyster dressing omit giblets, add one pint of oysters cut in half and the oyster liquor, well strained.

To make mushroom dressing saute one-half pound mushrooms, sliced, in a portion of the butter and mix with bread crumbs. In using the mushrooms celery may be omitted or a smaller amount used.

Chestnut dressing is usually liked. To make it, prepare one-half pound chestnuts, chopping them rather fine. Mix with bread.

Sausage dressing is another favorite. One-half pound is sufficient for this amount. Cook it over a low fire fifteen minutes before adding to the dressing.

For the roast duck or goose you will find this rice and prune stuffing tasty:

Brown three tablespoons of finely minced onion in two tablespoons butter. Add one cup well washed, drained rice. Let simmer until rice is slightly browned. Then add four cups soup stock or water in which bouillon cubes have been dissolved, eight or nine cooked prunes, pitted, and one teaspoon salt. Cook over a very low fire or over hot water until rice is tender. Season well.

URGED THANKSGIVING

TRADITION has it that a woman was responsible for establishing the modern Thanksgiving day on the last Thursday of November. According to that story, President Lincoln issued his proclamation in answer to urgent pleas from Sarah J. Hale, editor of Godey's Lady's Book.

"That Yankee Holiday"

President Andrew Jackson refused to give Thanksgiving day the customary presidential sanction because he would have nothing to do with "that Yankee holiday."

MINNESOTA NEWS

Elbow Lake—Harold Barker, recently named speaker of the Minnesota House of Representatives, is publisher of the Grand County Herald here.

St. Paul—The properly barbered gentleman of 1937 will wear his hair "long", relatively speaking, Minnesota Master Barbers said at the opening of their annual convention in the Hotel Lowry.

Minneapolis—Retail trade at departmen stores in Minneapolis and other northwest cities increased 17 per cent last month over October, 1935, while the gain for the first 10 months of 1936 was 10 per cent.

Minneapolis—Discussion of forest fire problems and methods of improving fire protection were the principal topics at the meeting of the United States Indian Service superintendents and foresters of the lake states region.

Comfrey—Authorities are seeking the person who fired the .32 caliber bullet which seriously wounded Alex Nelson, 49 years old, marshal here, as he was walking through the city park. Nelson was taken to a hospital in Springfield.

Duluth—Funeral services for Mrs. A. B. Kaplin, 32 years old, fatally injured in an automobile accident near Hinckley, were conducted. Rabbi Harvey Wessel of Duluth officiated. Her husband was the former state commander of the American Legion.

Ely—Razing work in the demolition of the Ely community center, a public land mark here for almost a half century, has begun under a WPA project to make way for the new community building to be constructed on the site under a government WPA grant.

Collegeville—Robert M. Devitt, a graduate of St. John's University here in 1935 and now studying for his master's degree at the University of North Dakota, has been recommended as a candidate for a Rhodes scholarship. He will appear before the Minnesota Rhodes scholarship committee.

St. Paul—Probably the most expensive initiation paddle extant is owned by Robert Raustadt, pledge of the Phil Delta fraternity at Hamline University. It cost 15 cents and one right forefinger. In the process of cutting wood for the paddle on a circular power saw, Otto Lange, cut the forefinger off his right hand.

Robbinsdale—A mass immunization of school children was Robbinsdale's answer to the danger of a diphtheria epidemic. Parents, teachers and pupils co-operated in the program which made it possible for six local doctors, headed by Dr. Edward A. Colp, Robbinsdale health officer, to immunize the children in a few days.

Hutchinson—Plans have been completed by the Gopher campfire club to purchase the cock of 44 wild geese of all varieties and the five deer at the Anderson Wild Life refuge and keep them intact on a new reserve on the north bank of the Crow river in this city. The collection of geese is the most complete of its kind in the United States, officials declared.

Minneapolis—Minnesota's football schedule for 1937 is complete. The addition of the opening game, September 25, with North Dakota State rounds out the program. The Bison clash was announced by Frank McCormick, Gopher athletic director. The schedule also includes games with Nebraska, Indiana, Michigan, Notre Dame, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Northwestern.

So. St. Paul—At the conclusion of the best Minnesota Junior Livestock show in history here, prize exhibits brought record prices. Leona Padelford, 4-H club girl of Austin, raised the grand champion beef, for which Swift & Co. paid a record price of $1.45 a pound, a total of $1,471.75. Robert McCarney of Litchfeld, sold his pen of prize-winning turkeys for $2 a pound. Sales of all animals exhibited amounted to $55,000 for the 4-H club members who competed.

St. Paul—The peaceful life of Minnesota deer was disrupted when an army of hunters invaded their haunts for the opening of the annual deer season, which will continue to November 25 in sixteen counties and parts of four others. Counties fully open are Cook, Lake, St. Louis, Carlton, Pine, Kanabec, Koochiching, Itasca, Aitkin, Crow Wing, Cass, Hubbard, Clearwater, Beltrami, Lake of the Woods and Roseau. The season also will be open in that part of Kittson and Marshall counties east of the old Pembina trail, running from the north boundary of Kittson county to the south boundary of Marshall county; all of that part of Becker county east of the Soo railroad line and all of Mille Lacs county north of the Great Northern railroad tracks running through Milaca, Foreston and Beck.

Princeton — Gridiron warfare in Minnesota high school football circles drew to a close with several elevens still retaining records showing no defeats or ties. Princeton led a list of undefeated untied elevens which included Deer River, Warroad, Cloquet, Moorhead, Minneapolis Miller Vocational, Farmington, West Concord, and St. Augustine, Austin. In addition to completing tough schedules undefeated and untied, Farmington and St. Augustine were able to hold their opponents scoreless.

Lovely and Inexpensive

AMONG other things to be thankful for in this land of peace and plenty, think how pleasant it is to be able to procure such lovely patterns so conveniently and so inexpensively. No longer is style the perquisite of wealth alone; every woman can look and be at her best in any company, thanks to Sewing Circle patterns.

Pattern 1981, a youthful lounging or sleeping pajama, features a nobby, cutaway peplum and comfortably cut trousers. There is an easy yoke, a cleverly cut collar, and a choice of long or short sleeves. A grand Christmas present for an intimate friend as well as a perfect addition to your own wardrobe, why not make them twice in alternate materials? The sizes range, 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 (34 bust) requires 5 yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1852 fashions into an adorable little frock which will make small eyes dance and sparkle. Just eight pieces to the pattern, including the band and facings, you can run it up in a jiffy and have a perfect gift for your baby daughter or favorite niece. As simple as can be, it is nevertheless pert and engaging, truly a prize. Send for it in size 2, 4, 6, or 8 years. Material selection—dimity or swiss or voile or crepe or gingham. Size 4 requires just 2 1-8 yds. of 35 or 39 inch.

Pattern 1970 is a comely and graceful morning or daytime frock for matron sizes, the sort that goes on in a hurry and wears well without a lot of fuss and bother. The jabot is softly feminine and the panelled skirt is cut along lines every larger woman appreciates. The collar and cuffs are in contrast, if you wish, and the selection of materials is practically unlimited. This lovely pattern is available in all of the following sizes—36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50, and 52. Size 40 requires 4 3-8 yards of 35 or 39 inch fabric plus 3-4 yd. contrast.

Send for the Barbara Bell Fall Pattern Book containing 100 well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send fifteen cents in coins for your copy.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 367 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Better Breakfasts

IF you like to travel, but your family likes for you to stay at home, take a world cruise in your menu-making. Your market basket will become your traveling bag to hold interesting souvenirs. Incidentally, the library yields fascinating information about the foods of various countries.

The following breakfast will take you to Florida for grapefruit, out on Kansas fields for your wheat cereal, to Hawaii for pineapple, to Illinois, perhaps for pork sausages, and oh, any number of places to search for the most fragrant coffee. And you will bring back from your book-travels, lots of interesting little stories to tell—human interest yarns about raising good little porkers, how pineapples are "put to bed," and how an East Indian trader of long ago brought "magic beans" for English coffee cups.

Grapefruit
Cream of Wheat
Pineapple Bran Pancakes with Link Sausages
Coffee

Pineapple Bran Pancakes with Link Sausages: Add one-half cup bran to one and one-half cups sifted flour, one-half teaspoon salt and three teaspoons baking powder. Beat one egg, add one and one-fourth cups milk, or diluted evaporated milk, stir in the dry ingredients, and let stand for five minutes. Add the contents of an 8-ounce can of drained crushed pineapple and one tablespoon of melted butter. Bake on a hot skillet and serve with butter, maple syrup and crisp sausages.

Muffins With a Past

WHAT would you give for some real old-fashioned corn muffins such as your grandmother used to make—crisp and golden-brown without; light, fluffy and golden-yellow within? They came to the table, you remember, tucked under a napkin so that not a breath of goodness could escape until they were quickly split, buttered and ready to be devoured with home-made peach marmalade or spiced gooseberries.

Cost Only Fifteen Cents

Well, you need give only fifteen cents for eighteen of these golden treasures, that melt in your mouth and linger in your memory. For here is the old recipe with canned corn substituted for the fresh, because they had loads of time, but less canned foods in those days. The cost is counted for you to the very penny.

| | |
|---|---|
| One-half of an 11-ounce can of corn | .05 |
| One egg yolk | .05 |
| One-fourth cup of milk | .01 |
| Three-fourths cup of flourOne and one-half teaspoons of baking powderThree-eighths teaspoon salt | .02 |
| One and one-half tablespoons melted butterOne egg white | .02 |
| Total | .15 |

Add the well-beaten egg yolk to the corn; add milk and then add the sifted dry ingredients. Add melted butter and fold in the stiffly-beaten egg white. Bake in small muffin pans, in a moderate oven, 375 degrees, for twenty to twenty-five minutes. This makes about eighteen small muffins.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Engen entertained the following relatives on Thanksgiving Day: Mr. and Mrs. Sam Brown of Mayville, N. D., Mr. and Mrs. Jens Offerdahl of Middle River and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Maijala and children.

Sylvia Sandberg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Sandberg, had the misfortune of falling on the ice on the sidewalk on main street in such a way that her front permanent tooth was knocked out.

Only 17 shopping days until Christmas. Plan now to do your Christmas shopping in Holt, as by doing so you are being square with yourself. The home town merchant repays you by helping support your school, your church, your village, your telephone system, etc. etc. etc.

Ho, hum. Who went to sleep on the skating rink job?

A large crowd attended the 10 o'clock Thanksgiving services in the Lutheran church

CCC Enrollment In January

Enrollment into the Civilian Conservation Corps will again take place in January, 1937, from Marshall County according to information received by Paul Steen, County Welfare Worker. Boys between the ages of 17 and 28 are eligible for enrollment if they come from families that are in need. Whether or not the family is in need will be determined by approved standards of relief giving. Boys who have been in CCC camps before can reenroll if they have been out of the organization for more than a year and have four months previous service with an honorable discharge.

A splendid opportunity is offered to the young men going into the camps for advancement because the Federal authorities have announced that they will select 1000 boys from the CCC under Civil Service examinations to serve as camp technicians at $85.00 per month.

All boys interested are advised to get in touch immediately with the Welfare Worker and file their preliminery application. Applicants whose registration for CCC at the Welfare Office is more than a month old are requested to renew application at the offiice.

Safetygrams by Fred W. Braun, The Safety Man

The skidding season is here, so watch your step. When driving an automobile on slippery roads, no matter how good your brakes are, don't depend on them entirely. You should have your car under control at all times and adjust your driving to the prevailing conditions. Careful drivers seldom skid.

As a pedestrian, don't depend too much on the ability of the driver to stop or slow down, especially at arterials and regulated intersections. Many a pedestrian has been seriously injured because he placed too much confidence in the ability of a driver to stop his car on a slippery road

Play safe and you will be safe.

Six Cylinder Sentences

By DR. JOHN W. HOLLAND

Remember that all great people have little defects; including yourself.

When your enemy smites you on the other cheek, remember that there are no further instructions.

It is better to be cheated now and then by rascals than to believe that all men are crooks.

I believe in being broad, but the person who can't say, "NO," and mean it, is in training to become a nobody.

They who think that trifles do not count in life have never examined the powerful kick there is in a little "IF."

© Western Newspaper Union.

At a recent conference held at Detroit Lakes, the directors of this and several other associations discussed the workings of their system through which a practical plan is worked out jointly by the association and each member-borrower so that he can pay off the loan, either on small regular installments or out of returns from some major project, such as marketing a carload of livestock, a quantity of grain, or a wool clip. Most of the small regular payments are expected to come from monthly or semi-monthly cream checks.

The board decided that it will make a special effort to reach farmers who are not now conveniently near its central office at Thief River Falls so that its varied services may be brought to a greater number of farmers of this county. The purchase of a deck of lambs for fattening, feed to finish off a flock of turkeys, the raising of potatoes for seed or commercial sale, are among the kinds of farm operations financed. Funds may be obtained for any of the many everyday enterprise of the general farmer or livestock producer, and even for making repairs and improvements and refinancing farm debts.
